ROUND MOUNTAIN LAKE.

"Nesmuck," a quaint writer of some note twenty-five years ago,—Author of "Woodcraft" a work of much merit, and based on practical experiences in the forest, dwelt at some length in one article on "The art of sitting on a log."

No man of experience could differ with his theories and advice given, for on reflection we note the fact that in the wilderness it is the man who is quite alone that sees the many interesting and surprising things of the wild animals whose eyes, ears and nose are constantly on guard for the safety of their owner. While the human voice is the truest warning to wild creatures, and they who carelessly stroll along the pathless forest, snapping the dry twigs, rustling the dead leaves and the while keeping up a rambling conversation are quite unaware of the numberless denizens of their own home who quietly step aside unseen and allow the human enemy to pass by in ignorance of the presence of wild life. So it is, the lone fisherman, studious and watchful, catches the fish that have been overlooked, and the skillful still hunter sees many birds at their daily search for food and the construction of their nests, and is a party to many surprises.

This year I had a new experience at Round Mt. Lake where I have previously spent many happy vacations. Brook trout in abundance we had as always before, red-fleshed and delicious on the table as ever, and caught the grand three pounders at Blanchard's Pond over the ridge, so modestly displayed in this illustration.

In addition to this entertainment we saw game. Deer and birds have become too numerous to excite remark, and one day I strolled on the side of a mountain along a hardwood ridge to enjoy

ARLINGTON TO SAVE MONEY.

The Town of Arlington, through its Board of Selectmen, has just closed a twenty year contract with the Edison Electric Illuminating Company, which insures a reliable and economical lighting service for the streets and municipal buildings. The long term contract on the Electric Lighting Company's schedule of rates secures a reduction of 20 per cent. from the rates on a one year contract. This is a saving that cannot be wisely overlooked.

The Town of Winchester has just decided to abandon the old fashioned moon-light schedule for burning its street lamps, and will burn the lights on the Edison Company's service until midnight every night. This involves no new contract and only a slight additional expense.

QUICK WORK.

Last week Wednesday afternoon during the storm a private pole supporting telephone and electric light wires for several houses was blown down at Hillcrest. The next morning the electric light officials were notified and by noon they had a new pole up and the wires straightened out. In the forenoon of the next day, the telephones were in working order. This was pretty quick work and goes to show that these companies look out for the interest of patrons.

PRIZE ESSAY CONTEST.

Considerable interest is reported in the Prize Essay Contest which has been inaugurated by the Edison Electric Illuminating Company, but they expect to be able to hear from many other pupils before the contest closes; and in order that everyone may have ample opportunity, it has been decided to extend the date of closing to July 15th. This is such a good opportunity to secure vacation money, it is hoped that all will avail themselves of this privilege.

NEW BOOKS.

The public library bulletin of new books can be found on the second page. It contains many interesting books and the list should be read.

WHAT CONSTITUTES A GOOD EDUCATION?

It will at once be seen that a difficulty arises from the very form of the question and topic. Are we to inquire what—in a general way, is a good education for every one, man and woman, in all the walks and work of life? Can we decide what is a good education for a locomotive engineer, for a banker, a scientist, for a man or woman, in any of the learned professions? For a farm-hand, and for him who owns, and manages a farm, for a sea-captain, the captain of a steamer like McVey of the Larchmont, for a mason, a carpenter, a blacksmith, a tailor and a merchant. The answer for all these workers, might easily be this: Each one must have an intelligent understanding of all the facts and principles which rule in, and are vital to, his business. This would be something of an education. But would it constitute a "good education?" A lawyer in New York by the name of Dill, who for one case in complicated legal and social litigation—if we can use such phrase—between Manager Frick and Andrew Carnegie—received for his work one million dollars—had a profound knowledge of corporation law. He had studied, and weighed and learned the obscure reaches of the subject, and had a good education in them. But he decided that the possession of money was not all there is in life, and turned his mind to the study of nature, of literature, of history, and government. After a time, we might truly say, that he was intelligent and at home in all these educational pursuits. But when would he secure a good education in these subjects—an education which needed no more drill, no more thought, effort and sacrifice? It is quite a matter to decide when he gains a good education—Hon. Thomas B. Reed of Maine, a skillful and well equipped statesman, and excelled as an exact and nice parliamentary lawyer; but he spent some of his leisure time, in a close and discriminating study of the poetry of Horace, and of course, in the Latin text. Every hour of study in the works of this charming author, would increase Mr. Reed's intelligence, refine his taste, ennoble his sentiments, and add to the completeness of his education, perhaps give him some additional and valuable insight into human nature, and so make him more keen in his power to legislate and govern. At what point of his career could we say such a man had a good education? You can see that he might have done well in his public work, if he had not spent time in the effort to see and enjoy the charms of literary style, and the richness of thought and life and humanity, which make poetry itself an education. At this point of his life, his education might have been pronounced—good, but not "good," in the sense of being complete. Indeed, when is any education—good—in the sense of being complete. We must then go back to the inquiry—probably implied in the wording of our subject—what is a good practical, serviceable education, for every citizen, man and woman. Every one I suppose, understands, that the radical meaning of the word, education is to lead out and train, not the mind, as one complicated and mystic thing, but all the faculties and forces, and intuitions and powers of the mind or soul. "The intellect, sensibility and will." But in the intellect, are reason, judgment, perception, and the almost infinite phases of thought, and the wide range of understanding. In the sensibility, are all our emotions, love, reverence, respect, sympathy, desire, all of our sense of obligation, and duty to parents, and kindred and much more. The will, is the engine of action, more or less powerful in different persons, and upon which, much of the way our life and action depends. And the will must be directed and trained and controlled, a work of exquisite and solemn importance.

Here I wish to quote a passage from Daniel Webster, spoken in a convention in our Commonwealth called to discuss the division of the State, for the election of senators according to population, to present to you some comprehensive idea of the essential meaning and scope of a true education. He said—"By general instruction, we seek, as far as possible to purify the whole moral atmosphere, to keep good sentiments uppermost, and to turn the strong current of feeling and opinion, as well as the censures of the law, and the denunciations of religion, against immorality and crime. We hope for a security, beyond the law, and above the law, in the prevalence of enlightened and well principled moral sentiment. We hope to continue and prolong the time when, in the villages and farm-houses of New England, there may be undisturbed sleep, within unbarred doors. And knowing that our government rests directly on the public will, that we may preserve it, we endeavor to give a safe and proper direction to that public will. We do not indeed, expect all men to be philosophers or statesmen; but we confidently trust, and our expectations of the duration of our system of government rests on that trust, that by the diffusion of general knowledge, and good and virtuous sentiments, the political fabric may be secure as well against open violence and overthrow, as against the slow but sure undermining of licentiousness."

In these words of the profound and able statesman we see clearly what education is absolutely necessary for the preservation of free government of our rich and fortunate Republic. A suitable and special education of mind and heart is indispensable to the security and honor of our government.

Here, several things need to be considered. Some have quick minds, and some have dull minds. Some ready minds because of sloth or love of pleasure, will not study. And some bright minds often have no means for a complete education. Now we contend that a dull mind has a good education when he trains and disciplines every power he possesses. He may have a herculean resolution, and make the most of his opportunities, and work and strain every power, so that he becomes very successful in life's work. Such a man has a worthy education of his powers, but the sum of his abilities, is not equal to the abilities of those who are keen and quick in mind, and make the most of it. Still in life it is not seldom that ordinary men, in native equipment will surpass some who have much the advantage in the start. The dull one in perception and intellectual talent may have more tact, a finer address, more common sense, and push, than another of weightier make-up, and so exceed the latter in success. And so you must conclude that the dull one had as good an education as the smart one in the general averaging up of triumphs.

Again, a keen and able mind, may have a kind of gluttonous appetite for learning, he may be ever learning and never able to come to practical and useful service. Education swallows all the man there is in him, and he may be a literary sop, soaked in the sea of elegant and mystic intelligence, proud of being so much, in nothing. And so his education cannot be pronounced, "good." A distinguished writer avers, that "literature sometimes disgusts by appearing to hang loosely on the character, like something foreign or extraneous, not a part, but an ill adjusted appendage. And so men see that learning may exist, without mental superiority, without vigor, without good taste, and without utility." The mere matter of encephalic education, does not ensure success and the trained equipment for life is far from "good," and cannot serve, successfully meeting the work which belongs to the profession which one enters, or the work one takes up. A young man whose abilities to master all his studies, made him the first scholar in a school of one hundred pupils. But when he undertook the work of teaching a school, himself he failed utterly and ignominiously, because his knowledge of human nature was very slight indeed. On the other hand, a young woman presented herself for the position of a teacher, who was herself somewhat defective in the extent of the required knowledge. But she was allowed to take the position in school, and proved to be one of the best in discipline, in training her pupils, and was a conspicuous success. All this makes the fact plain that a "good" education, is something more than proficiency in mere book learning. The valedictorian in a class of one hundred graduates in Yale college, fifty years ago, became an express messenger between New Haven and New York. His education must have been wide and deep and accurate. But he probably found himself lame in common-sense, or flat and slim in his general brush and touch with common—but sensible and powerful—men, who know something of the world, and what there is in it.

It is a significant fact that able newspaper writers, without enthusiasm for the eminence of scholars in college, coldly say, when the men and women, come forth from their struggles in these higher schools of learning that the public wait to see what the students are able to do in the world. The people don't care so much about the successes in college, the cold and sifting question is, how well does the school education fit each one to succeed in the severe and varied tasks of life. Fond parents and friends may extol the talents and training of those they love, and they can be excused for it. But the competitions and conflicts of stern and remorseless life, must be the test of the real and thorough education, which can be pronounced "good." A young man stood among the first in his college class, and later, first in his medical class, and told me, that just before finishing his studies in medicine, his proud prospects which loomed up before his fancy, falsely assured him that people who needed a physician in their place or town, not one, but several would come to him, and vie with each other to secure him for their service. What was his chagrin and surprise, when he had no one to seek him out and give him practice and honor, but after painful search, he himself, found a doctor upon Martha's Vineyard, who wished to sell his practice and good will, and retire to an easier life. The young physician took the field and soon found that more patients wanted the old doctor than wanted the new one.

TOWN MEETING.

New By-Laws Adopted, Committees Appointed and Other Business.

The special town meeting held Monday evening was thinly attended, but a few over fifty voters being present. This was due to the fact that so many are away on vacations, and also because of the heat, although the hall was very comfortable.

Charles N. Harris, Esq., was elected moderator without opposition.

On motion of Arthur H. Russell, Esq., the rules regulating the proceedings of the last annual meeting were adopted for this meeting.

CHEAPER GAS.

Mr. John H. Carter moved that a committee of three be appointed to investigate the price of illuminating gas in Winchester. He said that the rate in Boston was 80 cents, while in Winchester it was $1.65—more than double. He believed that the price should be $1. then the use of gas for heating and cooking purposes would become more general, as the people could then afford to use it.

Committee—John Abbott, J. H. Carter and C. A. Lane.

GRADE CROSSING.

In reply to Mr. W. L. Tuck, Town Counsel Joslin said the elimination of the grade crossing was progressing as rapidly as could be expected, and that it could not be pushed any more rapidly. It was a big question involving the expenditure of a large sum of money, that there were many things to be considered, and many interests involved. Mr. George Adams Woods, as agent for the selectmen, is working among the property owners in trying to arrive at a basis of what their claims for damages would be. Mr. Woods would shortly make a final report when the commission would be called together. There is no neglect of the matter.

Mr. Tuck in reply said that one member of the commission had told him that the matter was being held up by the town. Ascertaining what the damages will be, will amount to nothing. His experience had convinced him that these will have to be settled later by the commission or the courts. He believed that the question was being held up until after the New York & New Haven and Boston & Maine merger had been consummated and that nothing would be done until Pres. Mellen was in control.

SALARY OF INSPECTOR OF ANIMALS.

On motion of Auditor W. H. Herrick the sum of $16.67 was voted for salary of the inspector of animals. The reason for this motion was that the salary of this office should date from March first, the same as other town officers.

INSPECTOR OF PLUMBING.

Dr. C. J. Allen, secretary of the Board of Health, asked for $83.34 for salary of inspector of plumbing in addition to the $250 voted at the last annual meeting. Mr. Allen said that the Board had secured a good man in conjunction with Arlington and Belmont, but that this man did not care to give more than four days a week to Winchester for $250. By making the sum $300, he would devote six days a week.

Mr. J. A. Laraway wanted to know how much time the inspector would give to Winchester. He did not think it just to the plumbers that they should be compelled to wait on the steps of the Town Hall to catch the inspector during the few minutes that he was likely to be here, or else take chances of having their work delayed to the inconvenience of those having work done and the financial loss of the plumbers.

Mr. J. H. Holland opposed granting the additional money, and entered a protest of the legality of the meeting because a warrant had not been left at his house. Mr. H. F. Johnson also spoke against the motion.

Mr. Allen's motion was then carried.

BUILDING AND PLUMBING LAWS.

On motion of Arthur H. Russell, Esq., it was voted to appoint a committee of five to consider and report upon the question of the adoption of building laws by the town, and of changes in and additions to the existing plumbing laws, and to submit its recommendations to some future town meeting.

The moderator appointed Messrs. M. B. May, Robert Coit, C. J. Allen, James Hinds and D. P. Blaikie.

ELECTRIC LIGHTING.

Mr. Arthur W. Hale offered a motion that a committee of five be appointed to investigate the question of entering into a long term contract with the Edison Electric Illuminating Company for furnishing electric light to the town, said committee to make a report (in print) of its findings and recommendations at the next annual town meeting.

Mr. Hale said the question of considering such a contract was of considerable importance to the town, as it may result in the saving of much money to the town. A contract if made could be terminated on 60 days' notice if the town desired to establish a municipal plant, and in addition the town would receive the benefits of all reductions that might occur during the life of the contract. A committee of Arlington citizens had unanimously agreed to urged that town to make a 20 years' contract with the Edison Company which would effect a saving to that town in 20 years of $66,000. Based on what Winchester is now expending, the saving for the same time would be about $33,000. Mr. Hale hoped the matter would be thoroughly looked into.

Mr. F. E. Rowe moved to insert in the motion, "or any other illuminating company." The Moderator ruled the amendment out of order. Later, however, it was incorporated in the original motion under the article relating to reports of selectmen and other town officers and committees.

Mr. W. L. Tuck hoped the time would never come in these days of public ownership that the town would enter into a contract with the Edison Co., even if there was a saving of money. He was in favor of a municipal plant, and said that the town was being hypnotized by Mr. Burdette, who was a pretty slick man.

Mr. Hale's motion was carried, and the Moderator appointed the following committee: Messrs. A. W. Hale, W. D. Richards, H. D. Nash, C. E. Barrett and J. L. Aver.

MERRY SPORTSMEN.

Tuesday evening the members of the Middlesex Sportsman's Association met in good numbers at the Town Hall for their annual summer entertainment. Sportsmen from Cambridge, Arlington, Belmont, Lexington and this town were present and enjoyed themselves only as true nature lovers can. The fun commenced with a biograph exhibition which was excellent and just suited to the occasion. This was followed by sleight-of-hand performances that mystified and surprised. Vaudeville followed and then came refreshments consisting of ice cream, cake, strawberries and punch. When the tables had been cleared of these toothsome viands, the biograph kept the sportsmen in a merry mood until late in the night. Throughout the evening cigars were generously passed around to those who enjoy a smoke. It was a most social and enjoyable occasion throughout. President Edward S. Barker was the moving spirit of the evening, and he looked after all and saw that no man went away dissatisfied.

HELD OPENING JULY 4TH.

The formal opening of the new Medford Boat Club house on Mystic Lake was held July 4th. The new house was well filled with visitors during the day. The morning was given over to a canoe sailing race, this sport being very popular at the club, with canvas canoes. The sports and novelty races were held at 2.30, participated in by a number of Winchester Boat Club men. A concert and dance, with an illuminated canoe parade completed the day.

WILL ENTER COLLEGE.

Winchester High school will send a number of its graduates to a higher seat of learning. Harold Robinson, Philip Redfern, Ernest Symmes, Edward Mason and Ronald Park will enter Tech; Harold T. Webber and F. Lambert Hunt Harvard; Dana Wingate, Kenneth Pond, and Winthrop Foster, Phillips Exeter; Roy Hilton, Guy Kinsley and Edward Hale, Phillips Andover; Charles E. Richardson, Sheffield Scientific school, Yale; Elmer MacPhie, Tufts Dental.

MISS RUSSELL WEDS.

Announcements have reached town of the marriage of Miss Elizabeth Adams Russell to Mr. Charles Edward Chapman at San Francisco, California, on June 29th. After a trip to southern California, Mr. and Mrs. Chapman will reside at Sausalito, California, in the house recently purchased by Mr. Chapman, where they will be at home to their friends after October the first.

FOR BUYERS.Two new laws for the protection of customers against dealers who give short weight have been enacted by the present legislature. One of them applies to sales of articles which are put up in packages. For example, when a dealer sells a "five-pound box" of butter, it must contain that amount of butter. The box cannot be sold to a customer at the price of butter. So of all other commodities which are put up in packages and sold by weight. This is only reasonable.
The old laws have required this in some commodities. It is now required in all cases.The other law regulates the use of weighing scales—that is, scales which have multiplication tables upon them, so arranged that the clerk can tell at a glance the amount of the purchase. It has been alleged that they are inaccurrate, an allegation which seemed to find support in the powerful opposition to the passage of the law. It has been enacted, however, and goes into effect next October, while the other is already operative.

WONDERLAND.

The first visitors to Wonderland at Revere Beach are astonished at its size; its beauty by day and its truly regal brilliance by night when its 200,000 electric stars illumine this immense recreation park with a positively dazzling effulgence. Constant patrons, and there are thousands of them, find new charms new fascinations at every visit.One great feature of Wonderland's long bill of entertainment, which must not be forgotten, is the big free circus:
the acts of which are given in the tan-bark arena, the circus ring or on the wires or trapezes in position above.
To show the enormous expense involved and the high class character of the performance here given absolutely free to all patrons of Wonderland, it is "only necessary to give the names of those appearing in this week's bill. There is the famous Todd Judge troupe in a footposturing and juggling act declared one of the most difficult in the world; the five Bellatzer sisters, flying ring experts;
Les Arribos, Parisian equilibrists; the celebrated Worcester Brass band, Frederick W. Clements leader; Pongo & Leo, in a thrilling revolving pole act, and Steadman who sings to beat the band.Children accompanied by their parents are admitted free to Wonderland until 6 o'clock and this privilege is extended to all the days of the week, including Saturdays, Sundays and holidays.

SPECIAL DELIVERY LETTERS.

The amendment to the postal laws, which went into effect Monday, and which permits the use of ordinary postage stamps on letters designed for quick delivery, instead of the special stamps hitherto supplied for this purpose, will no doubt increase the volume of the business of this service very materially. It is important for those who avail themselves of this new privilege to bear in mind that in addition to affixing the extra ten cents in ordinary stamps the words "Special Delivery" should be written on the envelope.

WHAT CONSTITUTES A GOOD EDUCATION.

and found also, what is a fact to broil the feelings, that the old doctor liked and accepted all the practice he could get, which fact the young doctor ought to have guessed and provided against. The young physician was wanting in meanness of manners, courtesy of action, and unhappy in the way of doing things, and meant right all the time. The result was that he was compelled to find a new field in which to settle, and in that came too near starvation to make his work pleasant. He is now 59 years old, and has been a quarter of a century in the task and difficulty of learning what he never learned in the process which he called his education, and which parents and college faculties, claim is education. But in many cases such intelligence, such education, cannot be called "good" until it is brushed up, and completed in the dirt and dust of the great general life.

And here it should be remarked, that education of, and in, the schools, must be continued and perfected in the tussle and stress of life. It can be said without any disparagement to our schools, that a "good" education, can be obtained only through the sifting, and testing of actual life. And here we are reminded that a pupil who neglects and loses the drill and demands made of him in school, where he has all the skill and experience and authority, to urge and help him, will generally get but little education when he comes into the exigencies and conflicts of life. Some one says, "however splendid the natural endowment," that is, the native power of memory, reason, and judgment—"the discipline of life, after all, completes the miracle." That is, the potent qualities of mind, the practical ability of every one, is matured only by a resolute mastery of the hard things of life. "The ability of Napoleon—what was it? It grew out of his ambition to equal Caesar or Marlborough, out of his management at Wagram and Jena, out of his battle-fields, out of his throne, and out of all the great scenes of his eventful life." You must study faithfully in school, and faithfully in life, if you wish to obtain a "good" education.

Another fact should not be forgotten in our search for what constitutes a complete education. More than fifty years ago, Dr. Huntington, 12 years pastor of the church in Boston, where Dr. E. E. Hale has served so long, then professor at Harvard and later Bishop of Central New York, in a magnificent address before the United Literary Societies of Amherst College, said this:

We study and investigate and weigh facts, and get information upon many subjects, and then wisdom comes down upon us, in times and ways of which we are practically ignorant. This wisdom comes to the mind, or rather, to the person, from the enlightenments which is derived from the relation of events and people and things. He also said, "Every college ought to have a professor of gumption." William Cowper has a very sententious and helpful description of the wide difference between mere learning, and wisdom, which is too long to quote, but is a germ of truthful statement. Our education cannot be good, unless our studies enable us to secure wisdom from the constitution and working of things. Our inquiry must always be, whether or not we have the attention and power so to digest and apply our learning that wisdom shall come to us as a part of our education.

One more point, and I am done. It is, that no education can be called "good" without some development, and training of the heart. Some eminent thinker, says this—"The little world of the heart, is vaster, deeper and richer, than the spaces of astronomy." The term heart, includes, of course, our feelings, desires, fears, hopes, our likes and dislikes, it is the mystic power which joins us to earth to destiny, and to service. Only a little of its action and reach can now and here be considered. Its deepest moral meaning and scope cannot be introduced into our grange meetings. But its action and results are seen and felt here, all the time. And no one of us would have it otherwise. Our greetings, our interests in each other, and the cause, our attitude and sentiment towards each other, the sincerity and integrity of ourselves, are all in the action of the heart. The following utterance is from "The Farm and Home." "The supreme evidence of a cultured heart and mind, is the number of things one can see in other persons to admire." What person can say that the education of his feelings is such that he always finds pleasure in the special successes and good-fortune of others, and especially of others, who have slighted or designedly blistered our feelings, or blasted our fortune. In school the pupil becomes intoxicated with some friend perhaps, or some phantom, and wants to go on some trip of pleasure with him for an hour or day or more. The feelings, blaze and fume, to go, and duty says, the sum must be worked out—or the lesson learned. Education will be realized and owned, when duty denies the temptation. At West Point they drill the cadets not to wince, or be disturbed, in the thickest of the fight in war. Death must be defied by the rigid training of the nerves and the fears. So in life's battle, it is important to be able to command ourselves when circumstances and the severest strain is apt and powerful to provoke us to speak or do wrong. To warmly retort, when to do it, will bring us defeat and evil, as well as be wicked. Lord Clive was a fiery and ferocious man. But he had such command of his feelings, his heart, his wrath—in an important exigency that, in the midst of great matters, and the honor of the British nation, he was able to adjust the gigantic affairs of the government of India, that he is considered one of the greatest rulers that ever presided in that realm of difficulty and interest. Now my point is, that we must be trained so as to be able to do and be the right thing when it is hard, and we are fearful, and shrink from doing or acting at all. Then in the common matters of community life—in business, social and domestic life—how we are moved to do what we ought not to do, or curl and hate to do what we ought to do. How great is the excellency—that can meet and treat, all men, and all experiences, in a way best to promote the highest progress of others and build ourselves up in intelligence, wisdom, strength and goodness. It requires a great body of good habits, fine sentiments and serviceable abilities, to secure what in any true sense is a "good" education." But I must close, leaving the topic, not much more than just touched.

Pretty Feet Always Painful.

Pretty feet are always painful feet. Shoes rarely, if ever, fit them; hence they carry their possessors haltingly, and too often they must direct themselves toward the chiropodist's. The high arched instep, the pretty foot's essential quality, is yet in a way a deformity, for it causes an abnormal tightness of the tendon governing the toes, and the toes in consequence all turn under a little, as though trying to grasp something. Turning under, the joints stand out prominently, just as the knuckles stand out when the fingers are closed. The leather of the shoe rubs and irritates these prominent joints, and the pretty foot's pretty owner pays the penalty in many a smart, in many a jumping pain.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

STATE POLITICS

Public Glad Anti-Merger Bill
Was Enacted by Legislature

INDEPENDENCE MEN ALERT

May Nominate Own State Ticket
If Democrats Name Whitney For Governor—Ea tell Men Think the Nomination Should Come to Him

The great and general court of Massachusetts has finished its work and been prorogued until the first Tuesday in January of 1908.

Before it wound up its business for the year both branches enacted the anti-merger bill to prohibit the consolidation of the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad with the Boston and Maine, and until the next legislature meets no action tending toward such a combination will be legal under this statute.

The merger issue has been the central topic for discussion for some little time. Governor Guild took the stand that if this consolidation was to be brought about, it should be done in such a way as not to jeopardize the interests of the citizens of the commonwealth, and, in a message to the legislature, he recommended that steps be taken to protect the state.

Henry M. Whitney, one of the Democratic candidates for the gubernatorial nomination, has declared himself publicly as strongly in favor of this merger. On the other hand, General Charles W. Bartlett, another Democratic candidate for the nomination, has taken the ground that such a consolidation would be injurious to the interests of the commonwealth and ought not to be permitted.

Democratic newspapers have made efforts to ascertain the public view in regard to this merger. A number of Democrats believe Mr. Whitney has injured his chances of receiving the Democratic nomination by his open statement that he favors the merger.

Independence League Alert

There is every indication that the Independence League of Massachusetts, a political organization which attained in a single year the distinction of a political party, casting in the last election more than 3 percent of the total vote, is going to nominate its own ticket in the election this fall. The Independence League is the party of William Randolph Hearst of New York, and first saw the light as a political movement in this state last fall. It nominated as its candidate for governor John B. Moran of Boston, and for lieutenant governor E. Gerry Brown of Brockton. Brown was its especial pet. It endorsed the Democratic nomination of Moran, and there were sufficient voters who marked Moran as the candidate of the Independence League to give the organization its party standing. Since that time a systematic effort has been made on the part of the Hearst newspaper in Boston to build up the Independence League in every way possible, with a view to coming campaigns.

This work has been more or less successful, even in the face of the attempt of Mayor Fitzgerald and the Democratic machine in Boston to weaken that party and wipe it out of existence, if possible. Machine Democrats realize that it is a menace to the regular Democracy, and that in order that they may succeed, it is necessary for them to put the league out of business.

The Independence League leaders are well aware that the Democracy has no love for the new movement. They know the Democracy means to stab the league in the back whenever it has the opportunity.

That is one reason why the league proposes to nominate an independent ticket. The leaders of the new movement realize that the Democratic machine is planning treachery, even while speaking kind words and bestowing genial smiles.

Bartlett Satisfactory to League

There is another reason why the league is at present considering with great seriousness the nomination of its own state ticket. The league feels that Henry M. Whitney is quite likely to receive the Democratic nomination. They do not feel that they can support him for the nomination or the election, owing to his legislative record and his affiliation with Standard Oil interests.

One of the league leaders stated the other day that to nominate Whitney would be for the league to go back on everything it had said and done since its formation. He felt that Mr. Whitney represented everything the league is fighting and that to nominate him for governor or endorse his nomination after it had been made by the Democratic state convention, would be to antagonize a large proportion of its membership and incur the censure of honest men everywhere.

That organization is said to be a great deal stronger than it is given credit for being, and, as has been stated, there is now going on throughout the commonwealth a careful and systematic effort to increase its membership, and its influence with the voters.

The leaders of the league would be perfectly satisfied with the nomination of General Charles W. Bartlett of Boston and do everything in its power for his election. They regard him as a careful, conscientious gentleman who ran well for the nomination two years

POINTED PARAGRAPHS.

So many people consider a wish an ambition.

One way to make something out of nothing is to start a fight about it.

To every man comes a time when he wishes he were as smart as he used to believe he was.

As a rule, it is easier to help a man and make him a friend than it is to injure him and make him an enemy.

Every young man could wear a hero medal if the commission would take his best girl's estimate of his strength and courage.

If you don't laugh at a man's joke, he says you have no sense of humor. It never occurs to him that he lacks the sense of humor.

The loafer will always tell you there "isn't much opportunity for a man in this town." Still there are twenty-four hours in a day here, as elsewhere.—Atchison Globe.

REMEMBER THE YOUNG PEOPLE.

The Fourth of July celebration should be financed by the town. If the people want a celebration let them vote for it in town meeting. If they do not want it enough to pay for it as a community they can vote it down. It is not a pleasant task to send boys over town soliciting subscriptions from the inhabitants. It is also a mistake to ignore the young people by not having an entertainment of interest to them. Some few years ago, entertainments for their special pleasure were given in the Town Hall, and the hall was packed to the doors. Not all of the people care for sports, while the little folks do not care for them at all. We hope that next year a first class entertainment will be given in the Town Hall, the same as the STAR, with the assistance of Mr. John H. Carter, carried on so successfully for several years. We want to see the young people interested.

Twenty Years' Contract for Street Lighting.

At a town meeting held in Arlington Monday evening it was voted almost unanimously to enter into a twenty years' contract with the Edison Company to do its street lighting. Some time ago this matter was referred to a committee of prominent citizens of Arlington who made a thorough study of the whole matter. All questions likely to affect the interests of the town were carefully considered and the conclusion reached by the committee was unanimously in favor of making a twenty years' contract. This is the first instance of any city or town, supplied by the Edison Company, entering into such a long contract, although there are other places which have agreed to do so for shorter periods.

Arlington expends about $11,000 a year for its street lighting, the lamps burning until 1 o'clock every night. By accepting a twenty years' contract, there is a reduction in price of 20 per cent. or a saving of about $6000 a year. Should Winchester make a similar contract there would be a saving of about $4000 a year, on the basis of the amount now being spent.

Now that this matter has been referred to a special committee who will, no doubt, be thorough in their work of investigation, the STAR has no hesitancy in saying that their recommendations will be solely in the interests of the town. It will also show that this company is inclined to be more liberal to its customers than has been represented.

DIRT AND REFUSE.

Dr. C. J. Allen presented the following by-laws for adoption by the town:

Section 1. No person except the duly authorized agents and employees of the Selectmen shall carry in or through any of the streets, squares, courts, lanes, avenues, places or alleys within the town of Winchester any house-dirt, ashes or house-foal, either animal or vegetable or any grease or bones, or any refuse substances from any of the dwelling houses or other places in the town, unless such person so carrying the same, and the mode in which the same may be carried, shall have been expressly licensed by the Board of Health upon such terms and conditions as it may deem the health and interest of the town require.

Section 2. No person without the license of the Board of Health shall throw into, or leave in or upon any street, court, square, lane, alley, public square, public enclosure, pond or body of water, or vacant lot, where it would be offensive or injurious to health within the limits of the town, any dead animal, dirt, sawdust, soot, ashes, cinders, shavings, hair, shreds, manure, oyster, clam, or lobster shells, waste water, rubbish or filth of any kind, or any refuse, animal or vegetable matter whatsoever.

Section 3. Whoever violates any provision of the foregoing by-laws shall be punished by a fine not exceeding twenty dollars.

Dr. Allen said that the adoption of these laws would result in an honest effort to improve the sanitary condition of the town and settle the vexed "dump" question. The town has outgrown the present method of caring for its refuse. Of course the correct way was to have the town make the collections, but this would involve an annual expense of from $1500 to $2500. Under this latter arrangement the poll tax payer will have his bills paid by the property owners, which would not be fair. The Board of Health had finally decided after much thought to ask for the adoption of these by-laws as they believed they would work out all right, and hoped the citizens would give them a trial.

The by-laws as given above were then adopted and ordered to be sent to the Attorney-General for his approval.

ADDITIONAL MONEY FOR STREET LIGHTING.

Selectman Richards offered a motion that $800 be raised by taxation for the payment of the additional expense of lighting the streets of the town from sunset to 12:30 o'clock a. m., every night in the year.

Mr. Richards said this amount would be necessary to carry out this schedule of street lighting.

Mr. S. S. Symmes asked the Assessors what the prospective tax rate would be. Mr. Symmes said the State tax would be $2200 more than last year and the county $700. No doubt the Assessors will endeavor to keep the tax rate down by increasing valuation, which was a pernicious method as it resulted in an increase in the amounts paid to the State and County. As far as he was concerned, he would rather pay a higher local tax rate, as it was a bad mistake to increase valuations and consequently pay the State and County more. He hoped the matter would go over to the March meeting.

Mr. F. V. Wooster, Chairman of the Assessors, said that there would be no material change in valuation and that the rate would be similar to last year, because of increase in new buildings.

Mr. Johnson moved to indefinitely postpone. Mr. Carter said the cost of extra lighting would amount to $1200 a year, and would add eight cents to the tax rate.

Mr. A. W. Hale hoped the town would not take a backward step, but fall into line with the progressive towns in the matter of street lighting. He trusted that the Selectmen would be given $800 as asked for.

It was voted to appropriate $800.

REPAYMENT OF FEES.

The article to repay to former Tax Collector, Aaron C. Bell, the amount of the fees collected by him as tax collector for the year ending on the first Monday of March, 1907, and paid to the treasurer of the town of Winchester, failed to be acted upon, no one present offering a motion thereon.

The meeting then dissolved shortly before 10 o'clock.

At the annual turtle supper given by the Edison Co. employees at Woburn last Saturday evening, the following Winchester gentlemen were guests: Walter Caldwell, Chas. Kimball, E. C. Sanderson, Mr. Geo. H. Peterson, Mr. E. Kolb.

ELECTRICITY.

The electric light does not add heat to the room it illuminates. The electric light on the porch shines a welcome. The electric flatiron cuts out drudgery. The electric fan promotes comfort and makes rest possible on the hottest night—but, there are really dozens of reasons why electricity should be introduced in your home.

Have you learned
to be light-wise?

Knowledge of these things can't do any harm, possibly will do a lot of good. Our Sales Agent will give you knowledge if you will write him, or call, or telephone "Oxford 3300, Collect."

THE FOURTH.

Wednesday was, perhaps, the quietest night before the Fourth in the history of town, as there was absolutely nothing doing between the hours of ten o'clock at night and four o'clock the next morning. The Selectmen are very much pleased that their request for a quiet night before met with so hearty a response from the boys. There was not a single alarm of fire during the twenty-four hours, an almost unheard of thing. There was no arrests during the night. Scores of boys and girls, who might have made the night noisy, went to the celebration at Stoneham and this may probably account for the stillness that pervaded the town and gave everyone a good opportunity to sleep and rest.

Several keys had been taken from fire alarm boxes a few days previous to the Fourth, probably by boys bent on mischief, and those boxes were watched closely. The remaining keys were removed by the Engineer and given in charge of people in adjacent houses, and placards placed at the boxes stating where the keys might be found.

The Fourth was a perfect day, and this with the resultant rest of the night before served to make everyone in good humor. The band concerts, the base ball in the morning and the sports in the afternoon all were well attended, while the fireworks in the evening were witnessed by an immense throng. Altogether it was a sane and safe observance of the day and of much enjoyment to all.

The feature of the morning was a ball game between two picked teams, the Hiawathas and the Coney Islands, the former winning by a score of 11 to 3.

There were band concerts at 9:30, 2:30 and 7:30. In the afternoon the track and field events were held on Manchester Field.

MUSIC AT THE WADLEIGH SCHOOL GRADUATION.

It is a genuine pleasure to hear Wadleigh scholars sing at their graduation. The chorus was a large one this year, that sang with an enthusiasm which was noticeable. The tone was pure, not harsh, as is found in young voices.

The orchestra this year was the largest ever used in town at a graduation and it has proved its value by its inspiring playing.

Each year Mr. Makechnie makes progress. He raises the standard of music and during the winter plans recitals so the pupils can hear the best of music. This year he should feel encouraged by the results achieved by the Wadleigh scholars.

Sometimes a theme in a piano solo, or one taken from an orchestral piece arranged as a song or a chorus loses somewhat from its original form, but the choruses as given by the Wadleigh school did not lose any of their original, but with the young voices and orchestra, enhanced their value.

Each chorus was given with spirit, but the climax was reached in the last number, Union and Liberty, the words by Holmes, set to the music of the Tannhauser March by Wagner. Possibly at no time in their lives have the scholars had more of a musical inspiration, if it can be called such, than in this number. With the opening introduction by the orchestra, then the intricate and difficult but beautiful accompaniment, that the scholars kept their place with the orchestra at one rehearsal shows the instruction they have received. It was a beautiful number and was given brilliantly.

One who is interested in child life must have been delighted with the singing of Annette Symmes, the piano playing of Ruth Carpenter and the violin playing of Francis Newton. Each took their part as if they enjoyed what they were doing, and that the audience enjoyed it was shown by the applause received.

Supt. Metcalf's remarks made at the High school graduation regarding an industrial class in that school had evidently taken root, as it was mentioned again at the Wadleigh exercises, and to which was added a word about music, a key note or a leading tone which should resolve itself into a factor, that ought to help the home life of every pupil that would avail himself of the privilege. Music was mentioned possibly for the first time at a graduation in connection with the work which many of the pupils do in this (now outside branch). A pupil who will practice one or two hours each day on the violin, the piano or the voice, and keep up in the other studies, should receive credit for it which they do not now receive. It would put music on an entirely different basis in our town.

If an industrial class is established at the High school there is no doubt of its importance in shaping the course of many a poor boy who now leaves school without having a chance to try his hand at perhaps anything practical, and who would go through life with the feeling that if he only had the chance to try his hand at something besides books in short school days, his life would have been different.

Music is a force in a persons life which the majority of people do not understand. In the Wadleigh school this factor is then a spark and when they enter the High, this work should be rekindled, and if the same inspiration which the scholars showed last Friday night could be carried into the High school in a year's time we should have music which would enter the home and the church life. And what a beautiful part of a church service could a choir of 200 young voices render? Can we estimate the possibilities?

Sometimes an action will speak louder than words. During the intermission at the rehearsal last Friday morning at the Town Hall a school boy was seen to look several minutes at a violin which was left on the piano. He was seen to touch it, perhaps the first time he ever had an instrument in his hand. Who knows but what the soul of music slumbers in that shell till waked and kindled by the masters spell!

And feeling hearts touch them but rightly. Pour a thousand melodies unheard before.

Schumann said, accustom yourself even though you have but little voice to sing at sight, but if you are the possessor of a rich voice, lose not a moment's time to cultivate and consider it the fairest gift which Heaven has lent you. And that one of the highest manifestations in music is through the chorus and orchestra.

Mr. Makechnie with untiring effort has placed the music in the Wadleigh school at a high standard. He has been able to use chorus and orchestra together with fine effect.

Let the same effort be carried out in the High school by giving music the place it should have, and it will be found to be a vital force in school life, the home, the church, and of estimable value in our town.

GRADUATION EXERCISES OF WADLEIGH SCHOOL

Best in School's History.

On Friday evening fully 1000 interested spectators witnessed the graduation exercises of the pupils of the Wadleigh School. The exercises were declared by many to be the most pleasing yet held by that school. The musical program of the evening was again very fine this year, and in addition to the chorus singing were solo and song numbers by groups and individuals. The solo by Miss Annette Symmes, "Good Night, Little Girl," was exceptionally well sung for one so young, as were the group numbers.

The hall was tastefully decorated for the occasion, the class motto, "Row, Not Drift," occupying a conspicuous place over the platform. Opening with an overture by the school orchestra and a class song, there followed the invocation by the Rev. George H. Guttererson.

Then came essays by Robert D. Le-

WINCHESTER COUNTRY CLUB.

The golf event at the club last Saturday afternoon was a four-ball foursome match. The winners, F. L. Hunt, Jr., and Dana Wingate had the best gross as well as the best net scores. The results:

F. L. Hunt Jr. and Dana Wingate 73 5 68
F. T. Buford and H. W. Whitten 82 7 75
W. M. Foster and G. B. Davis 86 9 81
F. C. Adams and A. C. Fernald 93 9 84

The play for the Sanborn Cup with three quarters regular handicap is coming to a close. The field of twenty-two has now narrowed down, so that H. T. Bond by defeating George Russell 2 and 1 in 27 holes, has qualified for the finals. The winner of the other semi-final match between E. A. Kelley and J. P. Crane will meet Bond for the cup.

Of the golf handicaps, H. T. Bond has the lowest, 5. Dana Wingate the next, 8, and G. M. Brooks, the third, 9.

This season the 1000 for the course of 9 holes has been raised from 35 to 37, by increasing that of the second and seventh holes from 4 to 10 and 12.

On Memorial day a new record for the course was made by H. T. Bond of 74 strokes for 18 holes. For the nine holes, both times he made the bogey 37.

The sixth annual interscholastic golf championships of Massachusetts began Wednesday at the Wollaston Golf Club in Montclair. The championships are under the auspices of the Greater Boston Interscholastic Association of which Dana Wingate is secretary. The events are the championship, consolation and president's cup contests, driving, approaching, and putting championships, team championships and an 18 hole handicap medal play. The following are entered from the club representing the Winchester High School: Dana Wingate, Harry Mason, F. Lambert Hunt, Harold Whitten, Ralph S. Whitten and Irving Small, Jr.

The season of the Mystic Valley Tennis

Land, Kenneth F. Furber, Mabel G. Carlson and others. "Mrs. Caudle's Views on Masonry" was given in a pleasing manner by Miss Madge Hovey, after which there were readings and recitations by Miss Eunice H. Homer, Marshall W. Jones, Miss Cecile E. Poirer, Charles W. Lawrence and Harlan F. Newton.

The class prophecy was read by Miss Hildegard E. W. Guttererson.

"The Brown Thrush," by Misses Annette J. Symmes, Margaret Mason and Ernest Von Evans; and two half-class choruses, prepared by Miss Grace Hill were especially well given, and much enjoyed by the audience.

The musical selections comprised a violin solo by Francis Newton and piano solos by Miss Ruth Carpenter.

One of the most entertaining features of the exercises was a fan drill, carried out by 16 members of the class, which made a decided hit, the work of the girls showing careful and conscientious preparation.

Mr. Metcalf presented the diplomas to the 76 members of the class, and the programme closed with a class chorus, "Union and Liberty."

W. C. T. U. NOTES.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union takes new courage when any action is taken by our government, through any of its departments, that promises to lessen even in a small degree the dangers that threaten the young or all ages from the use of drinks containing poison.

From Washington, D. C., June 21 a special correspondent reports:

The war department today issued an order forbidding the sale of "coca cola" in post exchanges in the department of the east.

This action was taken after official reports concerning the effects of the drink and after an analysis of its ingredients was made at the department of agriculture by Professor Wiley, chief chemist.

Dr. Wiley reported that in a majority of the samples of "coca cola" he tested he found quantities of cocaine and caffeine.

Officers reported to the war department that enlisted men have discovered the effect which it produces upon them, and that for the purpose of getting this effect they drink six or seven glasses of the stuff, and that the result is injurious to health as well as destructive of morals.

The Interstate Institute of the W. C.

T. U. to be held at Hampton Beach in July from 10 to 12 will be a fine place to go for an outing. The dates as previously given were incorrect. The first meeting is Wednesday evening, July 10.

WHERE TO GO ON VACATION.

Handsomely Illustrated Book on Vermont Resorts.

"Summer Homes in Vermont," a handsomely illustrated new book devoted to the summer resort interests of the Green Mountains and Lake Champlain region has just been issued by the Central Vermont Railway Company and is now ready for distribution.

The book contains, besides 150 pages of descriptive matter, 100 camera pictures, which show better than words can tell the wonderfully fascinating attractions of Vermont in the summer time. Lists of all of the hotels, lakeside and mountain camps, and family homes, where summer boarders are taken, are given, together with full particulars regarding accommodations, rates and railroad connection.

A 6-cent stamp enclosed to T. H. Hanley, N. E. P. A. Central Vermont Railway, 360 Washington street, Boston, will bring book by return mail.

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It.

How To Find Out.
Fill a bottle or common glass with your water and let it stand twenty-four hours; a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys; if it stains your linen it is evidence of kidney trouble; too frequent desire to pass it or pain in the back is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

What To Do.
There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed, that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy, fulfills every wish in curing rheumatism, pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passage. It corrects inability to hold water and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best. Sold by druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes.

You may have a sample bottle and a book that tells all about it, both sent free by mail. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention this paper and don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y.

The Arms of the Law.

By FRANK E. SWEET.

Copyright, 1906, by Frank E. Sweet.

WHEN the daily mid-season train rounded out from the palmettos, slowed across the bridge and came to a smooth, almost suave stop at the end of the Royal Poinciana, the usual people were in attendance. An orchestra in the coconut grove swelled out alluring strains of welcome. From the docks came the occasional creaking of yacht sails. On the Poinciana steps, the platform, in the grove, along the paths, were scarlet coats and gauzy, summer-like dresses and golf sticks.

Two private cars were in the train, but except for a casual glance they of the scarlet coats and gauzy dresses did not notice them. Multimillionaires had become a drug at Palm Beach.

"Oh!" he said. "Good morning."

Thus it was that the railroad magnate of a dozen millions and the copper king of three times as many walked from the cars with only the buzzing, tip loving attendance of bell boys and porters.

But the next morning the copper king, who had registered as Henry Tierman, Michigan, made a stronger plea for local recognition. He went fishing.

His own line had been thrown overboard soon after leaving the dock, but not a nibble came as an encouragement for him to persevere.

"Gettin' tired, sir?" the boatman asked.

"Rather," Tierman confessed, yawning. "I don't believe I'm much of a fisherman after all."

"That's 'cause you ain't in practice," encouragingly.

Tierman assented by a nod, and the boat was run alongside the Pitt's Island dock. Tierman stepped out, lighted a cigar and sauntered away into one of the shadowy paths.

Half an hour later he found himself near a cottage which was almost concealed from the path and wholly from the water. He passed around this and down to the shore beyond. A young man was seated upon the trunk of a fallen rubber tree fishing. His hat brim was drawn far down over his eyes, as though to shield them from the sun, but no sunlight could penetrate through the density of the overhanging foliage. At the sound of approaching footsteps he started and turned.

"Oh!" he said. "Good morning."

"Good morning," Tierman responded. "Fishing to kill time, like the rest of us?"

"No, hardly that," seating himself again upon the tree trunk. "I knew little of the art two weeks ago. Since then I have fished quite a good deal."

Tierman's gaze left him and wandered out across the water. He wanted to be amused. Presently he sat down upon the trunk and made some comment about the fishing. The young man answered shortly and with a covert side glance of inquiry. But a few moments later, as though the scrutiny had been reassuring, he opened a basket at his side and took from it an extra line. This he gave to Tierman and showed him how to make a good cast.

At the Western Union office of the Poinciana the little machine which kept the guests in close touch with the outside world was clicking along industriously, and the boy who delivered the messages as they ran off was taxed not to fall behind. Occasionally an owner could not be found, and the small envelopes would be brought back and placed upon the desk, there to wait another attempt at delivery later. Two hours after the copper king left the hotel one of these was brought back with "Tierman not to be found; gone to the infernal fishing."

The operator did not look up, but with one hand he motioned the envelope from the undelivered pile.

"Seemed to be important," he said; "must be delivered at once. G's find his private secretary, his servant, anybody of his party. If not able to do that, take the message up the lake yourself."

But that was not necessary, for as the boy left the office he saw Tierman's secretary entering the rotunda from outside. In less than ten minutes the secretary was hastening up the lake at the maximum speed of the fastest launch which could be procured.

He found the copper king on the tree trunk, his face eager, his tones jovial. On the ground lay four large fish, and he had caught two of them. But at sight of his secretary and the yellow envelope his face clouded.

"Couldn't you wait till I got back?" he exclaimed testily. "Don't you know that an interruption now means bad luck? I'll not catch another fish. Here, give me the telegram."

He read it with a gathering frown, then thrust it impatiently into his pocket.

"Wire Saunders to have extra vigilance at all the port towns and along the Canadian frontier," he grumbled.

"Offer twenty thousand—fifty thousand—for the follow's apprehension. But of course Saunders understands and has done everything that could be done. There was no use bothering me. Yes, that is all," as the secretary turned and then paused inquiringly. "You may go now. I will not be down for several hours. I want to catch another fish."

He called his line as the young man had shown him and threw it with all his strength. But the cast was poor, and he drew in and coiled and cast the line once more. Then he resumed his place on the log.

The young man was bending over, watching his line. Apparently he had not noticed the secretary's presence or his companion's impatience. Five minutes passed; then he drew in his line and another large fish. Tierman watched him gloomily. Another five minutes, and he, too, began to draw in his line, but it was to wind it for departure.

"I'm going to quit," he declared. "Luck's turned, and I might fish on all day now without a bite."

The young man rose.

"It's too bad," he said, "but you've made a good catch anyway. These fish will be worth showing at the hotel."

Tierman's face brightened.

"That's so," he agreed. "I'll send the boatman to get them. But if it hadn't been for that fellow I might have caught another."

"Very likely. Did he bring bad news?"

"Well, yes, in a money way," dryly. "The difference between fifty thousand and ten times that amount. You see, it was this way: A man who was buying mining property for me disappeared with what we thought about fifty thousand. That was nearly a month ago. Of course we took the usual precautions against his leaving the country. This telegram states that recent investigation has lifted the amount to half a million."

"Ah, that was quite a haul. And the fellow escaped?"

"So far, but he'll be caught all right," carelessly. "Folks don't find it easy to do such things nowadays and get off. Fifty thousand is a good bid for vigilance, and, besides, we have some of the best detectives on the lookout. Every avenue from the country is guarded."

"Perhaps he slipped out ahead of the guards."

"No; we got a clew of him at New Orleans only two weeks ago. He had engaged passage on a sailing vessel for South America, but grew suspicious and did not make his appearance. Shrewd of him, too," chuckling. "for we had a detective on board waiting for him. No, no; we'll have him all right. He's in hiding somewhere, and it's only a matter of time. But about the fishing," abruptly. "We must have some more of it together. I didn't know that I was a fisherman, but it seems I am. Now, see here. I had my steam yacht come down ahead of me. It's at Miami now. Suppose I wire the captain to run up and take us off for a few days. Will you go?"

An odd look flashed into the young man's eyes, and he turned away for a moment.

"The Mona?" he asked.

"Yes. You have heard of her?"

"Of course. I read the newspapers. You are Mr. Tierman, sometimes called the copper king of Michigan. And I have read something about the man you are looking for and formed an opinion as to his whereabouts. You see," apologetically, "we detectives are always on the watch for such things and read them up even when we don't expect to engage in them personally. I came here for quiet, but the professional instinct is easily aroused. Ah, you are ready to go. I will walk along with you."

They went up past the cottage and on through the semitropical growth to the dock where Tierman's boat was waiting. The young man walked with a quick, springing step, the dreaming listlessness gone from his eyes. As soon as the boatman had been sent back after the fish he placed a hand upon his companion's arm.

"Look here, Mr. Tierman," he said, with an odd, subtle challenge in his voice which the other did not appreciate until afterward; "I want to go into this thing."

"What—the fishing?"

"No; the finding of your man. I have a theory which I think will bring him to light, and I don't believe that any of your other arrangements will. Fifty thousand, I think you said. Is that for news of him or his apprehension?"

"Either for positive news, his apprehension or a recovery of the booty."

"I see." He took pencil and paper from his pocket as though to make notes, then went on. "From what read in the papers you did not meet this man yourself?"

"No. I was in Europe and cabled Saunders to engage him. I had heard, though, that he was a mining expert."

"So," apparently jotting the fact down. "Now about the Mona. She's ready to start at a moment's notice and is seaworthy. I suppose?"

"Of course. She was built only last year, and her captain has orders to be ready to start within fifteen minutes after receiving a telegram. I haven't been out in her myself yet, but the captain says she is capable of a voyage around the world. But what has that to do with the fellow Bostwick?"

"Everything. I want the Mona's help to find him. Oh, I understand it's a rather startling proposition," at the look on the other's face. "but it's the only one that fits into my plans. You put the Mona under my charge for two weeks, and I'll engage to find your man. I'm positive I can do it. And I won't ask for a penny of compensation unless I do. Isn't that fair?"

"I suppose so," discontentedly. "But my private yacht! Let me hire a tug for you, or anything."

"Nothing but the Mona will do," positively. "Unless I can have her I will drop the job. But think of the half million, man, or we'll say four hundred and fifty thousand, with the fifty out. And I will need the Mona for only two weeks."

But still Tierman hesitated.

"It isn't so much the money," he objected, "as it is the fishing. I've planned a lot of fishing since I caught those two back there." Then his face cleared. "Suppose we have a few days in her before you go," he proposed; "then you may have the Mona and welcome. We can go out again after you get back."

"And have Bostwick escape us while we are out?" asked the young man. "No, no, Mr. Tierman; the fishing must wait. My theory is this: Bostwick's hope is one of the South American ports, probably Paramaribo. There he could be in close touch with the interior, where he probably has friends and where there would be little danger from extradition papers. The Mona is swift, and I could make the run in a few days, and him and wire you. Almost before you realized the fact the mystery of Bostwick's whereabouts would be a thing of the past."

"Oh, you can have the yacht, of course," yielded Tierman reluctantly, "but I'm unwilling to admit," candidly, "that just now I would rather catch a few more big fish than even Bostwick. But here comes the boatman. I will give you a note to the captain of the Mona, and you can go down to Miami on the evening train."

"No; a better plan will be for you to wire for him to steam this way at once," said the young man hastily. "I have a little business to attend to and will then take a launch and meet him down opposite Lantana or Boynton. Have you a good description of this man Bostwick? Though, of course," with affected indifference, "I have a general idea from reading the papers."

"Then you know as much as I do. But why not run down to Miami? It wouldn't delay you any, I think, and the police there could give you information and very likely show you a picture of the fellow."

But the young man laughed.

"I'd rather not, thank you," he said. "Too many fingers in the broth, you know. Perhaps it's professional jealousy."

MOTHERHOOD

The first requisite of a good mother is good health, and the experience of maternity should not be approached without careful physical preparation as a woman who is in good physical condition transmits to her children the blessings of a good constitution.

Preparation for healthy maternity is accomplished by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which is made from native roots and herbs more successfully than by any other medicine because it gives tone and strength to the entire feminine organism curing displacements, ulceration and inflammation, and the result is less suffering and more children healthy at birth. For more than thirty years has been the standby of American mothers in preparing for childbirth. Notwithstanding Mrs. James Chester of 427 W. 35th St., New York says in this letter:—Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—“I wish every expectant mother knew about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. A neighbor who had learned of its great value at this trying period of a woman's life urged me to try it and I did so, and I cannot say enough in regard to the good it did me. I recovered quickly and am in the best of health now.”

MRS. JAMES CHESTER

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is certainly a successful remedy for the peculiar weaknesses and ailments of women. It has cured almost every form of Female Complaints, Dragging Sensations, Weak Back, Falling and Displacements, Inflammation, Ulcerations and Organic Diseases of Women and is invaluable in preparing for Childbirth and during the Change of Life.

Mrs. Pinkham's Standing Invitation to Women

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to write Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free.

VERMONT . . .
SUMMER TIME

Central Vermont Railway
Has Issued Handsome
Book Telling About It.

Always early in the field with its warm weather literature the passenger department of the Central Vermont Railway has just issued its 1907 edition of "Summer Homes," which is sent for stamp on application to T. H. HANLEY, N. E. P. A. 360 Washington St., Boston. The book describes the beautiful scenes among the green hills of Vermont and around the shores of Lake Champlain, is handsomely illustrated and includes lists of hotels and of family homes which are recommended to pleasure and health seekers, excursion fares, maps, and such useful information as will enable the "don't know" tourist to arrive at a decision.

Headache Sufferers

Do you want relief—in just a few moments and no bad after-effects.

If so, you have only to take, Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills.

If subject to headache, have them with you always. No harm can come from their use, if taken as directed, as they contain no opium, chloral, morphine, cocaine, chloroform, heroin, alpha and beta eucaine, cannabis indica or chloral hydrate, or their derivatives.

Ask your druggist about them.

"It gives me great pleasure to be able to refer to the Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills as the best remedy we have ever had in our house for the prevention and cure of headache. My wife who has been a constant sufferer for years with the above complaint, joins me in recommending Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills, hoping they may fall into the hands of all who suffer."

J. L. BUSH, Watervliet, N. Y.
Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills are sold by your druggist, who will guarantee that the full package will benefit. If it fails, he will return your money. 25 cents a box. Never sold in bulk. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

A Voyage of Death.

In the Sea of Okhotsk the salmon are suicidal and one of the most startling examples of the spendthrift side of nature may be found in the rivers that run into this sea. When six years old the salmon begin a voyage of death, ascending the river of their infancy they race in countless thousands upstream until lack of food and lack of elbow room kill them off. A recent traveler declares that however many millions of salmon may run up the river, not one ever reaches the sea again alive. What becomes of the rivers of dead salmon? The seagulls wheel down upon the scene and feast upon their eyes, scolding anything less dainty. Bears, wolves, foxes and sledge dogs are made comfortable for the year.

Hon. Samuel McCall was one of the commencement speakers at Bates college last week.

Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Baldwin and Master Maurice Kerr returned Saturday from Jaffrey, N. H., where they have been spending the month of June.

Mr. Albert Sargent went to New Haven last week to the boat race.

Mrs. J. C. Stanton is seriously ill.

Dr. George P. Brown and grandchild go next Tuesday to Lake Winnepesaukee and visit friends for two or three weeks.

Mrs. W. I. Lawrence has gone to Barnstead, N. H.

Mrs. George Blanchard and family went today to Falmouth Foreside for the summer.

Mr. Harry Brown and wife have gone to Lake Placid, New York, for a few weeks.

Mr. George Parker and family have gone to Cottage City for a month. Miss Lucy Bishop has also gone to the same resort.

Mr. Thomas W. Lawson sent his check for $25 for the celebration on the Fourth.

AN UNSIGHTLY LOT.

The Highland school lot in its present condition is not creditable to the town nor is it a benefit to the neighborhood, but rather a drawback. Many years back, or since the town got stone from it, the grounds have been in a rough and exceedingly uninviting condition. Repeated agitation has brought about improvement, until today all that is required is to have it levelled off and covered with loam and put down to grass. This lot is too large and the surplus over and above what is required for a suitable yard for the school should be sold for building purposes.

The sidewalk and grass plot is also in a bad condition and not at all in keeping with those of adjoining estates. Here, too, concrete and loam would work a pleasing change.

It is not over exaggerating to say that the grounds at the Highland school are far and away the most unsightly and poorest kept of any similar lot in town.

Druggist Frank N. Abare was presented with a handsome clock for his store last week by a party of his Cambridge friends.

FINEST CONTRACT HE HAD EVER KNOWN.

The electric lighting committee had made a careful investigation and there was but a single dissenting member of the committee to the full scope of the report. In brief the town enters into a twenty years' contract with the Edison Electric Light & Illuminating Co., this long term giving to the town an advantage of over $60,000 in the twenty years beyond the price at which light can be furnished on a short time contract. Every present safeguard of the town's interests is retained, and in addition the contract provides that if lower figures are secured by any town or city supplied by this company, this shall be the price for Arlington; leaves the way open for an appeal to the Gas and Electric Light Commission; takes care of the matter of placing wires under ground; provides for surrendering of contract on ninety days notice.

The contract was discussed at some length, but perhaps Mr. Peck voiced the general sentiment: "This is a contract drawn by business men who have evidently safeguarded the town's interests. In past years I have opposed long term contracts, but this contract presented the case in a new light. It is the finest contract I have ever known, and the town will act wisely in endorsing the work of its committee." On his motion the meeting voted almost unanimously "That the Selectmen be authorized to make a contract with the Edison Co. on substantially the terms stated in the report of the committee."—[Arlington Advocate.]

SELECTMEN'S MEETING.

July 8th, 1907.

Board met at 7:30 p. m. Present Messrs. Richards, Beggs, Barnard and Winn. Voted to instruct the Edison Electric Illuminating Company to burn the street lights every night until 12:30, until further notice.

Voted to grant a common victuallers license to John Maffey, 60 Swanton street. Voted that the contract for installing the heating apparatus in the Town Stable be awarded to Edward E. Parker of Woburn, as per specifications submitted.

Voted that the chairman be a committee of one to see Mr. Sullivan of the Boston & Northern St. Ry. Co., in regard to laying heavier rails from the center to the Stoneham line.

Received check from Rev. Daniel J. Keleher for $125 for his share of concrete sidewalk on Washington street opposite the St. Mary's Church.

Received letter from John H. Carter asking for have two drinking cups placed on the Lebanon street fountain.

Voted that the Supt. of Streets be instructed to place two drinking cups on Lebanon street fountain.

Received from Mrs. Fannie Rust of Hillside avenue letter asking what amount would be allowed her towards the cost of a granolithic walk in front of her residence; referred to the Supt. of Streets for measurements and estimate of cost.

Voted that the Supt. of Streets be instructed to make repairs on the upper end of Mason street extension at an expense not to exceed $60.

Warrants drawn for $2004.17 and $1271.35.

Adjourned at 10:10 p. m.

G. H. LOCHMAN, Clerk.

REMEMBER THE LITTLE FOLKS.

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

I am sure you were right in your plea for an entertainment for the children during some part of the day on the Fourth. Also I am confident that the Town Hall would be packed. How much we elderly people enjoyed these entertainments in our young school days, and how proudly we look back on the pleasure. I hope the Selectmen will see to this next Fourth, and not have the little people neglected.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

ANNUAL CANOE PARADE.

After the rain storm Saturday evening the Winchester Boat Club held its annual float and parade of illuminated canoes. The storm reduced the attendance, but hundreds were on hand. Prize winners were Wm. Hyde of the Medford Club, Harold B. Rhodes and George F. Tyler. The canoes were towed about the upper Mystic by a power boat. The Medford Boat club members were guests and enjoyed the concert and dancing which followed the parade.

MOTHERS' ASSOCIATION.

The members of the Mothers' Association are cordially invited to meet in the garden at Mrs. Harrison Parkers' home, 408 Main street, on Monday afternoon, July 17, from 3:30 to 5:30.

Little children who cannot be left at home are welcome. Knitting or sewing may be brought if desired.

TAXES.

The board of assessors have received the annual statement from the state treasurer's department giving the town's apportionment of the state, county, park, highway and metropolitan taxes and while the total of the five is about $326.61 more than last year it is believed the tax rate will be approximately the same as a year ago. However, this will not be definitely known for several weeks yet or until the books are made up. The secretary of the Board is hard at work on the figures.

Three tax bills were passed in the legislature this year, two of which are the inheritance tax bill and the bill to tax the American and Adams Express companies, and Winchester and of course the other towns and cities of the state, will begin to derive benefit from them next year.

The Metropolitan tax for this year is $316.45. Of this amount $1309.51 is to meet the requirement of the sinking fund, $4308.05 for interest and $2798.89 for cost and maintenance of Metropolitan Parks.

Sewer tax $651.02. Of this $1328.62 goes to the sinking, $3096.46 for interest and $1625.94 for maintenance and operation. State tax $13.160 County $11,610.10 and highway $96.60.

Following are the amounts of the state, county, park and sewer taxes which Winchester will be called upon to pay this year, and also the figures of 1906 and 1905 for comparison:

State Tax	$13,160.00
Sewer	6,051.02
Park	8,416.45
County	11,610.10
Highway	97.60
	1906.
State	$11,148.76
Sewer	8,006.97
Park	6,756.12
County	10,806.71
	1905.
State	$12,617.60
Sewer	7,944.84
Park	7,332.98
County	10,280.25
	$38,175.67

BAND CONCERTS.

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

The first band concert to be given on Manchester Field by the Metropolitan Park Commission took place last Saturday afternoon. There was a good attendance present to hear the music, but over one-half of the number was from outside towns and consisted of children.

The average citizen is fond of listening to a good band concert, but when it comes to standing on an open field under a boiling sun in the middle of summer, and without a particle of shade, he prefers to remain at home and keep cool.

Saturday afternoons are holidays now for almost everyone, and the working man, who may have the majority of his evenings to spend with his family, takes his outings at that time, which are the only opportunity for going out with them during the day time. With his choice between a band concert on a hot open field and a trip to the seashore or woods, he is reasonably sure to enjoy the latter.

Then again Winchester business is carried on as usual on Saturday afternoons, the stores here closing on Wednesdays.

An evening band concert may have its evils and be undesirable, but all things considered, it seems that it would be more desirable for this town than in the afternoon.

ODD FELLOWS INSTALLED.

D. D. G. Master E. L. Grundy and suite installed the following officers of Waterfield Lodge 231, I. O. O. F. Monday evening:

N. Grand, Harley D. Fisher
V. " Elmer S. Davis
Warden, J. O. Howard
Conductor, George Bigley
R. Sup. N. Grand, G. L. Dunham
L. " " J. H. Mosher
R. " V. " Benj. Edwards
R. S. Sup., John Mead
L. " " W. F. Jones
Chaplain, Wm. M. Campbell

After installation members and guests retired to the Banquet Hall, where a collation was in readiness, after which speechmaking was the order of the evening.

SAILED THURSDAY.

The Thursday boat for the Provinces and Halifax carried an unusually large passenger list of Winchester people.

Among those on board were: Mrs. Thomas Bulmer and family, Mrs. Richardson and daughter, Miss May Richardson, Walter Dover, Mrs. Mary J. Mitton, Miss Cora Mitton, H. J. McEwen and family and Mrs. Milford Hopper.

Part of the party will go to Prince Edward Island and the rest to Hampton, N. B.

Wendell Wyman Locke, who graduated in the class of 1907, from the Winchester High School, has never missed a single session of school since he started in, at the age of five years in the Wyman School.

GOOD BY-LAWS, IF ONLY ENFORCED.

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

The by-laws proposed by the town board of health and adopted by the town at last week's town meeting are certainly by-laws of great importance to the community and the board proposing them is to be congratulated upon its good work.

The by-laws are very stringent, one of them forbidding even the town and state through the "persons" controlling highways and parkways to "throw into or leave in any pond or body of water any dirt, manure, waste water, rubbish or filth of any kind, or any refuse, animal or vegetable matter whatsoever."

It is well for one to put his own house in order and keep it so before correcting his neighbor's housekeeping, therefore it is to be expected that our energetic board of health will, as soon as the new town by-laws are legally approved, take measures to prevent the town of Winchester and the state of Massachusetts from depositing street "dirt, waste-water, manure or filth of any kind" in Winchester ponds and streams, thus gradually filling these bodies of water with certainly "offensive" matter and turning them into filthy meadows which within a short time will be not only "offensive" but "injurious" to public health. Every loyal citizen of the town should assist the board of health in its vigorous attempt to make our town more healthy and attractive by taking some thought and care of the many ponds and streams in Winchester and save them from pollution. The big offenders against the law should be taken in hand first, then the "little fellows" will become very tractable and law-abiding. Let all back up the Winchester Board of Health in its present crusade against both public and private use of Aberjona river water for street drainage and sewerage purposes.

ANDERSON—DONAGHEY.

Miss Edith Gertrude Donaghey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hugh L. Donaghey of No. 14 Glenwood avenue, and Ralph Robert Anderson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert E. Anderson of Cumberland, Me., were united in marriage on Saturday afternoon at three o'clock by Rev. D. Augustine Newton of the First Congregational Church.

The bride was attired in a white muslin gown, trimmed with lace, and carried bride roses. Miss Edith Anderson of Cumberland, Me., sister of the groom, was maid of honor, and wore white muslin and carried pink carnations. Mr. Ernest Strout of Cumberland was the best man.

Following the ceremony a reception was held from 3:30 to 6, attended by many friends of the couple, who were assisted in receiving by their parents.

The groom is a well known lieutenant of Hose 1 of the fire department and employed by the Whitney Machine Co. Many handsome presents were received by the couple from their friends, who were present at the reception in large numbers, coming from Arlington, Beverly, Stoneham and Woburn. After their wedding journey, which they spend in Maine, Mr. and Mrs. Anderson will reside at No. 7 Nelson street.

PORTER—WILSON.

At the rectory of Trinity Episcopal Church, Woburn, Tuesday evening, Miss Elizabeth Wilson of Winchester, was united in marriage to Alexander Porter, nephew of Alexander Porter, the market gardener, of Burlington street, Woburn, by Rev. F. W. Beekman.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the couple which was furnished previous to the wedding and they were assisted in receiving by Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Porter.

The grounds surrounding the home of the newly married couple were illuminated with lanterns and an orchestra was provided for the dancing on a platform erected for the purpose. A special car was provided late in the evening to return the many Woburn guests to their homes.

The couple were attended by Thomas Wilson of Woburn as best man and Miss Fannie Porter as bridesmaid.

The bride was gowned in white silk and the bridesmaid in blue silk.

The couple will reside on Woburn street, Lexington.

WINCHESTER COUNTRY CLUB.

The Interscholastic Golf Championship ended last Saturday at the Wollaston Golf Club at Mont Clair. Of the boys entered from the High school, Harold W. Whitten won the consolation, and Dana Wingate lost in the finals for the President's cup to Mosser of Roxbury Latin School.

In the qualifying round played Wednesday morning, Dana Wingate was eleventh, Henry Mason thirteenth, Ralph Whitten nineteenth, Irving Small twentieth, and Harold W. Whitten and Lambert Hunt tied for twenty-second. Dana Wingate and Henry Mason qualified for the championship, and the others for the consolation.

The high school won second place in the team championship with 357. The members of the team and the scores were: Dana Wingate 85, Henry Mason 87, Ralph Whitten 92, and Irving Small 93. In the first round of the championship in the afternoon, both the Winchester boys, who qualified last, but qualified for the President's cup.

In the first round for the President's Cup, Friday morning, Henry Mason lost by defaulting, Dana Wingate by great playing defeated O'Donnell of Newton High 1 up in 19 holes of play. In the afternoon again Wingate won his match and qualified for the finals, defeating Anderson of Winthrop 1 up.

In the consolation Friday, Lambert Hunt and Irving Small were defeated, and Harold W. Whitten won from his brother Ralph 2 up. In the semi-finals, Whitten again won, defeating Howe of Brookline 2 and 1.

Saturday morning the finals (36 holes) began and some fine golf was displayed. In the President's Cup contest at the end of the first eighteen holes Wingate and Mosser of Roxbury Latin, the other finalist, were even up. Again at the start of the thirtieth hole the boys were on equal terms, however by losing the next two holes, Wingate lost the match by 2 and 1 to Mosser.

In the consolation division the appearances were, also, that Harold Whitten would lose, for at the thirtieth tee, Whitten was 4 down to Tuck of Quincy. At this point Whitten began his uphill fight and won five and halved the other two of the last seven holes, winning the match 1 up.

In the handicap stroke competition open to all entries for the championship, Ralph S. Whitten had the second best net and tied for the second best gross, 78. Lambert Hunt had the sixth best gross and the fourth net score.

CARPENTERS INSTALLED.

A very pleasant meeting of Carpenters' Union No. 991, of Winchester, was held in Waterfield Hall, Tuesday evening for the purpose of installing the newly elected officers. Carpenters were present from all the surrounding cities and towns, and this with the local members made a large attendance. After the installation there was speaking, singing, piano selections by Ralph Arnold and refreshments, the festivities lasting until a late hour.

The following officers were installed by Mr. J. W. Watson of Boston:

Pres., F. T. Dutton
Vice Pres., Peter McDonald
Rec. Sec., J. F. Romkey
Fin. Sec., H. A. Hatch
Treas., C. Everson
Con., Norman Osborne
Warden, Samuel Carlson
Auditors, Peter McDonald, Samuel Carlson
Trustee, John Polley
Delegates to M. D. C., F. T. Dutton, Peter McDonald, C. Everson, John Polley, Samuel Carlson.

Wilhelm Vollmar, a new member of the swimming class at the Calumet Club, narrowly missed drowning on Monday. Mr. Vollmar jumped from a raft into deep water, and his efforts to lower the lake by swallowing the wet proved futile, Mr. William Widowski, steward of the club, being obliged to dive into the water and bring him ashore.

SAVINGS BANK INSURANCE.

Mr. Preston Pond Appointed a Trustee of Guaranty Fund.

Governor Guild has appointed Preston Pond, a trustee of the Winchester Savings Bank, one of the seven trustees of the General Insurance Guaranty Fund which is to be established under the new savings bank insurance law. The trustees of this fund will have many important duties to perform, including the choice of a State Actuary and a State Medical Examiner, as well as general supervision of the fund which will be kept up by small percentage receipts on premiums and annuity payments for savings insurance. It was obviously important in making up the list of these trustees, to secure the services of men having large business interests as well as special knowledge of savings bank conditions; and Mr. Pond of course thoroughly meets these requirements. Associated with him in his trusteeship will be Judge Warren A. Reed of Brockton, Chairman, vice president of the People's Savings Bank; George Wigglesworth of Milton, of the Milton Savings Bank; Charles K. Fox of Haverhill, of the People's Five Cent Savings Bank of Haverhill; Charles C. Hitchcock of Ware, of the Ware Savings Bank, and Hamilton Mayo of Leominster, of the Leominster Savings Bank. Just how many savings banks of this state will immediately take advantage of the provisions of the new law, which becomes operative November 1, 1907, is not yet known, but it is understood that several of them are already making their preparations to do so.

ALL A MISTAKE.

Miss Elsie Tiffany of Medford, who was maid of honor at the recent wedding of Rev. John W. Chaffee and Miss Jennie Florence Dimars at the Methodist Church, Woburn, June 27, reports that she lost two $5 bills, which she left in a chamoise case in a closet at the Dimars residence on Eastern avenue. It also transpires that the police have been at work on several other thefts which occurred at the same time and place. Missing articles comprise a $5 gold piece out of a purse, several solid silver spoons and other small articles, all of which were abstracted from the displayed collection of wedding gifts.—[Boston Herald.]

The matter was cleared up Wednesday when the missing gifts were found stowed away in the home of the bride's mother, 6 Eastern avenue, Woburn.

Miss Elsie Tiffany of Medford, who acted as maid of honor at the wedding in Woburn on June 27, complained to the Woburn police on July 8 that, in addition to the wedding gifts missed, she herself had lost $10 by theft in the course of the ceremony.

On the following day Chief of Police McDermott ransacked the Dimars' house in search of $5 in gold, some silver spoons and other valuable gifts.

This set the Dimars family to thinking, and they reported to Chief McDermott that all the missing things were found.

Mrs. Dimars, mother of the bride, proclaimed that it was all "a case of mistake." Chief McDermott is under the impression that Miss Tiffany concealed her missing $10 somewhere in her clothing and later overlooked it in the excitement.

MYSTIC VALLEY

TROLLEY CLUB.

A Pleasant Excursion to Nashua, N. H., and what was Seen.

For a number of years it has been the custom of several Winchester gentlemen to follow Judge Littlefield in his trolley trips through the summer months. Despite the growing popularity of the automobile, these men have remained true to their old idea that much inexpensive and satisfactory enjoyment comes from rides on the electric cars. Thursday, July 11, 1907, was the first of this year's trips. Starting from Winchester centre shortly after 7:30 a. m., the party rode on a B. & N. car to Lowell, arriving at 9:02.

Crossing the street, another car of the same road carried them to Lake View Park where they disembarked about 9:30. A brief rest of 15 minutes enabled them to take a few glimpses of the beautiful lake, refresh themselves with some Moxie and start again on the B. & N. car for Nashua. Passing through Tyngsboro, the N. H. line was crossed without accident. One of the party recalled the experience of a former year when the trolley wire broke down for about half a mile and necessitated a trip on foot over that space. Passing Hudson, N. H., the Merrimack River was crossed, and at 10:30 the party disembarked in Nashua. Here one of the new cars of the Manchester and Nashua line was taken, proceeding back to Hudson and then turning to the north, and running through Litchfield and Goff's Falls by Pine Island Park into Manchester, arriving at 11:30. This new line is equipped with elegant parlor cars built by the Laconia Car Co., the seats are upholstered in green plush and are a happy relief after riding for a couple of hours on the "soft side of a pine board." The route is for part of the way near the Merrimack River and crosses five high trestles which are built over ravines.

After dinner at the City Hotel, the return trip was begun at 1 o'clock, following the same route back to Hudson, change was here made into one of the large two-stepped open cars of Southern N. H. Co., which ran most of the way to Pelham, through the woods. A short wait was here made for the car of same company bound for Lowell. This city was reached at 3:15, where the B. & N. car for Reading was boarded. The weather had now developed into a heavy rain which interfered somewhat with the view of Tewksbury and Wilmington, but the car drove on through the rain, the party catching a glimpse of Silver Lake on the right and arriving in Reading at 4:15, where car was taken for Winchester. Three Georges and two Henrys constituted the party. Next trip on July 18th to Salisbury and Hampton beaches.

WONDERLAND.

The presence of delighted crowds every afternoon and evening attests the deserved popularity of Wonderland, that magical white electric city by the sea at Revere Beach. People not only of the greater Boston but of all New England in general who are in search of a few hours of recreation in the sunny days of summer, know that they can find it in abundance at Wonderland where the bright lights, and there are over 200,000 of them, shine on the rippling waters of the great lagoon into which the chute

KNOWN FAR AND WIDE.

Hopedale Citizens Co-operate with each Other in Upbuilding of Progressive Town.

Secret of Growing Popularity of Lieut. Gov. Draper, Found in His Direct Way of Approaching Public Questions.

The Milford Journal is publishing a series of articles upon Hopedale and its characteristics. In view of its prominence as the home of men whose public spirit and enterprise has exerted a wide influence in the affairs of our state, it is of unusual public interest. The introduction says:

"The Journal proposes to publish a series of articles upon Hopedale and its achievements as one of the younger towns of our state. This will be of unusual interest to our readers as Hopedale for many years has been a part of our town. Our people have always taken great pride in the advancement of the town as well as her citizens."

Among the many noted towns that have made the Bay State famous no town holds a more conspicuous position than Hopedale. It is known far and wide by reason of the product of its chief industry. The peculiar feature of Hopedale is the fact that it is a manufacturing town and yet it is admitted to be unsurpassed in its environments as an ideal New England town. The one characteristic that has predominated the town's development from its beginning, is the spirit of cooperation. Practical co-operation on the part of every citizen with every other citizen in all things that go to make up a progressive town. The leading spirit that made all this possible was the late George Draper. Years before Hopedale became a town he laid the foundation for a business that is today the largest plant of its kind in the United States in the manufacture of cotton mill machinery.

There are always reasons for the phenomenal success in the development of every community. It requires men with brains and energy and a disposition to apply that energy to obtain practical results and this was characteristic of the senior member of the Draper family. The business of today is carried on by the three sons who inherited the same sturdy business qualities that predominated the mind of the founder of this great industry. George A. Draper, the treasurer of the Draper Company, is strictly a man of business, devoting his time to the welfare of the company and the town in which he lives, and is less known in a political way than the other members of the family.

The Draper family, however, have not confined all their efforts to business interests exclusively. While the greater part of their time has been demanded in the management of a great and growing business, they have never neglected their duty to their state and country. For more than thirty years George Draper was regarded as a man of great influence with the leading statesmen of the country even though he was not an aspirant for public office.

Gen. William F. Draper, the older son and brother, and until recently president of the Draper Co., has rendered important service to his country both in war and peace. He served as lieutenant, captain, major and colonel of the 36th Massachusetts Infantry during the Civil War and was breveted a brigadier general at the age of 23. He also served as a Member of Congress for two terms, declining a third nomination. During the McKinley administration he served with distinction at the important post of Ambassador to Italy and has always taken an active interest in all public questions.

Hon. Eben S. Draper, the selling agent of the company, and Lieutenant Governor of the State, is not only identified with the industrial life of his home town but occupies a conspicuous place in the public eye as an administrative officer of the Commonwealth. It is admitted that there is no public official in the state that has risen so high in the estimation of those who have come in contact with his official life as the present Lieutenant Governor. The secret of his growing popularity is the direct way he approaches every public question. Theories are of little consequence unless they can stand the test of practicability. His business training has had for its chief object the securing of practical results and this family characteristic is exemplified in the development and growth of the town which they founded and in which they have been important factors.

boats dash and then glide merrily away. These thousands know that the best outdoor concert music in New England can be heard at Wonderland in constantly changing programmes. The bands play in the new and magnificent music court, built at a cost of over $10,000 upon a graceful arch which spans the easterly end of the lagoon.

No one goes away from Wonderland without seeing Wonderland's star feature, the great sensational "Fighting the Flames," introducing its company of actors, brave firemen, a dozen pieces of first class practical apparatus and the other essentials for a thrilling melodrama lasting nearly an hour.

Children, accompanied by parents, are admitted free to Wonderland every day until 6 o'clock at night. The great board walk parades are at 2 and 7 o'clock.

WINCHESTER A. A. WON.

At Manchester Field last Saturday afternoon Winchester A. A. defeated Winchester, 9 to 6. Caulfield, for the winning team had the game well in hand at all times. Kenney's batting, three hits, and one of them a 3-bagger with three on bases, O'Connor's and Sears' fielding for the winners, and Smith's fielding and batting for the losers were the features.

SIX DOLLARS FOR NO TALK.

A Canadian's Experience With Municipal Telephones Abroad.

On his return from Europe recently Rodolphe Forget, a member of the Canadian parliament, was asked by a representative of the Montreal Star to give his opinion of municipal ownership in the European cities he had visited. His reply was:

"It is awful. The telephone system is an illustration. A friend of mine called me up from Brussels while I was in Paris. That is about the same as calling up a man in Ottawa, speaking from Montreal. He left a call for me for 6.30 p. m. I went to the phone, and they said that he had just left. It was only a matter of a few minutes. They charged me 15 francs for having been called up. I did not speak to my friend, and when he arrived in Paris later on I learned that he, too, had been charged 15 francs. I wonder if they would stand this sort of thing on this side of the water. I do not think so."

"It takes about twenty-five minutes to get a connection, so that if you are within a ten or fifteen minutes' drive it is better to jump in a cab and go and see your man personally. That is no joke."

A HISTORIC HIGHWAY.

How Colonel Zane Kept His Contract to Mark the Road.

It is said that the beginning of one part of a historic road may be traced to the following incident. In early days, before the public conveyance by stage between the east and west, travel was generally by horseback. Judge Brown, senator for Kentucky, reached Wheeling on the way to the capital and tired. He was a guest of Colonel Ebenezer Zane, an early settler at Wheeling. Standing before the fire in Zane's comfortable cabin, he remarked, "Zane, if you will have a roadway marked from here to Limestone (Maysville), I will have congress grant you a section of land at the crossing of the Muskingum, Hocking and Scioto rivers." Zane fulfilled the contract, and congress made the grant.

May 17, 1796, congress granted to Ebenezer Zane three tracts of land, one square mile, one on the Muskingum, one on the Hocking and one on the Scioto river, in the state of Ohio, for the purpose of building ferries on the road from Wheeling, W. Va., to Limestone, which road was to be opened by the president of the United States. These grants were confirmed to Zane and patented Feb. 14, 1800. On April 3, 1802, congress made the same allowance to Isaac Zane, his heirs or assigns, located in the Northwest Territory, now the state of Ohio. Zane made good use of his grants. He located the town of Zanesville on the Muskingum, the town of Fairfield on the Hocking and Chillicothe on the Scioto. The story runs that when Judge Brown passed over the "road" he found it well marked by blazed trees.—Exchange.

Lives of Old Violins.

Strange indeed are the "lives" of the old Italian violins, says George Lehman. For years or decades they either repose in the amateur's velvet lined cases or sing with their own peculiar incomparable sweetness to multitudes of admiring listeners, adored by their fortunate possessors, coveted by all whose love of their fascinating qualities is far greater than their material means. And then, when it is least expected, some Strad or Guarnerius, known the world over, is tenderly placed in the hands of a new master or mistress and a new chapter in the history of its long life is begun.—New York World.

Democrats Make Feature of the Tariff in State Campaign

TRUSTS MORE APPROPRIATE

On This, as Well as on the Tariff, Republicans Can Make a Rattling Campaign, With the Achievements of Roosevelt as the Central Question

It is very evident that the Democratic party in this state intends to make national questions the main issue in the fall campaign rather than state issues, although this is not a congressional nor a presidential election.

In the effort of many of the party leaders to push Henry M. Whitney of Brookline to the front on the tariff issue it is plainly evident that an attempt is to be made to minimize the state or local issues. It is very evident that the friends of Mr. Whitney wish to raise an issue which shall obscure, as far as possible, the record made by the Brookline man as a manipulator of legislatures and the promoter of enterprises like the Massachusetts pipe line, and blot out as far as possible the other episodes which have brought his name into considerable notoriety.

The tariff is hardly an issue in the coming campaign, notwithstanding the strenuous efforts being made by Mr. Whitney in his nightly campaign throughout the state for the nomination. If it is desired to have a national issue why not select one which would be more appropriate for the candidate than the one chosen?

Why not compare the records of the Republican and Democratic parties in their relation to trusts, monopolies and combinations in restraint of trade?

The Democratic Record

The record of the Democratic party as a regulator of trusts has not been of a character to alarm the most mendacious of these organizations. The first term of President Cleveland saw nothing doing to curb the operations of monopolies in restraint of trade. But when Benjamin Harrison became president in 1889 there was immediately inaugurated a crusade against such trusts and monopolies as had violated the anti-trust statutes. Under his administration a large number of indictments were secured and several convictions against railroads for charging less than tariff rates were found.

In President Cleveland's second administration several indictments were secured, but a greater number of the cases were not pressed, the indictments quashed and the cases dismissed.

President McKinley instituted several cases and under him a number of fines were imposed for violation of the statutes.

Since President Roosevelt was inducted into office, he has taken a greater interest than any of his predecessors in looking after the monopolies and combinations in restraint of trade, with a view to safeguarding the welfare of the people. The machinery of the government has been used most effectively to punish and put out of business, as far as possible, law breakers of every sort, and he has not neglected to apply the law to rich and powerful combinations of capital any less than to criminals of the humblest sort.

There has never been since the establishment of the nation so much activity on the part of the government against trusts and other monopolies in restraint of trade as has been in evidence since Mr. Roosevelt became president.

There Was Law Enough

A famous attorney general under a Democratic administration declared that there was not sufficient law upon the statute books to regulate the trusts, but President Roosevelt has discovered sufficient law to take care of these predatory trusts and monopolies. Under Attorney General Knox, Root and our own William H. Moody of Haverhill a great number of suits have been brought and many of them have resulted in convictions and the imposition of heavy fines. The trusts have discovered a great many laws which apply to them of whose existence they were either ignorant or else had declared them not to be applicable to their cases.

Some of the more important cases instituted during the term of President Roosevelt have been that against the Northern Securities company, of which James J. Hill was the head, and which attracted the attention of the entire nation. This suit was decided adversely to the company and prevented the formation of a great railroad trust. Another case was that against the Beef trust, to prevent it from carrying out an unlawful conspiracy, entered into by the individual members of the trust and various railroad companies with a view to the suppression of competition. In order that they might obtain a monopoly in the purchase of live stock and the selling of dressed meats. This case was won in the lower courts, carried to the supreme court of the United States, and was finally decided against the trust. A perpetual order was secured by the government against the Beef trust to prevent it from combining and conspiring to suppress competition in the selling of salt in the states west of the Rocky mountains in violation of the Sherman anti-trust law.

Another case, which attracted general attention, was that against the Tobacco trust, known as the American Tobacco company, and the McAndrews & Forbes company. The defendant was found guilty and fines of $18,000 were imposed by the court in this case, from which an appeal was taken to the supreme judicial court of the United States.

The Standard Oil Fined

Several cases have been brought against the Standard Oil company, and several are still pending. There have been convictions in a number of cases and the activity of the federal government in the matter has set Texas and some of the other states actively at work on their own account to deal with the Oil trust situation. In Texas, state courts, following the lead of the national government, have imposed fines of between $1,000,000 and $2,000,000 on subsidiary companies of the Standard Oil company and even larger fines have been imposed by the courts of some other states.

Fines of nearly $50,000 were imposed upon the American Seating company, a concern engaged in the manufacture and sale of school and church furniture, because of violations of the Sherman anti-trust law, by engaging in a combination in restraint of trade in the manufacture of these products.

One of the latest cases instituted is that against the Reading Railroad company and others, known as coal roads, to dissolve the combination among these anthracite coal-carrying roads and others which are operated in violation of the Sherman anti-trust laws.

Fines aggregating $50,000 have been assessed upon the Chicago and Alton Railroad company and officials of the road for granting rebates on freight. This case is still pending in the supreme court of the United States. A number of cases have been brought against the Great Northern Railroad company, and a large number of other railroads, for giving rebates on shipments of grain and other produce over its lines.

Only a little over a month ago cases were instituted by the United States against the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific company for granting rebates on coffee. Under this case a plea of guilty was entered and a fine of $20,000 imposed. Similar cases were brought against the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad company, and a fine of $20,000 imposed. A $10,000 fine was imposed upon the Western Transit company for granting rebates on sugar, and this has been paid. A case was brought against the New York, Ontario and Western Railroad company for giving rebates on coffee, which is still pending.

The Record of Roosevelt

During President Roosevelt's administration there have been found under the statutes to regulate commerce two indictments for charging less than established rates, and two cases were not pressed; four indictments for pooling, eight indictments to enjoin departure from published rates, on which temporary injunctions were granted and answer filed.

Ten indictments were found on petitions to enforce orders of the interstate commerce commission, under which one defendant complied with the order and the petition was dismissed; three other petitions were dismissed and two injunctions asked for were granted; one case was discontinued and three are still pending. Three petitions were filed to compel the filing of annual returns.

Under the Elkins act there were found, during the presidency of Mr. Roosevelt, 37 indictments for receiving rebates, under which there were 13 convictions and fines imposed aggregating $207,675. There was one acquittal and two cases dismissed of these 37, and 21 are still pending.

Thirty-eight indictments were found for granting rebates, out of which there have been seven convictions and fines imposed aggregating $209,000; two cases have been not pressed and 29 are still pending.

Six indictments have been found for conspiring to obtain rebates, and in three cases convictions have been secured. In two of the latter cases jail sentences were imposed and in one case the defendants were fined in the aggregate $25,000. The total fines imposed under these indictments were $306,025, and there are 29 cases still pending.

This makes a total of fines imposed under the Elkins act of $572,100, with 60 cases still pending.

A Good School Record.

But few pupils of the public schools here or elsewhere can show a record similar to that of Wendell Wyman Locke, who has the proud distinction of not having missed a single session of school service from the time that he entered the Wyman school at five years of age until he graduated two weeks ago from the High School. This close attention to duty is almost without a parallel in the history of the schools of Winchester, and proves that he has something else besides a good constitution, and that is a desire to learn. This same grit and determination carried through life means success. As showing the stamina of Wendell W. Locke it is only necessary to say that he resides with his parents in a portion of the town almost inaccessible during parts of the winter, namely, Ridge street in what is called the Hill district. This isolated section of the town is the dread of the street department in breaking out the hugh snow drifts during winter, as the work of the town men is frequently nullified within a short time after it had been commenced. Master Locke is deserving of great credit for this record, which should be taken notice of by the School Committee.

The Band Concerts.

A correspondent in a communication printed elsewhere finds fault because over one half of the people who attended the band concert on Manchester Field last Saturday afternoon came here from out of town. This is bound to be so, and the only desire is that they may prove to be appreciative and orderly listeners, which is not always the case during band concerts, judging from the complaints that reach us from Reading and Wakefield where the element from outside has been exceedingly troublesome and annoying to those people who enjoy good music. However, the police can be trusted to look out for this and will see that they are carried on as orderly as at Revere Beach and other state reservations. We have heard of no complaints of unruliness at the concert of last Saturday afternoon. These concerts are not intended solely for Winchester people, but for those of the entire district who help to pay for them.

The correspondent's suggestion that concerts be held in the evening, would, no doubt, meet with the approval of many persons, who prefer the cool of the evening to the heat of the afternoon as was the case last Saturday.

Turbulent Democrats.

What a faculty some prominent Democrats have of trying to injure their party's standing. They never appear to be satisfied unless kicking up a row, and if they cannot have full sway, then doing all they can to defeat the party candidates, especially that for Governor. Mr. Whitney is one of the most progressive Democrats in the State, and if he received the support of his entire party would stand a chance of being elected. The usual internal, and eternal, row, promises to take away all chances of his success. On the other hand there is good, clean and above-board tactics in the Republican party which insures the election of their candidates who are men of standing and ability and who are not afraid of their reputations being smirched from within the ranks. But for these rows there are scores of Democrats in Winchester who would vote but who will not do so when there is a continual fight. The quicker these disturbers are read out of the party the better it will be.

AN EXPENSIVE DEPARTMENT.

It is gratifying to be able to say that there is to be a slight decrease in the county tax this year—only $16.00, but it is something to have that there is a slight falling off in one of the heaviest of the taxes which are beyond the control of the city. Until recently the county tax has been larger than the state tax, but the latter has increased more rapidly than the former, and this year will be considerably ahead.

The county tax, this year, will be $615,300 against $616,900 last year. This is not due, however, to a decrease in the appropriations for county purposes. In fact, the county commissioners have asked for and obtained authority to make larger expenditures than those of last year. There is an increase of $2000 for clerical assistance in county offices—an item which costs $70,000 a year. There is an increase of $7000 (from $33,000 to $40,000) for repairing, furnishing and improving county buildings; and several smaller increases in various items. The one appropriation which is conspicuous is that for highways, including state highways, bridges and land damages. Last year this appropriation was only $14,000. This year it jumps one hundred and fifty per cent, to $35,000. The only reduction in county appropriations is in the amount for auditors, masters and referees in civil cases, on which there is a saving of $5000. The net increase in county appropriations is $30,500, which is greater than that in the state appropriations, when allowance is made for the fact that the latter were for only 11 months last year, and this year are for a full year.

A very large item in the county tax is to cover past expenditures. There is an appropriation of $40,000 for interest on the county debt, and of $45,000 for the reduction of that debt.

The great item in the county tax, however, is for courts and prisons—$92,000 for district and police courts, $50,000 for criminal costs in the superior court, $5500 for trial justices, $65,000 for expenses of civil courts, and $145,000 for maintaining the prisons—to say nothing of the maintenance of court houses, the truant school, law libraries, etc. Altogether, the county is a very expensive department of government, and the only one about which the people have nothing to say or do.—[Cambridge Chronicle.]

LET THE GOVERNMENT BE HONEST.

The new law which permits the payment of "special delivery" letters by ten cents in ordinary stamps is a reasonable one. The trouble will be that multitudes of people will merely add the extra ten cents, and will not write upon the letter the words "special delivery"—so ignorant or careless are they. Why should not the government go a step farther? If it finds twelve two cents in stamps upon a letter mailable at a two cent rate, why should it not treat it as a "special delivery" letter and send it to its address by messenger? The ten cents pays the government for this service. Should it take advantage of the sender's ignorance or carelessness, or do the work he paid it for doing? Plainly the latter.—[Cambridge Chronicle.]

OBSERVATIONS.

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

At the ball game on Manchester Field last Saturday there was no police protection and the spectators stood right up to the base lines to the danger and discomfort of everybody. During the High school games the field was policed. Why this discrimination? Do the members of our Park Board ever come around to give any thought to this playground? We are paying out $3000 a year for interest and maintenance and the first bond will not be paid for eight years yet, and what are we getting for our investment?

If the Star and others want a children's entertainment in the Town Hall next July let them come to the public meeting next year and speak their piece. While there is no trouble about raising money for the celebration in our town very few indeed are willing to do any work and our numerous clubs and organizations seem to have very little patriotism, at least they all decline to take any part being wrapped up in their own affairs and not caring to mix with the common people in a general celebration.

The town meeting last week was for such a meeting very talkative, although the votes were nearly unanimous in every case. The report of progress on the grace crossing abolition matter I do not believe would have stood the test of a few questions and I fear proper efforts are not being made to bring this matter to a head. I was informed two months ago that a sketch would be prepared so that citizens might see how the Centre would look after the proposed plan had been carried out, but I understand that nothing has been done about it.

The 4th celebration went off well as a whole. The ball game was one sided, the sports good, the band concerts all right, excepting that too many light pieces were played; the quality and quantity of the fireworks were all right, but they were not fired fast enough by one-third. Next year the decoration of the band stand should be made a feature and there might well be an oration and singing from it. The regulation of noise for the night before cannot be improved upon and was a complete success. Let the places that want 12 o'clock bonfires have them, we don't want them, and there is no sense in having them.

The place for the grand stand on Manchester Field is next to the railroad fence back of first base. Then the sun will not be in the spectators' eyes and it also will be in good position for general sports and the fireworks. It should be built with a roof to keep off the sun and if of good design and painted will not be an eyesore. The money should be appropriated for it at the March town meeting, whether the Park Board asks for it or not. Let's have some comfort out of it.

Band concerts in the afternoons will draw very small audiences, and it would seem that some of them should be given in the evening. I think the distributing of the Metropolitan Park concerts through the district is a poor way to do, and that it would be much better to enlarge the size of the bands at Revere and Nantasket beaches and let those cities and towns that want band concerts appropriate money for them.

Now that it has been brought out that a third of the boys in town cannot swim, I wonder if any thing will be done about it. The Boat Club has arranged for teaching of swimming, which is all right, for some of the boys, but others cannot or their parents think they cannot afford to pay for teaching them. Five years ago the town appropriated $1500 for this purpose, but the over nice objections of the Metropolitan Park Board prevented its going in the only place there seemed to be for it and the money was transferred to some other purpose.

The legislature was kept in session two weeks longer than it otherwise would have been in an attempt to injure Mr. Whitney's chances, which were thought by the Republican machine to be altogether too good. The result was the passing of an absurd and ridiculous anti merger bill which has made the state a laughing stock. There was absolutely no need for it, and it says nothing that adds anything to the previous laws on our statute books. Mr. Whitney will be nominated and elected, is my prediction.

The least the ball teams playing upon Manchester Field can do is to let the public know the dates and names of teams that are to play. The Star should not only announce them, but give a full score and some account of the playing. This would interest more people than telling where people have gone for the summer or for their vacation. Pay more attention to the stay at homes and have more going on for them.

The Manchester Field Spring is as inconvenient as ever. The Lebanon street spring "designed" fountain still reclines in mud.

"THE GREEN BIRD,"

JULY 29.

New Musical Piece by a Bostonian at Majestic Theatre, Old Home Week.

Boston is to have its annual summer musical production a little later than usual this year. The date is Monday, July 29, (Old Home Week) and the name of the piece is "The Green Bird." The production will be made at the Majestic Theatre and unusual interest attaches itself to the event from the fact that "The Green Bird" is the work of a very well known Bostonian, Mr. D. K. Stevens.

The plot of "The Green Bird" is a deep, mysterious secret. It is said to be delightfully funny and entirely original. The music, which is by John Arnold Bennett, is said to be not only musically but tuneful and catchy. It is being staged by James Francis, one of the leading stage directors of America and DeWitt Coolman is the musical director. The costumes are to be most elaborate and the scenery will be most exceedingly beautiful.

The cast is made up of favorites from beginning to end. Fred Lennox who will have one of the leading comedy roles, will be recalled by theatre-goers of a few years ago as the delightful comedian of "Prince Pro Tem." George Schiller is an old time favorite. Will H. Sloan will be recalled for his clever work as the politician in "The Belle of New York." John P. Kennedy as one of the dancing captains in "The Messenger Boy." Charles F. Bowers just closed his season as leading juvenile in "The Time, the Place and the Girl," and John Lorenz is well known as a vaudeville dancer and comedian. Of the women in the cast Elsa Ryan is a Boston favorite and was most recently seen here in "My Lady's Maid" and "Three Little Maids." Eleanor Kent, the prima donna comes from the West where she is known as the "musical Nance O'Neil." Alice Hosmer made a big hit as the Donna Theresa in "The Yankee Consul," and Helen Hayes is a Boston favorite. There will be a chorus of 70 mostly composed of the prettiest girls ever seen in a musical show. "The Green Bird" will be an ideal show to take in during your trip to Boston for the "Old Home Week" celebration.

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

Lovers of light opera will be glad to hear that "Maritana" is to be sung at the Castle Square next week. This famous work by Wm. Vincent Wallace is rivalled only by "The Bohemian Girl" in tunefulness and melody, and it is sung in Boston all too infrequently for the pleasure of the many who desire to enjoy its romantic plot and bright music.

The plot of "Maritana" is taken from the well-known play of "Don Caesar de Bazan." Its scenes are laid in Spain, the heroine being a young girl who has been brought up among the gypsies, but who becomes in time the happy bride of Don Caesar. It contains some of the most famous of operatic solos, notably "Scenes that are Brightest" and "Let me Like a Soldier Fall" and the grace and charm of its characters and story make it as meritorious as it is famous.

The Castle Square cast of "Maritana" will include Miss Clara Lane and Miss Lois Ewell in the title role, J. K. Murray as Charles II, Geo. Shields as Don Jose, Harry Davies and Geo. Tallman alternating as Don Caesar, Louise Le Baron as Lazarille, Hattie Belle Ladd as the Marchioness and Ous B. Thayer as the Marquis.

PARAGON PARK.

The success of the four great headline acts in the free circus at Paragon Park has been so great that notwithstanding the enormous expense of maintaining the show another week, the management has retained them for seven days more.

The feature contributed by Chelafalo is without doubt one of the greatest hits ever at the Park. Chelafalo's act is in two parts, the first the "Death Trap Loop" is in itself enough to arouse the most dormant audience, but the second part, the "Dash of the Fiery Chasm," is almost beyond comprehension. On a bicycle Chelafalo rides down a steep incline, and leaps 35 feet across a seething mass of flame.

Speedy the world's champion high diver, in his dive of 150 feet into a tank of water 36 inches deep, risks his life every day. The Norins, a man and a woman, also have a combination diving act. The fire dive given by Mr. Norins is as pretty a bit of sensationalism as was ever seen. The show in the Bostock animal arena is making no end of a hit and is one of the most daring of animal shows.

Now that the Palm Garden is "all open" it is one of the most popular spots in the whole Park, and is an ideal place for a luncheon.

W. C. T. U. NOTES.

While many of our unions suspend regular local meetings through July and August several of the departments of the W. C. T. U. will be presented at various summer assemblies by the leaders and best speakers in our membership.

At Chautauqua, N. Y., from which place went the first "ball" that resulted in the formation of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, this year a fine program is prepared. While presentation of our work there is all that the Nat. W. C. T. U. holds itself responsible for, different states have their Chautauqua where different phases of our work are ably presented. July 20 at Framingham is "W. C. T. U. Day."

When Mrs. Mary H. Hunt was taken from us we felt that the position of Scientific Temperance Instruction Superintendent would be hard to fill. Mrs. Hunt had labored so assiduously and so successfully in getting the law passed in different states, but Miss Edith Smith Davis of Milwaukee, Wis., her successor as Nat. and World's Superintendent, has thus far accepted responsibilities and fulfilled all obligations satisfactorily. She goes as a delegate from America to the International Anti Alcoholic Congress at Stockholm, Sweden. In advance of other American delegates she went to England the last of June in order to spend sometime in London where she will confer with Dr. Claude T. J. J. J., secretary of the British Medical Association, who is one of the counselors of our Scientific Temperance Instruction department, and to meet other eminent scientists and educators who are specially interested in this important phase of temperance reform.

POCAHONTAS.

Her Visit to England and the Effect It Produced.

Pocahontas was born in the year 1595. Her father, Powhatan, was the lord and ruler of thirty tribes or clans of savages inhabiting that vast domain which was then called Virginia, after the Virgin Queen, Elizabeth. His friendship was dearly sought for by the white men and considered essential to the life and success of the colony. Like most red men, he distrusted the whites and their designs.

In England Pocahontas was treated with all the honor shown to royalty. Her grace and charm seem to have won all hearts, and she was at her ease with the best in the land. She was presented at Queen Anne's court, attended a ball given by the bishop of London and visited the Globe theater to see Shakespeare's "Tempest." In fact, she took on the garb and accessories of civilization with that easy grace which belongs to the truly great and was as much at home in court as in her own western solitudes. But inwardly she seems to have pined for her own free, open life of the forest, and when she was about to return on the good ship George she sickened and died at Gravesend, having lived long enough, as one commentator has said, to unite two hemispheres, two races, two civilizations.—William Orway Partridge in Circle Magazine.

A Romance In Its Aftermath.

By FRANK H. SWEET.

Copyright, 1906, by Frank H. Sweet.

CURIOSLY enough it had never come home to Elizabeth Dunning that she was an old maid until this morning. She had been training the unruly arms of a clambering Seven Sisters rose when pretty Susie Wren came tripping by on her way to the mail.

"Oh, Miss Dunning," the girl had called, shaking her pace a little as she neared the gate, "ma wants to know if she can borrow your cake this mornin'. We're expectin' company, an' we've only got one."

"Why, certainly, Susie, you can have them and welcome. Stop on your way back from the mail."

"Thank you," moving up a little and then lingering as though wishing to say more, but hardly knowing how to proceed. "Them's awful nice roses you've got."

"Yes, they are nice," assented Miss Dunning, clipping off a handful and offering them across the fence. "You must come in some morning and look at my bed of teas and at my hedge of jacks." Then she smiled encouragingly into the blushing, upturned face.

"Now, what is it, Susie?" she asked. "You have something else to tell me."

"Oh, it's nothin' much," protested the girl bashfully, but with eyes and cheeks which belied her words. "You see, I've only told ma so far, an' now it seems I must tell you next."

"Of course," with affected indignation. "Did I not know you as a baby in long clothes and have I not been your Sunday school teacher more than ten years? Certainly, you must tell me."

But still the girl hesitated, looking at her feet and down the street and across the fence to the pretty cottage whose verandas were embowered with clambering roses and honeysuckles. At last she broke into a frank, merry laugh.

"What a fool I am, Miss Dunning," she cried. "It's only that I'm gdn' to be married. I'll stop for the time comin' back," and she ran lightly down the sidewalk, only pausing for a moment to glance over her shoulder.

"It's Mr. Gray," she called with something that was almost exultation in her voice, "an' he's real nice. If I do say it."

Miss Dunning's face had been full of the kindest interest, and its expression did not change now as she watched the girl speed buoyantly down the street. But her long, tapering fingers trembled slightly as they left the pale and turned to the rose clipping.

Long years ago—she did not care to remember how many—she had tripped down the sidewalk like that and had been pretty and vivacious and hopeful. And with her in those days it had also been Mr. Gray, and she, too, had thought him real nice.

for his intellect and noble work, she looked forward to meeting him with unquestioning gladness. It was not so much her youth returning as it was the great success of her planning coming back for approval and commendation. Their youth was very near and dear, but it was something that was past and laid away in the lavender and rose leaves of her memory.

She had always remembered him as the young man who had gone away from her—strong, erect and with black, curling hair thrust carelessly back from his forehead. Now, looking clearly into the past through the revelation which had just come to her and without the glamour of her own love to idealize him, she had tried to imagine how this man who had been hers, but was now another's, might appear. He was older than her by two years. That meant he was forty-one. Here she broke resolutely from her retrospection. Why was she so foolish? Forty-one was young for a man, even as thirty-nine was old for a woman. Of course he was just the right age for pretty, simple minded Susie and would have the clear judgment and experience which she lacked, and of course a strong, beauty loving man who had been so long away from the world would prefer a pretty young girl to a faded old maid. But as she walked resolutely to the house, forgetting alike the roses and the perfect June day, there was for the first time a hard, bitter pain at her heart. She could spare him to greater usefulness, to a noble ambition, but this—oh, this was different!

And yet when she came from her room an hour later there was no sign of disquiet in her brown eyes or trace of agitation on the delicate flush of her cheeks. The rest of the unruly arms of the Seven Sisters were cut away or trained toward usefulness, and she was standing with her head tipped slightly to one side in contemplation of her work when again came the familiar tap, tap, tap down the sidewalk, ending with the sharp click of her gate latch.

"Here I am again, Miss Dunning," a blithe voice called, "beggin' for roses this time. The cows have eaten ours off clean, an' we must have a good spread for our company. I don't know what the place would do without your rose garden an' lilacs an' strawberry bed—or we girls, for that matter, with out you," catching a hand and raising it to her lips with a pretty, graceful caress that caused the older woman to throw an arm across the young girl's shoulder in sudden tenderness.

"Oh, I forgot to tell you, Miss Dunning," Susie cried roguishly. "He's come."

Miss Dunning's hand closed a little more closely upon the pruning shears, but her face was calm, even smiling.

"I thought he was not expected until next week," she observed. "At least that is what the paper said."

"Oh, I don't know," doubtfully. "We don't have the paper, but I think Charlie was expecting him before next week. Charlie's my brother-in-law, you know, an' owns that pretty house near the river. Mr. Gray's goin' to stay with him. They used to know each other. But, there! I'd better get the roses and be goin'. They're all comin' up this evenin', and ma said for me to hurry back an' get through with my fixin' an' fussin'. An', say, Miss Dunning, if you don't mind, I'd like to bring him to see you 'fore he goes," looking up with a roguish, pleading expression on his pretty, baby face.

"Of course," the strained lips forced themselves to say. "You must bring him by all means."

But after the girl's departure Miss Dunning left the roses and hurried away to the seclusion of her room. Bring him to her, this young girl who had been but a baby when the two had been so much to each other! What did it mean? And he had not even written to her or in any way announced his coming.

The next day was spent on the front veranda, reading or playing with her squirrels and dog or idly touching the strings of the guitar, which was another of her pastimes. But through it all her mind was elsewhere, listening for long absent but familiar footsteps, recalling incidents which she had stored away among the treasures of her memory and sending swift, eager glances to that point of the road at which Susie first appeared. She was getting old, she told herself weakly. This lack of self control was proof of it. But still she sat there and listened and thought and watched.

But the day wore away, and he did not come, and then the next and the next. Through all these years her eyes had retained their brightness and buoyancy, and her cheeks had lost but little of the delicate bloom of her youth. But now her face grew strained and piteous, and dark circles began to inclose her eyes. If only he had gone by once and lifted his hat or had given some sign of remembrance or recognition! But, no; he did not even pass along her sidewalk or in any way evince a consciousness of her existence. On the fourth day Susie hurried by to the postoffice and back, but was apparently too much occupied with her thoughts to glance at the roses which she inclosed veranda. Miss Dunning watched her until she disappeared behind a hedge of altheas and then turned hastily in search of some work to occupy her tremulous fingers. Evidently Susie was too happy to divide her thoughts, and probably he was happy, too, but somehow, for the first time in her life, Miss Dunning could not bring herself in thorough sympathy with the happiness of others.

One day as she sat there with a book in her lap and her eyes fixed upon that last visible point of the street before it was shut out by the other hedge a firm, eager step came up the sidewalk from the opposite direction. But she did not notice until her gate latch clicked. Then she turned inquiringly.

She knew him in an instant, for the years had brought but a stronger step and nobler carriage, with perhaps a too liberal sprinkling of gray hair, which she could discern even from the veranda. She was conscious of a curious thrill of awe and tenderness as she rose from her chair, for even in that brief instant she remembered there was not a single gray intruder among her own soft hair, and his she associated with the work which had conquered obstacles and adversity.

There was no reserve or ceremony in her movements, and by the time he had closed the gate she was halfway down the walk. But it was an older sister greeting her brother here, or, rather, as one who had sent her best thoughts out to conquer the world and was now eager to wreath them with the laurel of victory.

"Alfred!" she said as she went forward with outstretched hands. "Elizabeth!" And then he bent forward and touched his lips to her forehead. And she received the kiss with her eyes looking straight into his and with only the faintest possible color stealing into her cheeks. It was not a wrong to her girlish admirer or an act of presumption or breach of faith on his part. It was merely the seal of the success of their twenty years of joint labor.

"Come up to the veranda, Alfred," she said, with her eyes full of frank welcome. "I want to hear all about it. Of course I know in a fragmentary way, but it will seem new and more real from your lips."

And he told her, sitting in his old place behind the honeysuckle, with the swaying sprays sending alternate lines of sunlight and shade across his face in the same old way, and she listened, with eyes full and lips half parted and with her head nodding commendation or sympathy from time to time. It was a story of heroism and triumph, told in a straightforward matter of fact way, without egotism or self depreciation, knowing that it was her right to have it all, even as he had lived it.

"But it is good to be home again, Elizabeth," he concluded with a satisfied sigh as he leaned back in his chair and surveyed the veranda and rose garden beyond. "The memory of these flowers and their owner has been with me through all the twenty years, and many times have I been on the point of giving up the struggle and returning to them. And, indeed," a trace of reserve coming into his voice, "I might have done so but for what you said and the look you gave me when we last stood together among your honeysuckles. I knew I could only return to the sentence of a deserter who had forsaken his colors."

"But—you never wrote, Alfred."

"Yes, twice. One of the letters was lost, however, for I heard of the ship going down in midocean. The other I never heard from. Perhaps it was lost too."

"I never received it." Then, "But you have been in the place a week, Alfred, and only just called."

He looked puzzled.

"I came in on the train an hour ago, Elizabeth, and would have been here before but for a complication over a telegram. It seems there is another man of the same name in town."

"But Susie?"

He raised his hand impatiently.

"Never mind, Susie. I have gone through my probation and have done my work with all the strength that God gave me. Now I have come 10,000 miles for my reward—for you. If there is more work, bid me do it, but for charity's sake do not refuse your companionship in the labor."

She was not looking at him now. Her heart was too full for speech, almost for thought. A squirrel ran down a pillar of the veranda and sought her lap, and the oriole lifted up his voice in a sudden ecstasy of song.

Then the gate clicked, and she roused herself with an effort. A young man whom she did not know stood before her, and with him was Susie.

"I've brought him at last, Miss Dunning," the girl cried merrily. "But I just had to drag him, he's so bashful. Mr. Gray, this is the Sunday school teacher I've told you about." Then, disregarding further formality and with bubbling gladness in her voice: "An' oh, say, Miss Dunning, we've coaxed him to stay with us for good and all. He's goin' to open a grocery next the post office." Here she caught sight of the gray haired, sootily figure in the background and stopped in sudden confusion.

Lost His "Mr." For a man of mature years to have the distinction of Mr. removed from his name would no doubt be a severe punishment. Yet this was what the Puritans inflicted on Josias Plaisance, and all because he stole four baskets of corn from the Indians. And then after poor Josias was Mister no longer the hard hearted founders of Massachusetts were not satisfied, but fined him £5 and made him return eight baskets of corn to the offending red men in place of the four he had taken.—Minneapolis Journal.

MISS JULIE FLORENCE WALSH

WOMEN SUFFER

Many women suffer in silence and drift along from bad to worse, knowing well that they ought to have immediate assistance.

How many women do you know who are perfectly well and strong? The cause may be easily traced to some feminine derangement which manifests itself in depression of spirits, reluctance to go anywhere or do anything, backache, dragging sensations, flatulency, nervousness, and sleeplessness.

These symptoms are but warnings that there is danger ahead, and unless heeded, a life of suffering or a serious operation is the inevitable result. The best remedy for all these symptoms is made from native roots and herbs. No other medicine in the country has received such widespread and unqualified endorsement. No other medicine has such a record of cures of female ills.

Miss J. F. Walsh, of 325 W. 36th St., New York City, writes:—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been of inestimable value in restoring my health. I suffered from female illness which caused dreadful headaches, dizziness, and dull pains in my back, but your medicine soon brought about a change in my general condition, built me up and made me perfectly well."

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cures Female Complaints, such as Backache, Falling and Displacements, Inflammation and Ulceration, and organic diseases. It is invaluable in preparing for child-birth and during the Change of Life. It cures Nervous Prostration, Headache, General Debility, and invigorates the whole system.

Mrs. Pinkham's Standing Invitation to Women

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to write Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free.

JOHN C. HOVEY,
Collector of Taxes for the Town of Winchester.

June 27, 1907.

John Knox as a Prophet.

John Knox, the reformer, would seem to have possessed in no ordinary degree the spirit of prediction and to have foretold with accuracy not only certain remarkable events of public importance, but also the ultimate fate of certain individuals. Thus when condemned to the galleys at Rochelle he took his sentence with the greatest composure, merely remarking that in spite of it he would "within two or three years preach the gospel in St. Giles, Edinburgh." This prediction, most improbable of accomplishment at the time it was uttered, was afterward literally fulfilled. Knox predicted with accuracy the deaths of Thomas Maitland and Kierkegaard of Grange and solemnly warned the regent, Murray, not to go to Linnhous, as if he did so he would there meet his death. The regent disregarded the warning and did meet with the fate of which Knox had forewarned him.

VERMONT IN . . .
SUMMER TIME

Central Vermont Railway
Has Issued Handsome
Book Telling About It.

Always early in the field with its warm weather literature the passenger department of the Central Vermont Railway has just issued its 1907 edition of "Summer Homes," which is sent for 50 cents on application to T. H. HANLEY, N. E. P., 360 Washington St., Boston. The book describes the beautiful scenes around the green hills of Vermont and among the shores of Lake Champlain, is handsomely illustrated and includes lists of hotels and of family homes which are recommended to pleasure and health seekers, excursion fares, maps, and such essential information as will enable the "don't know" tourist to arrive at a decision.

Nervous
Indigestion

The action of digestion is controlled by nerves leading to the stomach. When they are weak, the stomach is deprived of its energy. It has no power to do its work. If you want permanent relief, you must restore this energy. Dr. Miles' Nervine restores nervous energy, and gives the organs power to perform their functions.

"For many years I was an acute sufferer from nervous indigestion, at times I was so despondent life seemed almost a burden. I tried all kinds of remedies and various physicians with little or no relief, until one night last summer I saw Dr. Miles' Nervine and Heart Cure advertised. I resolved to make one more trial which I did in the purchase of one bottle of Nervine and one of Heart Cure. In a few days I began to feel better, which encouraged me so much that I continued the medicine until I had taken more than a dozen bottles. I am very much improved in every way, in body, mind and spirits since. I make a special point to recommend the medicine, and I feel a sincere pleasure in knowing that several persons have been benefited through my recommendations."

A. S. MELTON, Asheville, N. C.

Dr. Miles' Nervine is sold by your druggist who will tell you where the first bottle will benefit. If it fails, he will refund your money.

Leibnitz and the Alchemists.

Leibnitz, one of the great men of literature, who died in 1716, wished to join a society of alchemists who were prosecuting a search for the philosopher's stone. He compiled a letter from the writings of the most celebrated alchemists and sent it to the society. The letter consisted of the most obscure terms he could find, and he himself, he said, did not understand a word of it. Afraid to be thought ignorant, the society invited him to its meetings and made him secretary.—Argonaut.

Her Poem.

"Oh, George," she exclaimed, "now that you've seen my new hat you simply can't regret that I got it! Isn't it just a poem?"

"Well, if it is," replied John, "I suppose a proper title for it would be 'Owed to a Milliner.'"—Philadelphia Press.

Taintor of Medford who owns land at Montvale which is desired by Boston parties for burial purposes, and the city council of Woburn will give a hearing July 22 on her petition for the right to dispose of it for the use set forth. This land in all probability is to be used for an enlargement of the present Jewish cemetery, which is situated partly in Winchester and partly in Woburn. This cemetery was enabled to be established here through a vote of the town of Winchester releasing land for burial purposes some few years ago. A request for additional land about a year ago was refused.

Half of double house at Highlands, 8 rooms, all modern conveniences. Apply to Philip J. Blank,

THE HIGHLAND SCHOOL LOT.

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

Dear Sir,—
In a recent issue of your paper I noticed a reference to the condition of the Highland School grounds. Some years ago, while a member of the Appropriations Committee, I urged upon that committee, and also I think in open meeting of the town, the advisability of doing just what you recommend, namely, to reserve so much of that lot as is necessary for a school lot, not only for a primary school, but for a four or eight room building, if one should ever be needed there. Then let the town sell what remains, using the proceeds for the reduction of the debt or for such other purposes as may be deemed expedient.
It would seem to me that this is a sensible and businesslike proposition for the town to entertain. Here is a lot of valuable land, in a very desirable locality, which is now not only worthless, but in its present untidy and unfinished condition a detriment to the neighborhood. Some excellent lots could be disposed of. These would be built upon and taxable property brought into existence,—all of which would tend to help us out from a financial as well as an aesthetic point of view.
I hope that both the Selectmen and Appropriations Committee will look into this matter, and if such a course seems to meet with their approval that they will have an article inserted in the warrant for our next annual town meeting for the purpose of carrying out this suggestion which you have recently made.
Sincerely yours,
LEWIS PARKHURST.

SUB-MASTER ELLIOTT GOES TO WORCESTER.

Mr. Robert T. Elliott, sub-master at the High school, has accepted an advanced position in the schools of Worcester as teacher of history in the Classical High school of that place. Mr. Elliott is at present stopping at New London, Ct., with his wife, and beyond a short visit in August, necessary to moving to Worcester, will not be in town again this year.
During Mr. Elliott's term of service in the High school both he and Mrs. Elliott made many friends, all of whom will be sorry to learn of their removal to another city. As a master in the High school he was one of the most popular the town has had yet, and he filled his position with marked satisfaction, both to pupils and parents.
While sorry to leave Winchester, Mr. Elliott felt that the change held more in future benefit for him, and therefore sent his resignation to the school committee this week.

THE BAND CONCERT.

The very excellent band concert on Manchester Field last Saturday afternoon was very slimly attended. There was a big crowd on the field during the ball game, but as soon as this was over they left the field. Unless one is near the band stand the music is lost.
The sound does not get much beyond the roof of the stand. A sounding board could be so arranged as to throw the music away from the stand, which would have a tendency to make these concerts more popular. As it is now the sound is held in the rafters, but if these were boarded over the result might be different.
The people who did hear the concert took much enjoyment in listening to the sweet music, but concerts and base ball do not mix well together. Music in the evening would draw a larger crowd, and a change should be tried.
Publicity in the surrounding towns would also tend to draw more people here. And the STAR would suggest that the programs be printed in the local papers of adjacent towns.

FIRE WAS IN STOVE.

On Sunday morning at church time an alarm of fire from Box 48 aroused considerable excitement in the centre. The excitement was turned to amusement, however, when the alarm was found to have been sounded for a fire in a kitchen stove.
It appears that a resident of Cabot street saw smoke rising from the house of Mr. Walter Cummings, which family is away and their house closed. The fact, when telephoned to the fire station, brought out the entire apparatus.
In the meanwhile investigation revealed that a gentleman connected with the family was stopping in the house, having entered the night before unseen. It was his early (?) fire which caused the smoke and subsequent alarm.

VACATION SCHOOL.

More Applicants than can be Provided For.

The Work Being Performed by The Fortnightly and Teachers.

To one who has never visited a vacation school the occasion is a very interesting one and well worth the time and trouble. The Winchester school is well under way at the Chapin schoolhouse at present and has a membership of about 140 altogether—and a nearly full regular attendance. The age limit is twelve years, none over that age being admitted and the youngest is three years. The pupils are selected by the teachers of the Rumford, Chapin and Washington schools, the most deserving being given preference. They are given an application card filled out by their regular school teacher and upon entering the vacation school receive a day card, or attendance card, with their name on it and this is punched by the teacher every day the pupil attends. At the close of the season, each pupil who has not missed a session receives a little gift. The sessions are from 9 until 12 each day, except Saturday which is a holiday. A large number of applicants to the school were turned away, as the fund for this purpose, kindly contributed by The Fortnightly, was not sufficient for a larger membership. The sessions are opened by the two older classes meeting together for music and morning talks lasting about twenty minutes. The girls not at basket work then go into another room.

The first room visited was that of the older pupils, boys and girls, and it was a very industrious lot of children we saw. The principal occupation is basketry and cane-seating chairs. The pupils use cane and reeds and fancy wooden beads and some beautiful work is executed by these young children, who sell the articles made by them. A table is also furnished with baskets which will be for sale at the meetings of The Fortnightly in the fall.
The oldest girls are taught sewing, principally darning and mending, and also paper work, such as shades, frames, etc. Very good material is furnished all who wish to make it into garments to wear. We saw a number of girls at work on very pretty petticoats for themselves for next winter, and for diversion pretty bags, holders, sofa pillows, etc.

The next room the Kindergarten, children from four to six years were amusing themselves under three instructors and numbered thirty-five, by marching, music, playing with colors and shapes, beads, etc., and in fact doing what their pleasure called for. The little tots were in the Nursery and were all of them very young. These have all kinds of toys to play with and their teachers tell them stories and do anything to amuse them. In the middle of the forenoon each child is given a cup of good milk during the recreation period of about twenty minutes which is spent inside or out of the building. The children were all very neat, most of them showing that particular attention had been paid to their neatness—most all of the little one were in fresh white dresses and were an attractive lot of children.

The number of pupils attending this year is greater than that of last, owing to a larger donation by the Club. This is the first season the scholars have received the milk and as the fund will not permit of furnishing it all the season, and the children like it, contributions to this feature will be greatly appreciated by the committee. Sums of any amount for

CONSIDERED AN INDIGNITY.

Mayor Blodgett's second quarterly report on Woburn affairs, is receiving much attention in that city, and his interpretation of the section of the Jonathan Tidd bequest that related to the high school scholarship has been subjected to much comment.
The mayor's assertion that Principal Owen claimed "there was no boy in the class worthy to receive the gift," is considered by some the greatest indignity that the school system, the teachers' staff and scholars have received since the days of the little red school house, says the Woburn Times.

Either the terms of the gifts are too exacting or else there is something wrong with the school system of Woburn is apparent. Probably the fault lies in the requirements of the former.

GIFT TO HIGH SCHOOL.

Mr. George L. Huntress has presented to the Winchester High School a large picture of Yale University. We understand that there are similar pictures of many of our other large colleges and the example set by Mr. Huntress, who is a Yale graduate, is one worthy to be followed by other Winchester college men.

milk will be received by Mrs. Henry Stone, Mrs. Jotham Woods and at the STAR office and donations will be acknowledged. Also gifts of toys, books and games will be appreciated.

Different members of The Fortnightly give their time and service here all summer assisting the teachers in their work. Mrs. Henry Stone and Mrs. Jotham Woods are The Fortnightly Committee and the teachers are: Miss Elizabeth Collins principal, who is also a teacher in the Hanscom intermediate school of Somerville; Miss Foley of Natick teacher of basketry, who is also a teacher in the grammar school of Cohasset; Misses Grace and Frances Doherty Kindergarten and Miss Mary Doherty the nursery. 2ND BAPTIST SOCIETY TO ERECT NEW BUILDING.

The 2d Baptist Society (colored) are to have a new church home on Winchester street near Swanton street, ground for which was broken Monday. The dimensions of the new building are to be 27x43 with pitch roof. In addition to the auditorium there will be a kitchen, pantry library and the necessary closets. It is expected that the edifice will be ready for occupancy in the fall, that is if the funds now on hand hold out. Should there be a shortage of money the members hope the work will be carried to completion through subscriptions from the public.

The Society has been holding its religious services for several years in Waterfield Hall and has a membership of over twenty-five, in addition to a growing number of children who attend the Sunday School. The pastor is Rev. G. F. Coles and he is very earnest and hopeful in securing the new house of worship and in greatly increasing the present membership.

The officers of the church are: Moses D. Glenn and Joseph Whitlock, deacons; William Jones and Chester Fitzgerald, Church Committee; W. M. S. Richardson, secretary; Joseph Whitlock, treasurer. Building committee, Joseph Whitlock, Moses D. Glenn and Chester Fitzgerald.

A VISIT FOR A WARM DAY.

Where Winchester Youths Disport Themselves in Mystic Lake.

One of the interesting sights on Mystic lake these days is the swimming beach on the boulevard. The place is called "sandy beach," and offers an ideal swimming place, for the large number of small boys who frequent it daily. Situated in the northeast corner of the big lake, protected by a high bank and large shady trees, it makes a smooth, sloping beach of good sand, which is ideal for the young bathers. To view this beach at this season on a sunny afternoon is well worth the walk down the boulevard. It is a scene of life and animation which nothing but the American small boy can produce.

A raft, securely anchored in waist deep water, furnishes a basis of excitement for some twenty-five fearless little urchins, who have a glorious time, diving, jumping, taking "governor's seats" and slyly giving each other an unexpected ducking. The surrounding water is also a constantly changing picture—here one standing on his head beneath the waves, there a crowd of six holding hands and trying to swim on their backs, while water wings and life preservers furnish amusement to many others.

The beach is covered with a constantly changing crowd, who play ball, turn hand-springs and play tag to their hearts content, the thick willow trees in the back ground opening and closing, swallowing up and disgorging small boys in various stages of dress.

Every afternoon from 100 to 150 boys enjoy a swim at this place, watched over by a park policeman, who sees that there is no bullying by the big boys and that there are no accidents. A boat is provided for the officer, anchored in the midst of the activities, and his craft is the center of attraction for the smaller boys, who hang about the sides, and even take an occasional "dive" from its stern.

During a visit on Wednesday afternoon we did not witness a single note of discord for our stay of over an hour, the 138 boys obeying the officer when first spoken to without hesitation, and the friendliness between them being marked. For a picture of pure, unadulterated joy and pleasure it was one of the best we have ever witnessed.

Two bath houses are now under construction, one for the boys and one for the girls—for a few girls are also found here, having one corner of the beach to themselves. All the bathers are under 15 years of age, the officer in charge having orders to forbid adults from bathing there.

We consider the opening of this beach by the Metropolitan commission for bathing to be one of the greatest boons to the smaller boys of Winchester that the town has ever had, not excepting the playground. The only drawback is the long walk of almost two miles necessary to reach it. But then, what boy wouldn't walk even five miles for the sake of a swim.

MYSTIC VALLEY TROLLEY CLUB.

The second excursion for 1907 was on Thursday, July 18. Starting from the Centre on the 6:30 Reading car, change was made at Reading to the Lawrence car, which brought the party to Andover square at 8:10. Here the Hillsdale avenue car was taken for Haverhill by way of North Andover and Ward's Hill. At Haverhill bridge the party took the Black Rocks boat, leaving at 9:10, passing down the Merrimack river on a two hours' trip. At Black Rocks the ancient trolley car with trailer attached carried 75 paying passengers and several children under 5 years to Salisbury Beach reaching the Cushing House at 11:30. Dinner was served promptly at 12:10 to a very hungry crowd. At 1:45 start was made on the homeward trip on a Haverhill car via Salisbury, Amesbury and Merrimack, arriving in Haverhill at 3:30.

Car for Lawrence was taken at 3:45 via the short line of South N. H. R. R. This is a smooth and rapid ride. In Lawrence B. & N. car carried the party to the top of Andover Hill and after a short rest, the through car for Sullivan Square was used to Reading and then the Arlington car at 6 o'clock from Reading. It was a very warm and muggy day, but only at one point, the boat landing at Black Rocks was the party very uncomfortable.

There were eleven members present: George S. Littlefield, George W. Payne, George F. Parker, George H. Carter, Henry C. Miller, Frederick J. Brown, Albert F. Baisdell, J. Winslow Richardson, Charles W. Bradstreet, James H. Winn, Henry C. Bagley. The next trip is on Thursday, July 25, 1907, to Nantasket.

ON THE INCREASE.

Tax Rate for Winchester Has Reached the $17.80 Mark.

The Highest Figure in the History of the Town.

The Assessors announce that the tax rate for this year will be $17.80, a gain over last year of 20 cents, when the rate was $17.60. This is believed to be the highest rate yet reached in the history of Winchester, and indications point to even still higher figures for the future. This increase is not altogether due, by any means, to local expenditures, but to the advances in State, county, park, sewer and moth taxes over which the town has no control whatever. Winchester in the management of its affairs has been economical. The constant increases are beginning to become burdensome to the taxpayers, especially that for the gypsy moths, which adds $1 to the rate and which promises to grow larger, as the pest continues to persist in flourishing despite all efforts. Winchester is not the only place that is beginning to feel the burden of the advance from year to year, for every city and town in the Metropolitan district in experiencing the same thing. We are said to be living in a progressive age, but to the minds of many of the heavy taxpayers they consider it an age of extravagance. It seems so, anyway.

Our Assessors have resorted to every expedient in their power this year and in the past in order to keep the rate down by increasing valuations and adding on wherever possible, but it is now believed they have reached the limit, and that nothing can prevent further increases except rigid economy on the part of the State, county, park and other outside departments.

In 1897 the rate was $15.40 on a low valuation, and since that time by easy stages and increasing valuation it rose to $17.60 in 1906. Of course no one will dispute the fact that Winchester is receiving considerable for this assessment in good roads, schools, sewer, water, library, fire department and many other things, that go to make life worth the living, yet the people fail to view with pleasure the increasing rates.

The Assessors were called upon to raise $7000 more than last year. The total tax levy for this year is about $200,000, while in 1895, twelve short years ago, it was $106,440, and the tax rate $15. At that period the valuation was $6,800,000, while now it is about $4,000,000 more,—a pretty good increase.

SELECTMEN'S MEETING.

July 15th, 1907.

Board met at 7:30 p. m.
Present: Messrs. Richards, Barnard and Winn.

D. F. Murphy called in regard to repairs on sidewalk on the upper end of Mason street; was told that work had been ordered.

Patrick Mogan of Woburn called and complained of the spraying of standing hay or grass belonging to him on the Lombard property on Wildwood street. Voted to grant an auctioneers license to W. H. Gorham, 27 Eaton street, to April 1st, 1908.

Voted that the Town Counsel be instructed to request the Boston & Maine R. R. to rebuild the Cross street bridge in accordance with the lines of the street as laid out by the County Commissioners. Voted that James Callahan, night watchman for Beggs & Cobb, be granted permission to carry a loaded revolver.

Voted that the Selectmen approve the salary of the Inspector of Plumbing as fixed by the Board of Health, at the rate of $500 per annum from March 1st, 1907, to May 1st, 1907, and $300 per annum after May 1st.

Letter of N. B. Nutt in regard to hole in sidewalk in front of No. 3 Pine street, referred to the Supt. of Streets to fix if necessary.

Voted to write the Boston & Northern St. Ry. Co., that the Selectmen wish them to lay new rails on Washington street, from the switch in front of the Baptist Church, to the Stoneham line; such rails to be satisfactory to the Selectmen. Warrant drawn for $1073.61. Adjourned at 10:00 p. m.

A SERIOUS MENACE TO LIFE.

A young lady died in North Reading recently from the effects, according to the physicians who attended her, of eating, a few days previous to her death, a quantity of blueberries that had been sprayed with arsenate of lead. This moth destroyer is used on public and private property and infested woodlands. The chemical is sprayed on trees, bushes, etc., and due care should be used and the children warned by their parents, and the latter should take special precaution to thoroughly wash green stuffs and berries.

Many cattle and smaller animals have succumbed to this preparation this year, and many mysterious ailments—mainly of the stomach have been reported from eating green stuffs and berries.

This poison has also been used extensively along roadsides where there are many blackberry and other bushes of a similar nature, and great caution should be used in picking berries at such places.

PRATT—HARRINGTON.

Miss Lena Harrington, one of the most popular young ladies in the city of Woburn, was married on Tuesday evening, at 7 o'clock, to Frank LeRoy Pratt of Cambridge street, this town, a prominent member of the Winchester Boat Club. The ceremony was performed at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. Cyril Brown, Jr., 10 Beach street, Woburn, by Rev. H. C. Parker, pastor of the Unitarian Church. The house parlors were prettily decorated in green and white, the work of the members of the Alpha Alpha Chi club of which Miss Harrington was a member. About the grounds were strung Japanese lanterns.

To the strains of the wedding march played by Miss Helen Deland, the bridal party entered the parlor through the ribbon aisles held in place by two pretty little misses, Barbara Pratt of Winchester, and Freda Walker of Burlington. Claudine Tebbetts of Stoneham, a cousin of the bride, was flower girl.

The bride wore white embroidered net over white taffeta, her veil caught up with orange blossoms. Her only ornament was a pearl pendant, the gift of the groom.

Miss Bertha Hanson of Peabody, was maid of honor, wearing a gown of pink net over pink taffeta. Three members of the Alpha Alpha Chi club, Miss Louise A. Wyman, Miss Bertha B. Smith and Miss Maud E. Leathe of Woburn, with Miss Edith E. Willard of Lexington, cousin of the bride, were bridesmaids, wearing pink and white embroidered muslin.

James Newman of Winchester, was best man.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at 19 Beach street, from 8 to 10 o'clock, the couple being assisted in receiving by Mr. and Mrs. Cyril Brown, Jr. The ushers were Walter Eaton, Woburn, Levi Jennings, Wellesley Hills; Drury Sheratan, Boston; John William Little, Winchester.

The couple will be at home after September 1st, at 19 Beach street.

Miss Lena Harrington is a daughter of Charles H. Harrington of 35 Franklin street, Woburn, chairman of the board of registrars of voters and secretary of the Republican city committee. Miss Harrington graduated from Woburn High school in 1900, from Lowell Normal school in 1902, and has since been teaching school, last year in Beverly. The groom is the son of Frank Pratt of Cambridge street, this town. He is an enthusiastic canoeist and this summer was coach of the Winchester four, which paddled for the Lawson trophy.

Patrolman Dotten will return Monday from his annual vacation and office Harrold will start on his two weeks' of

THE HIGHLAND SCHOOL LOT.

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

Dear Sir:—
In a recent issue of your paper I noticed a reference to the condition of the Highland School grounds. Some years ago, while a member of the Appropriations Committee, I urged upon that committee, and also I think in open meeting of the town, the advisability of doing just what you recommend, namely, to reserve so much of that lot as is necessary for a school lot, not only for a primary school, but for a four or eight room building, if one should ever be needed there. Then let the town sell what remains, using the proceeds for the reduction of the debt or for such other purposes as may be deemed expedient.

It would seem to me that this is a sensible and businesslike proposition for the town to entertain. Here is a lot of valuable land, in a very desirable locality, which is now not only worthless, but in its present untidy and unfinished condition a detriment to the neighborhood. Some excellent lots could be disposed of. These would be built upon and taxable property brought into existence,—all of which would tend to help us out from a financial as well as an aesthetic point of view.

I hope that both the Selectmen and Appropriations Committee will look into this matter, and if such a course seems to meet with their approval that they will have an article inserted in the warrant for our next annual town meeting for the purpose of carrying out this suggestion which you have recently made.

Sincerely yours,
LEWIS PARKHURST.

SUB-MASTER ELLIOTT GOES TO WORCESTER.

Mr. Robert T. Elliott, sub-master at the High school, has accepted an advanced position in the schools of Worcester as teacher of history in the Classical High school of that place. Mr. Elliott is at present stopping at New London, Ct., with his wife, and beyond a short visit in August, necessary to moving to Worcester, will not be in town again this year.

During Mr. Elliott's term of service in the High school both he and Mrs. Elliott made many friends, all of whom will be sorry to learn of their removal to another city. As a master in the High school he was one of the most popular the town has had yet, and he filled his position with marked satisfaction, both to pupils and parents.

While sorry to leave Winchester, Mr. Elliott felt that the change held more in future benefit for him, and therefore sent his resignation to the school committee this week.

THE BAND CONCERT.

The very excellent band concert on Manchester Field last Saturday afternoon was very slimly attended. There was a big crowd on the field during the ball game, but as soon as this was over they left the field. Unless one is near the band stand the music is lost.

The sound does not get much beyond the roof of the stand. A sounding board could be so arranged as to throw the music away from the stand, which would have a tendency to make these concerts more popular. As it is now the sound is held in the rafters, but if these were boarded over the result might be different.

The people who did hear the concert took much enjoyment in listening to the sweet music, but concerts and base ball do not mix well together. Music in the evening would draw a larger crowd, and a change should be tried.

Publicity in the surrounding towns would also tend to draw more people here. And the STAR would suggest that the programs be printed in the local papers of adjacent towns.

FIRE WAS IN STOVE.

On Sunday morning at church time an alarm of fire from Box 48 aroused considerable excitement in the centre. The excitement was turned to amusement, however, when the alarm was found to have been sounded for a fire in a kitchen stove.

It appears that a resident of Cabot street saw smoke rising from the house of Mr. Walter Cummings, which family is away and their house closed. The fact, when telephoned to the fire station, brought out the entire apparatus.

In the meanwhile investigation revealed that a gentleman connected with the family was stopping in the house, having entered the night before unseen. It was his early (3) fire which caused the smoke and subsequent alarm.

SUNDAY SCHOOL OUTING.

The fourth annual outing of the New Hope Baptist S. S. to Milligan's Grove, Wilmington, will take place Thursday, July 25, of next week. Leave the centre at 8.30 a. m.

VACATION SCHOOL.

More Applicants than can be Provided For.

The Work Being Performed by The Fortnightly and Teachers.

To one who has never visited a vacation school the occasion is a very interesting one and well worth the time and trouble. The Winchester school is well under way at the Chapin schoolhouse at present and has a membership of about 140 altogether—and a nearly full regular attendance. The age limit is twelve years, none over that age being admitted and the youngest is three years. The pupils are selected by the teachers of the Rumford, Chapin and Washington schools, the most deserving being given preference. They are given an application card filled out by their regular school teacher and upon entering the vacation school receive a day card, or attendance card, with their name on it and this is punched by the teacher every day the pupil attends. At the close of the season, each pupil who has not missed a session receives a little gift. The sessions are from 9 until 12 each day, except Saturday which is a holiday. A large number of applicants to the school were turned away, as the fund for this purpose, kindly contributed by The Fortnightly, was not sufficient for a larger membership. The sessions are opened by the two older classes meeting together for music and morning talks lasting about twenty minutes. The girls not at basket work then go into another room.

The first room visited was that of the older pupils, boys and girls, and it was a very industrious lot of children we saw. The principal occupation is basketry and cane-seating chairs. The pupils use cane and reeds and fancy wooden beads and some beautiful work is executed by these young children, who sell the articles made by them. A table is also furnished with baskets which will be for sale at the meetings of The Fortnightly in the fall.

The oldest girls are taught sewing, principally darning and mending, and also paper work, such as shades, frames, etc. Very good material is furnished all who wish to make it into garments to wear. We saw a number of girls at work on very pretty petticoats for themselves for next winter, and for diversion pretty bags, holders, sofa pillows, etc.

The next room the Kindergarten, children from four to six years were amusing themselves under three instructors and numbered thirty-five, by marching, music, playing with colors and shapes, beads, etc., and in fact doing what their pleasure called for. The little tots were in the Nursery and were all of them very young. These have all kinds of toys to play with and their teachers tell them stories and do anything to amuse them. In the middle of the forenoon each child is given a cup of good milk during the recreation period of about twenty minutes which is spent inside or out of the building. The children were all very neat, most of them showing that particular attention had been paid to their neatness—most all of the little one were in fresh white dresses and were an attractive lot of children.

The number of pupils attending this year is greater than that of last, owing to a larger donation by the Club. This is the first season the scholars have received the milk and as the fund will not permit of furnishing it all the season, and the children like it, contributions to this feature will be greatly appreciated by the committee. Sums of any amount for milk will be received by Mrs. Henry Stone, Mrs. Jotham Woods and at the STAR office and donations will be acknowledged. Also gifts of toys, books and games will be appreciated.

Different members of The Fortnightly give their time and service here all summer assisting the teachers in their work. Mrs. Henry Stone and Mrs. Jotham Woods are The Fortnightly Committee and the teachers are: Miss Elizabeth Collins principal, who is also a teacher in the Hanscom intermediate school of Somerville; Miss Foley of Natick teacher of basketry, who is also a teacher in the grammar school of Cohasset; Misses Grace and Frances Doherty Kindergarten and Miss Mary Doherty nursery. These are all assisted by day volunteers. The following are the names of the more advanced classes.

CONSIDERED AN INDIGNITY.

Mayor Biddgett's second quarterly report on Woburn affairs, is receiving much jattention in that city, and his interpretation of the section of the Jonathan Tidd bequest that related to the high school scholarship has been subjected to much comment.

The mayor's assertion that Principal Owen claimed "there was no boy in the class worthy to receive the gift," is considered by some the greatest indignity that the school system, the teachers' staff and scholars have received since the days of the little red school house, says the Woburn Times.

Either the terms of the gifts are too exacting or else there is something wrong with the school system of Woburn is apparent. Probably the fault lies in the requirements of the former.

GIFT TO HIGH SCHOOL.

Mr. George L. Huntress has presented to the Winchester High School a large picture of Yale University. We understand that there are similar pictures of many of our other large colleges and the example set by Mr. Huntress, who is a Yale graduate, is one worthy to be followed by other Winchester college men.

2ND BAPTIST SOCIETY TO ERECT NEW BUILDING.

The 2d Baptist Society (colored) are to have a new church home on Winchester street near Swanton street, ground for which was broken Monday. The dimensions of the new building are to be 27x43 with porch roof. In addition to the auditorium there will be a kitchen, pantry library and the necessary closets. It is expected that the edifice will be ready for occupancy in the fall, that is if the funds now on hand hold out. Should there be a shortage of money the members hope the work will be carried to completion through subscriptions from the public.

The Society has been holding its religious services for several years in Waterfield Hall and has a membership of over twenty-five, in addition to a growing number of children who attend the Sunday School. The pastor is Rev. G. F. Coles and he is very earnest and hopeful in securing the new house of worship and in greatly increasing the present membership.

The officers of the church are: Moses D. Glenn and Joseph Whitlock, deacons; William Jones and Chester Fitzgerald, Church Committee; W. M. S. Richardson, secretary; Joseph Whitlock, treasurer. Building committee, Joseph Whitlock, Moses D. Glenn and Chester Fitzgerald.

A VISIT FOR A WARM DAY.

Where Winchester Youths Disport Themselves in Mystic Lake.

One of the interesting sights on Mystic lake these days is the swimming beach on the boulevard. The place is called "sandy beach," and offers an ideal swimming place, for the large number of small boys who frequent it daily. Situated in the northeast corner of the big lake, protected by a high bank and large shady trees, it makes a smooth, sloping beach of good sand, which is ideal for the young bathers. To view this beach at this season on a sunny afternoon is well worth the walk down the boulevard. It is a scene of life and animation which nothing but the American small boy can produce.

A raft, securely anchored in waist deep water, furnishes a basis of excitement for some twenty-five fearless little urchins, who have a glorious time, diving, jumping, taking "governor's seats" and slyly giving each other an unexpected ducking.

The surrounding water is also a constantly changing picture—here one standing on his head beneath the waves, there a crowd of six holding hands and trying to swim on their backs, while water wings and life preservers furnish amusement to many others.

The beach is covered with a constantly changing crowd, who play ball, turn hand-springs and play tag to their hearts content, the thick willow trees in the back ground opening and closing, swallowing up and disgorging small boys in various stages of dress.

Every afternoon from 100 to 150 boys enjoy a swim at this place, watched over by a park policeman, who sees that there is no bullying by the big boys and that there are no accidents. A boat is provided for the officer, anchored in the midst of the activities, and his craft is the center of attraction for the smaller boys, who hang about the sides, and even take an occasional "dive" from its stern.

During a visit on Wednesday afternoon we did not witness a single note of discord for our stay of over an hour, the 138 boys obeying the officer when first spoken to without hesitation, and the friendliness between them being marked. For a picture of pure, unadulterated joy and pleasure it was one of the best we have ever witnessed.

Two bath houses are now under construction, one for the boys and one for the girls—for a few girls are also found here, having one corner of the beach to themselves. All the bathers are under 15 years of age, the officer in charge having orders to forbid adults from bathing there.

We consider the opening of this beach by the Metropolitan commission for bathing to be one of the greatest boons to the smaller boys of Winchester that the town has ever had, not excepting the playground. The only drawback is the long walk of almost two miles necessary to reach it. But then, what boy wouldn't walk even five miles for the sake of a swim.

MYSTIC VALLEY

TROLLEY CLUB.

The second excursion for 1907 was on Thursday, July 18. Starting from the Centre on the 6.30 Reading car, change was made at Reading to the Lawrence car, which brought the party to Andover square at 8.10. Here the Hillsdale avenue car was taken for Haverhill by way of North Andover and Ward's Hill. At Haverhill bridge the party took the Black Rocks boat, leaving at 9.10, passing down the Merrimack river on a two hours' trip. At Black Rocks the ancient trolley car with trailer attached carried 75 paying passengers and several children under 5 years to Salisbury Beach reaching the Cushing House at 11.30. Dinner was served promptly at 12 to a very hungry crowd. At 1.45 start was made on the homeward trip on a Haverhill car via Salisbury, Amesbury and Merrimack, arriving in Haverhill at 3.30.

Car for Lawrence was taken at 3.45 via the short line of South N. H. R. R. This is a smooth and rapid ride. In Lawrence B. & N. car carried the party to the top of Andover Hill and after a short rest, the through car for Sullivan Square was used to Reading and then the Arlington car at 6 o'clock from Reading. It was a very warm and muggy day, but only at one point, the boat landing at Black Rocks was the party very uncomfortable.

There were eleven members present: George S. Littlefield, George W. Payne, George F. Parker, George H. Carter, Henry C. Miller, Frederick J. Brown, Albert F. Blaisdell, J. Winslow Richardson, Charles W. Bradstreet, James H. Winn, Henry C. Bagley. The next trip is on Thursday, July 25, 1907, to Nantasket.

HAS TAKEN AGENCY.

Mr. Robert F. Whitney has taken the Winchester agency for the Ford motor cars and runabouts. These are among the highest grade machines on the market, and can be depended upon at critical times. Anyone contemplating purchasing, should consult Mr. Whitney.

ON THE INCREASE.

Tax Rate for Winchester Has Reached the $17.80 Mark.

The Highest Figure in the History of the Town.

The Assessors announce that the tax rate for this year will be $17.80, a gain over last year of 20 cents, when the rate was $17.60. This is believed to be the highest rate yet reached in the history of Winchester, and indications point to even still higher figures for the future. This increase is not altogether due, by any means, to local expenditures, but to the advances in State, county, park, sewer and moth taxes over which the town has no control whatever. Winchester in the management of its affairs has been economical. The constant increases are beginning to become burdensome to the taxpayers, especially that for the gypsy moths, which adds $1 to the rate and which promises to grow larger, as the pest continues to persist in flourishing despite all efforts. Winchester is not the only place that is beginning to feel the burden of the advance from year to year, for every city and town in the Metropolitan district in experiencing the same thing. We are said to be living in a progressive age, but to the minds of many of the heavy taxpayers they consider it an age of extravagance. It seems so, anyway.

Our Assessors have resorted to every expedient in their power this year and in the past in order to keep the rate down by increasing valuations and adding on wherever possible, but it is now believed they have reached the limit, and that nothing can prevent further increases except rigid economy on the part of the State, county, park and other outside departments.

The Assessors were called upon to raise $7000 more than last year. The total tax levy for this year is about $200,000, while in 1895, twelve short years ago, it was $106,440, and the tax rate $15. At that period the valuation was $6,800,000, while now it is about $4,000,000 more,—a pretty good increase.

HOPEDALE'S PROGRESS.

Home and Factory Conditions a Factor in Life of the Town.

The Draper Company has Always Shown the Deepest Interest in the Town's Development.

Millford Journal Series.

The impressions that a visitor gets of Hopedale and its people are not those of the ordinary factory-town population. They are a prosperous, home-loving people who have a common interest in the development and progress of the town. They have had better opportunities than most people, and have used them to good advantage. One looks in vain for the signs of want and misery usually found in large manufacturing communities.

The location of Hopedale is ideal, a moderately elevated slope which has numerous swells and hollows constitutes the residential section of the town. Nature provided much of the picturesque quality which lends charm to the place, and adjacent territory is agreeably diversified by dwarf woodland, cultivated fields, level uplands, and elegant estates.

As the general welfare of a town is due in a large measure to its industrial interest, so it is with Hopedale with its single industry known the world over as the Draper Company. The company has always shown the deepest interest in the town's development. What strikes the eye with special force is the uniform excellence of the houses and the high tone of their surroundings. These houses are owned by the Draper Company and occupied by its employees, yet their architecture and dimensions place them well within the conventional class of residences for business men or persons of professional pursuits. The company erects anywhere from five to fifty of this style of houses every year, and rents them to its employees for from $2.50 to $3.62 per week, inclusive of water and maintenance. Some of the houses built a few years ago are a little less imposing and rent for as low as $1.75 per week. Moreover, the company gives cash prizes aggregating $375 per year for the best kept lawns and gardens, which prove a most excellent incentive to conscientious care-taking, and the results clearly justify the efforts.

WINCHESTER DEFEATED.

Winchester A. A. was defeated by the St. Charles nine 2 to 0 in an uninteresting game on Manchester Field last Saturday afternoon. It was a pitchers' battle in which Byrne of the St. Charles had the better of his opponent, striking out ten men, not passing any and allowing only one scratch hit. The playing of Winchester was ragged at some of the critical periods and showed the want of team practice which the men had been unable to get. The St. Charles are always in good form and are an extremely strong aggregation of players and it is a wonder that Winchester held them down so close.

It was the best pitchers' battle seen on Manchester Field for many a day, but outside of this the game was nearly colorless.

Lovejoy, the Winchester pitcher, struck out eight men, passed three and allowed four hits. The score:

The approaching circus or animal show due in Wakefield next Tuesday recalls the story that out in Kansas the other day a "white elephant" party was given, and each woman who was invited was asked to bring something which was too good to be thrown away, but which she had no use for. But the party was not a success. Eleven women took their husbands—[Wakefield Item.]

HOW TREES HAVE BEEN INJURED.

The following was taken from the Medford Mercury of last week:

At last week's meeting of the board of aldermen Mayor Brewer transmitted copies of two interesting reports on the condition of the trees along the streets of Medford. One was a partial report of Professor H. L. Frost to the Malden and Melrose Gas Light company, and the other was a report of Richard Iverson, who is acting as city forester.

For the convenience of the general public the reports are here presented.

Professor Frost, under date of Arlington, June 10, says: "On Thursday, June 6, I made an examination of the trees in Medford, in company with Messrs. Bliss and Stiles of your company, and Mr. H. A. Hanscom, superintendent of the streets for the city of Medford and his forester."

"I had anticipated finding many of the trees in a rather weakened or dying condition, as is the case in very thickly populated cities or towns where the streets are macadamized, asphalted or paved and where the sidewalks are built of such material as would shed rather than absorb the water. Much to my surprise and consternation I found a very large number of trees, which to a casual observer were perfectly healthy, on close examination were so injured by various causes as to die within the next six months. These trees, many of them, I did not examine until after they had died would puzzle anyone to determine the cause."

"It was found that a large number of the maple trees in the section examined had been very seriously injured by the bark just above the ground being completely killed. There was a bend of this bark encircling the entire trunk ranging from two to five inches in width where it was entirely dead, this making the death of the tree an absolute certainty. This injury must have been caused within the last two years, as there has been sap enough during the present spring to throw out a full growth of foliage, but without doubt in most cases this foliage will be lost as soon as there is a protracted drought."

"The only possible thing that could be done to save the trees would be by bridge grafting, the chances of this being successful so small that I should not advise it. In the larger number of cases this injury has been caused by an excessive use of gas oil or some substance of this same nature. I found very few trees which I should say were in any way injured by gas, the great per cent. of the trees suffering from the effect of gas oil, starvation, crowding, bark injuries caused by horses and wagons passing over the exposed parts."

Mr. Iverson's report, dated June 26, on the street trees of some parts of Medford was as follows:

"Although the moth pest in Medford has been mostly suppressed with all energy, still the trees are in a pitiable state."

"Many valuable trees have been killed by careless application of gas oil as a cure against the moths, and these are only thin barked trees such as maples and beeches; whereas elm, linden and horse-chestnut trees are nearly all in good condition."

"Principally these trees were killed by gas oil, which came into use two years ago. A few trees were killed by immoderate use of creosote and Urica paste."

"In some streets gas was the cause which killed the trees and also some were choked by tree protectors. Through frost, trees were only damaged but not destroyed."

"Also there are some trees that have been destroyed and damaged by bare electric wires."

"Two maples on the corner of Water street and Forest street were destroyed by iron staples with which the insect catchers were fastened on."

"Without question, 90 per cent. of the trees have been destroyed by gas oil and by careful examination it could be clearly seen where the healthy bark started and how the gas oil had damaged it."

"The destruction of the trees by gas is come to pass by the roots being destroyed, and the decay is instant. These trees were destroyed one year ago, but still some trees are suffering yet from it. These could have been saved, if they had been treated in time last year. The most certain sign for trees, that were destroyed last year by gas, is that these trees have not sprouted out on the roots stock, which any maple will do if the roots are still in good condition. Therefore, it would be better not to cut these trees down yet, but to wait and see how many of them will sprout out. Accordingly it could be better found out which trees were destroyed by gas."

"In regard to the trees that have special insect catchers, I would urgently advise to take these down and then to fasten them on with a strong tarred string and only by mistimed tree trunks to fasten the band with galvanized iron or copper staples in a distance of any way three inches."

"Many of the trees can be saved by cutting out the wounds and using plaster of clay composition. Also these trees must all be cut back. This work must be started at once."

"By probable estimation from 350 to 375 damaged trees have been found up to

now. The treatment of these will cost nearly $250.

THE COUNTRY EDITOR.

Charles M. Harger has this to say of the country editor, in the course of an interesting article upon the country paper in the Atlantic Monthly:

After all no one man in the community has so large an opportunity to assist the town in advancement as the editor. It is not because he is smarter than others, not because he is wealthy—but because he is the spokesman to the outside world.

He is eager to print all the news in his own paper. Does he do it? Hardly. "This would be a very new paper," explained a frank country editor to his subscribers, "were it not for the fact that each of the four men who work on it has many friends. By the time all the items that might injure some of their friends are omitted very little is left."

So the country editor leaves out certain good things and certain bad things for the very simple reason that the persons most interested are close at hand and can find the individual responsible for the statements. He becomes wise in his generation and avoids chastisements and libel suits. He finds there is no lasting regard in a sneer, no satisfaction in gratifying the impulse to say things that bring tears to women's eyes, nothing to blot over in opening a wound in a man's heart. If he does not learn this as he grows older he is a poor country editor.

Pity this cannot be said of the metropolitan press.

SHOULD CUT OUT SMOKING.

The introduction of the new semi-convertible cars on various lines of the Old Colony street railway company has led to some confusion as to the rights of the smokers on these cars. In this respect an attempt has been made by the company to treat all its passengers as fairly as possible. With this view it has been decided and orders have been so issued providing that smoking be allowed in the seats in the rear of the cross seats in these cars when the car is open only, or in other words when the shades are thrown up.

The Old Colony Company is thus making a lot of trouble for itself. Smoking should be cut out on these cars, and if the demand of smokers is such, run the regular open cars.

THIEVES FROM CHOICE.

Criminals, as a Rule, Steal Because They Don't Want to Work.

The theorists say that men are driven to crime by poverty and want, but the theorists are not always right. There are no doubt some cases of men stealing or swindling to get bread, but they are very few. Not one criminal in a hundred in this country pilfers, plays burglar or highwayman because he's hungry, but because he is a criminal from choice and would rather steal than work. He knows perfectly well that nobody ever made a fortune or even a decent living by picking pockets or breaking into houses or robbing people on the streets. He knows, too, that it is only a question of time when the penitentiary gates will open for him, and yet he chooses the uncertainties of criminal life and idleness in preference to steady work at good wages. Good times with the rest of the world signify nothing to the criminal, except that the man he robs is likely to have a little more money in his pockets. No matter how prosperous the rest of the world may be, its criminals are always hard up. When a sneak thief makes a haul or a footpad gets hold of somebody's toll the first idea is to spend it. It goes at cards, in dives, groceries, anywhere, to anybody that wants it, and no matter how large the haul, in a little while it is all gone and another job must be done to get more. General prosperity means nothing to the rogue. The devil pays low wages on small contracts.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury, as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system, when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescription from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. SOME CURIOSITIES.

Different Lengths of a Mile—How a Road Was Determined.

The standard yard prevails throughout the United Kingdom, but the lengths of the English, Scotch and Irish mile is different in each, which is the more curious, seeing that the English and American miles are identical. But the occasional local variations in our English acre are even more remarkable. These were perhaps originally due to the inexactitudes of ancient land surveying, which was comparatively of such a free and easy description that the acres of neighboring counties, not to say adjacent parishes, sometimes varied.

A book published in the reign of Edward VI. gives the following curious naïve instructions on the subject: "Stand at the door of a church on Sunday and bid sixteen men to stop, tall ones and small ones, as they happen to pass out. Then make them put their left feet one behind the other, and the length thus obtained shall be a right and lawful road to measure the land with, and the sixteenth part of it shall be a right and lawful foot."

This is almost laughable, but we have only to apply to one of the older dictionaries to find that anything like exactness, whether of definition or of fact, is quite a modern scientific development. And the story of the acre is a case in point. It was supposed to have been reduced to a common standard in 1305, but it was not until 1821 that we enacted the statute acre of 4,840 square yards.

With the loose system of measurement prevailing for the greater part of that long interval, it is not surprising that the so-called "acre" was too often what the local vicarages happened to make of it. By long use and wont it seems probable that the discrepancies thus arising occasionally crystallized into customs, of which some examples still survive. A Welsh acre was formerly twice as large as an English one, while a Scottish acre is larger than ours by more than 1,000 square yards.

According to authority, there are seven different measures still in use by which the acre may be variously defined. Lancashire has within her borders acres measured on a customary local scale, while the so-called Cheshire acre is even larger than that of its Welsh neighbor.—London Globe.

CHINESE USE TIME STICKS.

Each Will Burn Throughout a Period of Twelve Hours.

The Chinese have several contrivances for keeping the time of day. The water clock has often been described, but the use of burning sticks is less familiar. These are described by Colonel Bridges in his book, "Round the World in Six Months."

We bought a small bundle of time sticks. The sticks, each of which is thirty-two inches long, are used, as their name more or less implies, for the purpose of measuring time. For use by day some are especially made, while others for service by night are particularly constructed.

Each burns during a period of twelve hours. As these "King Alfred's candles," as some of our party termed them, we bought two and from a printed circular or advertisement which was at the same time handed to us by the man who sold them we learned the following particulars:

The materials from which these time measuring sticks are made are prepared according to the directions of the official or imperial astronomers or astrologers. The duration of each time stick is adjusted according to the clepsidra or water clock, so that the time which it indicates when burning may be regarded as correct.

Time sticks which are manufactured to mark the hours of the day must be lighted at day dawn, when the lines on the palm of the hand are just visible, while those which are constructed to mark the hours of the night must be lighted at dusk, when the lines on the palm of the hand are not discernible. Each stick when burning must be placed in a perpendicular position. It is also necessary that it should be placed in a room free from currents of air.—Youth's Companion.

JUGGLING CITY ACCOUNTS.

Lincoln (Neb.) Citizens Kept in the Dark as to the Cost of Their Street Lights.

Lincoln, Neb., is getting an unenviable notoriety through the attempts of its officials to make it appear that its expensive municipal electric plant is supplying are lights at a low figure.

In the report of the city auditor for the seven months ended March 31, 1906, although some of the elements of cost were omitted, the evident intention was to give a fair showing. But unfortunately it was shown that the cost ($73.08 a year for lamps burning only 2,580 hours) was larger than the contract price for lamps supplied by private companies in neighboring cities. This was unsatisfactory, of course.

Accordingly in the annual report for the year ended Aug. 31, 1906, there was a deliberate omission of depreciation and interest charges on that part of the plant's cost not covered by bonds—$21,691, or one-quarter of the total construction cost. Apparently, also, the lighting schedule had been reduced to keep the cost down, as the report shows that the lamps burned only 1,996 hours during the year. By these devices the cost was reduced to $50.00.

Soon after the appearance of this report the mayor gave out in a newspaper interview that the plant had been grossly maligned and that it was furnishing lights all night and every night at a cost of $51.12 a year. It is charitable to suppose that his honor was unaware of the fact that to give all night every night service the lamps must burn 4,000 hours a year instead of 1,996, as shown by the report quoted above.

At about the time the mayor's investigation appeared an investigation of the plant was made by Professors C. H. Richards and G. H. Morse of the University of Nebraska. Their detailed report gives the cost per are per annum as $88.84 for an all night service, nearly double the cost claimed by the mayor. This report was made by the city's consulting engineer, but Mayor Brown, who is a candidate for re-election, has apparently not accepted its findings, although, according to the Omaha Bee, he now places the cost at $63.29.

It is worth noting that the original estimate for this plant was $75,000 construction cost and $25,105 annual expense. The actual construction cost, as shown in the auditor's report, was $86,691, nearly 38 per cent in excess of the estimate. The annual expense, as shown by the report, is $32,519, exceeding the estimate by 23 per cent.

This is a typical example of the sort of underestimating that leads cities to adopt municipal ownership and also of the official juggling of figures by which the public is temporarily prevented from learning that it has a white elephant on its hands.

STEAMERS BOTHER LONDON.

Council Can't Sell Them—Will Run Them Awhile—Wages and Fares to Be Cut.

Those who have made statements to the effect that the new London county council is not opposed to municipal ownership will find it hard to explain the report recently submitted by the committee having in charge the matter of the Thames steamboats.

In this report it is stated that they had tried in vain to sell or lease them and that their final decision to run them for four and a half months during the summer "must not be taken as endorsing the previous policy of the council or as implying any intention that the boats should be worked after the summer season. On the contrary, it is put forward as the best, if not the only practical, method of dealing with the problem presented to us." The committee also proposed to reduce fares and to diminish the wages of the employees, which they consider in excess of what is equitable.

In regard to the scheme for an enormous municipal lighting and power plant, the preliminary steps for which were taken by the old council, the present council has put itself on record to the effect that if this scheme goes through under no circumstances will the city operate the plant.

FOREIGN TRADE

How American Shipping Has Dwindled in Fifty Years

NEED OF A SUBSIDY SYSTEM

Over 91 Percent of Our Foreign Commerce Carried in Foreign Bottoms Today—Sharp German Tactics Rounded Up

There was a time within 50 years when a large majority of the foreign commerce of the United States was carried in American ships. Today less than 10 percent of our foreign commerce goes abroad in ships of the United States, while over 90 percent of it is carried by ships subsidized by other governments. In competition with American ships which receive no considerable subsidy.

In 1861 our own ships carried 65 percent of our foreign commerce. In 1846 American ships carried nearly 82 percent of foreign commerce, while in 1831 American ships carried 85.5 percent of our foreign commerce. Our showing in 1820 was even better, for 92.5 percent of our foreign commerce was, in that year, carried in American bottoms, and in the preceding year 92.3 percent. Today a little over 8 percent of our foreign commerce is handled in American bottoms.

There was a time when Salem and Boston were great ship building centres and some of the finest ships ever turned out slid down the ways from these places. In those days the fame of Yankee ships was world wide. The American flag was seen in every important port of the civilized world. Our merchants brought goods to Boston in ships of their own from all rich centres of traffic everywhere. Yankee adventure and Yankee thrift penetrated to every quarter of the globe and the foundations of hundreds of princely fortunes were laid in Boston at that time.

For several years strenuous efforts have been made by patriotic citizens in the east to furnish a stimulus for our American capital to embark in the shipping business over-seas, but thus far all these efforts have been fruitless. Congress has been importuned to pass laws for a system of ship subsidy that would once more build up American shipping between the Atlantic seaboard and Europe, as well as South America, and several times this effort has seemed ready to bear fruit, but in the end such legislation has been defeated, and our merchants and manufacturers are still dependent upon foreign steamship lines almost entirely for marketing their goods abroad.

Subsidy Bill Killed in Senate

In the last congress an effort was made to subsidize several steamship lines to South America and other ports, in order that our manufacturers might not be dependent upon foreign lines to carry their goods to the markets of Europe. This measure passed the house by a good majority, having the support of a number of Democrats, but in the senate it was defeated at the close of the session by filibustering methods, employed by southern Democrats.

Since congress adjourned one of the first fruits of the parsimony of congress has become apparent in the abandonment of the American Oceanic line to Australasia. This line furnished the swiftest and most efficient service entering the South seas, and at the same time it was the worst paid, under the niggardly system adopted by this country 50 years ago and continued to-day. The Oceanic company ran three steamers of 6000 tons burden from San Francisco to Auckland and Sydney, a distance of 7210 miles, and under the law of 1891 received $16,659 a voyage. The German nation subsidizes the North German Lloyd line to the amount of $41,004 a voyage for steamers that are required to make only 13½ knots; France pays $47,814 a voyage for a 14-knot service to the same port.

The American ships were compelled to make 15 knots an hour. Their owners asked congress to increase their compensation to $20,000 a voyage so that they might be at least on even terms with their European competitors. The senate granted this request. The house by a majority of 19 refused it, although the company had given notice that a refusal would strike the death blow of that line.

There was a time when the American flag, flying from the masthead of American ships, was seen in every port in the world. Now the Stars and Stripes, which formerly flew over the only American line to Australasia, has vanished from the ocean. In a few years, at the present rate of progress in the decay of our merchant fleet, the American flag will fly over no ships except those engaged in the coastwise service and to the Philippines, Hawaii and Porto Rico. For a nation which stands pre-eminent among the great nations of the earth in nearly every other respect, the United States presents a sorry spectacle in regard to its foreign shipping. The postmaster general of the United States has announced to American business men that they no longer have a direct mail service to Australasian markets and that their letters and they themselves, when they travel, must go by a circuitous route and in ships of foreign countries. What a commentary upon the supreme folly of congress! In the four years before the Oceanic line was inaugurated our exports to Australasia were valued at $79,000,000. In the four years afterward, ending with 1904, they were valued at $118,000,000, an increase almost wholly due to this direct mail, passenger and freight service, which made communication, as well as freight carriage, swift and sure.

Mendacious Tactics of Germans

The rapacity of some foreign steamship lines is shown in a recent order of the interstate commerce commission during an inquiry into the charge that a great German shipping concern, the Hamburg-American Packet company, is maintaining monopolies in restraint of trade by its almost absolute control of east bound and west bound traffic between our interior states and the north of Europe. This concern is accused of using coercive and unlawful methods of crushing competition; pooling combinations and intimidations, the latter in certain instances approaching blackmail. The company is charged with giving rebates and the merchant who ships one consignment by an independent line cannot ship any more at all by a trust line. It is said that state owned German railroads give this German steamship company rebates which help it to crush competition. One of the complainants against the concern is Peter Wright & Sons of Philadelphia, and they charge that the Hamburg-American Packet company has persistently and continuously violated the laws of the United States.

There are only eight American steamships, of a total of about 80,000 tons, engaged in the trade with Europe. The Hamburg-American company alone owns 161 German steamers and has a capitalization of $35,000,000.

It is against this sort of fierce competition, protected only by a very meagre system of subsidies, that American ships are compelled to compete. It will be up to congress to do something for the protection of American shipping in the immediate future or it will be utterly destroyed.

Shipowners Have Small Success

A large amount of money has been spent by private capital in the United States in the effort to build up a profitable business carrying the commerce of the United States overseas in competition with the old and established and heavily subsidized ships of the European nations. The encouragement, however, which has been given to such efforts by this country in the way of subsidies has been so slight that nearly every such effort has failed and those who have invested their money in this manner have lost it after a strenuous struggle. There are not likely to be many more such enterprises started until the present policy of the government has been reversed.

A great merchant marine is an advantage in more ways than one. It gives direct communication with all the important sections of the world, and thereby promotes the growth of our foreign commerce; it aids in training to the sea a larger proportion of our citizens, and thus gives us, in times of war, a larger body of trained seamen capable of manning our warships and our fast cruisers; it also gives us an auxiliary fighting force, for the larger ships of our merchant marine could then be converted into auxiliary cruisers and dispatch boats.

Beginning Well.

"Begin your stories well," said an author, talking to a group of literary beginners. "There's nothing like a good beginning. Indeed, it's half the battle." Then, with a smile, this excellent beginner of stories added: "Always bear in mind the case of the young man who, desiring to marry, secured a favorable hearing from his sweetheart's fickle father by opening the interview with the words: 'I know a way, sir, whereby you can save money.'"

The Highland School Lot.

Mr. Lewis Parkhurst approves of the suggestion made in the STAR that the excess of land over what is required for the Highland School be sold for building purposes. As he says elsewhere in this issue of the STAR: "Here is a lot of valuable land, in a very desirable locality, which is now not only worthless, but in its present and untidy condition, a detriment to the neighborhood." Should this land be retained by the town and improved, it would always be a source of large expense in keeping it in condition. The best thing to do, as Mr. Parkhurst suggests, is to sell it, and thus bring into existence considerable taxable property. This would also remove from the neighborhood what has been for years an eyesore and a drawback. Mr. Parkhurst's suggestion that the Selectmen and Appropriations Committee look into the matter is a good one.

For a Good Cause.

At the vacation school during the recess a glass of pure, fresh milk is given to each and all of the young children who attend. This nourishment is needed in the case of these little tots, and the ladies having the school in charge are to be commended for their thoughtfulness. The school is supported almost entirely by The Fortnightly and a larger sum than ever before is being devoted to the care of these children by keeping them off the streets and providing healthy amusement and laying the foundation for their education that will prove of great benefit in the years that are to come. The money set apart for milk is not sufficient to provide for but a short time longer and that it be continued the good people of Winchester are asked to contribute toward the expense for the remaining weeks. The Fortnightly would gladly assume the entire burden, but the funds at their disposal will not permit of doing so, hence the request for contributions. Small sums of money will be gladly received by Mrs. Henry Stone, 100 Cambridge street, or Mrs. Jotham S. Woods, 69 Walnut street, or they may be left at the STAR Office, and acknowledgments printed in this paper.

This vacation school is doing a glorious work and should receive the support of all who would provide amusement and study for the scores of young children who have no way of passing the long vacation except in the streets—where good morals are not learned. A brief sketch of the work being done in the Vacation School is printed on first page.

Boundary Stones of the Town.

Boundary posts or markers on the lines between surrounding cities and towns should be different from those now in use. A rough piece of granite is now in use with the letters "W" and "M" or whatever the case may be, crudely cut out on the stone. Substantial and attractive monuments should be set up, and thus obviate the necessity of the Selectmen when hunting up the bounds to kick over the grass or weeds to find the marker. A suitable monument would add dignity and impressiveness to those boundary points. Look at the marker on Main street at the Medford line, stuck into the ground with the appearance of being ready to topple over, and later kicked to one side and the boundary point lost. Our Selectmen should ask adjoining cities and towns to co-operate with them in erecting stones that would not only last for a great many years but be a creditable reminder of the great importance of these markers. The time for any old thing from a tree to a boulder has gone by—something more substantial is necessary.

INDEPENDENCE TO THE PHILIPPINES.

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

The Anti-Imperialist League has many friends among your readers, Mr. Ginn is a vice president of the League and Mr. McCall supports its ideas. Please give the enclosed space and oblige.

Yours truly,
WHITFIELD TUCK.

To the members and friends of the Anti-Imperialist League:

The Anti-Imperialist League, through its Executive Committee, would suggest to its members and friends that this seems an appropriate moment to urge those within their influence an especially timely argument against the continued and indefinite retention of the Philippine Islands. The immense and unprofitable burden of these possessions has never been felt more strongly than today but, in the popular apprehension that the United States might become involved in war, it is now realized that their defence would demand an almost insupportable military and naval force on the other side of the globe. The absurdity of an enormous sacrifice of life and treasure to defend a territory whose inhabitants are discontented with their relation to the United States, a relationship which is deplored by the great majority of our own liberty-loving citizens, has become patent. A sale to Japan has been suggested in many quarters as a method of escaping from the dilemma. But to sell 8,000,000 people and their homes to any one is clearly immoral and contrary to American principles. There is no evidence that Japan or any other country now wants the islands. There is abundant evidence that the Filipinos, especially with the fate of Korea before their eyes, are bitterly opposed to a cession to Japan. The islands are clearly a bad investment; unprofitable in peace—a dangerous burden in case of war. Our people want to be rid of them. How can it be done?

There is one simple, just and practical method of relief for both countries, which would turn a gage of battle into a bond of peace, and which we urge with renewed emphasis, viz.—a pledge of early and complete independence to the Philippines, (not the limited sort foredoomed a failure such as we gave Cuba) together with a "neutralization" by all the Great Powers including Japan.

The Secretary of War deplors the "chaos and excesses" which he thinks might occur among the people if left to themselves. But it is clearly demonstrated that there is a large and influential class of educated Filipinos who are able to guide their fellow-citizens in self-government. They might re-establish the government which until destroyed by the armies of the United States was successfully conducted under Aguinaldo's democratic constitution. They might deem an oligarchy or even a dictatorship better suited to the genius and present needs of the people. There might and probably would be occasional disorder and disturbances for a time, but these could hardly equal the disorders arising from our attempt to conquer the islands, and they always accompany the struggle for free government. The Republic of France rests upon a foundation built by many revolutions. Mexico, now so prosperous and orderly, had formerly a revolution or rising almost every year. The United States waged for four years the greatest civil war in history. Our peace was broken by chaos and excesses; the commerce and industry of the world were disturbed. Every people must work out its own salvation and destiny according to its own genius. This is the aspiration of the Filipinos. Is not this also the desire for them of the great majority of the people of the United States, tired of a trusteeship which assumes that the welfare of a people is something other than that which they desire, and anxious to get rid of the costly and dangerous burden?

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

The revival of Erminie at the Castle Square next week will be one of the notable events of the season. It was in this opera that Francis Wilson first came to fame as a comedian and its casts on various occasions have included such famous singers and players as Pauline Hall, Marie Jansen, Marion Manola, Isabelle Urquhart, Lulu Glaser, Grace Golden, Edwin Stevens, James T. Powers, Fred Solomon and Henry E. Dixey. It is unnecessary to describe at length the plot of the opera, which centers around the exploits of that mythical pair of rascals, Cadeaux and Ravennes keep the audience in a wave of laughter that is only checked now and then by the melodious charm of its music. Its scenes are laid in picturesque France, and its Thieves duet, its Dickey Birds song, its soldiers duet and its lullaby are as familiar as household words.

The Castle Square cast will include Clare Lane as Erminie, Lois Ewell as Javotte, O. B. Thayer as Cadeaux, J. K. Murray as Ravennes, Harry Davies and Geo. Tallman alternating as Eugene. Louise LeBaron as Capt. Delaney, Hattie Belle Ladd as Princess de Gramponaux, and W. H. Pringle as the Chevalier de Brobazon.

The attraction for Old Home Week at the Castle Square will be the always popular double bill of "Pinatore" and "Cavalleria Rusticana."

A BARGE FOR ONE FAMILY.

There was no issue of the Stoneham Enterprise, Wednesday, as the Enterprise man and his family went on their annual barge party to Salem Willows.

Jonathan S. Lewis, the editor of the Enterprise has a large (and growing) family, numbering 13 souls, besides his and his wife's. Each year he hires a larger conveyance and enjoys the day at Salem Willows in the bosom of his family, says the Woburn Times.

Brother Lewis is highly respected in Stoneham and that he and his family enjoy the day goes without saying.

His trip suggests the following: Up from their couches of softest down, Rise the Lewises, of Stoneham town. All prepared for the annual treat All of them looking spic and neat. For this is the day when Jonathan S. And his wife in her go-to-meeting dress, And the children who number half a score, Or to be exact just add three more. In a wagon that's large enough for all Rides the whole family large and small To spend the day at Salem Willows Perhaps to sport in the ocean billows.

OBSERVATIONS.

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

The Park Board has purchased a set of professional base ball bases for Manchester Field and also arranged for policing the ball games. Last Saturday the crowd was kept back to the great satisfaction of both players and spectators. Now if the Metropolitan board will erect a drinking fountain at the spring a still further improvement will be made.

The various pole fishermen are using spurs again on the painted poles, making them look badly. This was forbidden a year or two ago and should not be allowed now. It also seems a long time before they paint new poles or concrete around them.

The automobiles have raised the mischief with the Forest street macadam and unless it is retopped right away the whole street will be to pieces, and the Selectmen should order it done at once. This is the best built street in town and should be kept up.

The railroad crossing at the Centre should be kept sprinkled in the interest of safety as well as comfort, for when a train goes by it raises such a cloud of dust that it is a decided element of danger at this busy crossing. There is no good reason why this should not be done.

Nobody should be allowed to play in the Saturday ball games on Manchester Field unless he wears a uniform, as it looks not only shabby, but it is noticeable that players with their good clothes on do not slide to bases and if without proper shoes slide around too much when fielding the ball.

James Gordon Bennett who resides in Paris and took the side of Russia in the recent war, seems to be the active force in trying to stir up trouble between us and Japan, and he should be sat on. While Hearst claims the credit for the Spanish war and perhaps Bennett is looking for yellow glory now.

While I am glad to see that the Selectmen are to have some drinking cups placed at the Lebanon street fountain, there should certainly be something done about the mud and water surrounding it, and which should have been remedied long ago. One of the Selectmen lives at the head of this street.

On the face of it, a twenty years' contract for electric lighting is against public policy and it is up to the company to show how it is it can afford to make the price named on account of that term without reducing the price on yearly contracts also.

How much longer is the old stone crushing plant to be allowed to remain back of the engine house in Winchester Place? It certainly is no ornament there and should be removed as was provided for when the Linden street yard was purchased. We have altogether too many town matters hanging. Why is it?

One result of clearing up the brush in the Fells has been to increase the blue berry crop by several thousand quarts, which at fifteen cents a quart, has amounted to quite a tidy sum. This clearing has greatly improved the appearance of the woods also.

If this representative district wants an active and able member in the legislature why not nominate Thomas W. Lawson? Is he not in duty bound now to accept this office if the voters demand it? He has given much advice to the public in many directions and why should he not, if called, practice what he has been preaching? I think he would get the nomination of both parties and their vote, and Winchester would have what she has not had for many years, a representative who could talk as well as work for the public interest.

Merit always Rewarded.

True merit always wins, which is the reason the NEW HOME has been such a winner and favorite in millions of homes. The NEW HOME will last a lifetime. Dealers everywhere.

The Winchester STAR is endeavoring to arouse interest in having the town finance the Fourth of July celebrations hereafter. It is the only way to do. Wakefield's celebration, paid for by the town each year, are enjoyed by all the people, and there are very few who now begrudge the town's expenditure of $500 or so each year, instead of expecting private citizens to contribute. It is a sort of municipal recreation expense—and relatively amounts to less than a man buying a cigar or glass of soda for his own enjoyment.—[Wakefield Item.]

W. C. T. U. NOTES.

The Sixth New England Interstate Institute held under the auspices of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of New England in the Casino at Hampton Beach was a proof program to popular opinion that a good program could be carried out in spite of noisy surroundings, and one of the good results of the Institute is that resident ministers and others in the vicinity have decided to have the Casino open for religious service each Sunday.

The opening meeting Wednesday eve was presided over by Mrs. L. U. N. Stevens, National President (she is also President of Maine W. C. T. U.) "Why are we here?" was her greeting topic. She was followed by addresses of welcome from the local County and State presidents. Responses from Massachusetts, Vermont, Rhode Island presidents and Miss Anna Gordon vice president at large, National W. C. T. U.

Among the interesting features of Thursday was the "Young Peoples Rally" when the Loyal Temperance Legions of near by towns presented a good program and the children had the pleasure of hearing Anna Gordon who has given so much of her time and efforts to the L. Y. L. department.

"The Relation of Temperance to Missionary Effort," as treated by Miss Elma Grace Gowing of Boston, who is soon to go to South America as a missionary from the W. C. T. U., had a peculiar interest.

Thursday evening was given up to presentation of "Conditions Under License in Vermont, New Hampshire and Massachusetts," by the respective presidents of each State, followed by "Conditions in Maine Under Prohibition," by Mrs. L. U. N. Stevens.

Friday morning, it being very rainy, the attendance was lessened but the program was with one exception carried out and each subject well presented, for as Miss Eva K. Foster, National Press Correspondent, said in her talk, it can be truly stated those who are at the head of our departments, referring specially to the National, are specialists.

Mrs. R. I. Tregoe of Cleveland, a national evangelist of 20 years' experience, was intensely interesting, and after hearing her one could well understand what is the secret of her success. "Temperance in the Sunday school," by Mrs. Olney of R. I. and "The Sunday School in Temperance," by Rev. Roger Thompson, field secretary New Hampshire S. S. Association, were both excellent. Friday evening we were surprised to hear Rev. J. H. Robbins, superintendent of N. H. Anti-Saloon League — topic, "The United Message of Vermont and N. H. to Maine on the License System." Our own Mass. president, Mrs. Stevenson, presided Friday, as usual, in a most acceptable manner, and our county president, Mrs. Rolfe, spoke on "Home Interests."

Gulls as Life Savers.

"I wouldn't no more kill a gull than I would a baby," said the sailor.

"Why not?"

"Why not? Because gulls has saved my life, that's why not. Gulls is life savers. They've saved the lives of thousands of seamen. They ought to all wear round their sleek white necks a pink silk ribbon with one of them there Andy Carnegie medals tied to it. Wunst, off the Orkneys, in a fog, we lost our bearings, and we'd ha' run aground and drowned sure if the loud screaming of the gulls on the cliffs hadn't give us timely warnin'. So it goes. Time after time in black, stormy nights, in mists and fogs, gulls' cries, as good as any fog horn, warns sailors what has lost their way off deadly coasts."

SURE HE COULD WIN.

What Happened After a Friend Staked Him For a Hundred.

At a dinner recently given by a Wall street man who is known for his hospitality gambling was the subject of conversation, and many stories were told to show how the turn of the cards or of the wheel had made fortunes for some men and had made beggars of others. The host told of one man who after paying his watch at Ostend played and retrieved a fortune which had been lost and won "another for good measure." Similar stories were told by other members of the dinner company, and the subject seemed to have been exhausted when a quiet man who has the reputation for daring on the floor of the exchange said: "Some years ago at the Saratoga club house I saw a young man whose father I knew chip away thousands at the red and black game. He had been at it for three days, and I was present when his last chip was raked in. We walked out together, and when we reached Broadway he said, 'I feel it in me that I could go right back now and begin where I left off I'd win.' His manner impressed me, and I staked him for a hundred and went back to the club. Now, from that little starter what do you think he won?" After all had guessed, naming sums away into the hundreds of thousands, he said, "He lost the hundred and owes it to me yet."—New York Tribune.

WHAT AN ELECTRIC

COOKER DID.

There is no question that electricity is a rapid article, and its proper application promotes business to a marked degree, both by action and suggestion. One of the most remarkable instances of its success in the latter form was made known to us one day this week, and as it happens, we can personally vouch for its correctness. A gentleman owning a flock of hens some 15 or 16 in number, had been having much trouble in inducing them to lay, getting scarcely an egg all through the month of June, when the poultry is usually attending to business. He concluded it was a hopeless case and prepared to dispose of the flock. One day this week he happened into the Edison's company's exhibit in Boston, and was induced to invest in an electric egg cooker, reasoning that he could buy eggs if he couldn't raise them. In the evening when he returned he was surprised to find five newly laid eggs in the nests. The following day his astonishment can be better imagined than described at receiving 11 more, making 16 in two days from a flock that had not totaled that many in nearly a month, and they are still at it. He lays it to desire to supply provender for the new electric cooker, and is considering erecting a cold storage plant for his surplus product.—[Canton, (Mass.) Journal.]

Often The Kidneys Are Weakened by Over-Work.

Unhealthy Kidneys Make Impure Blood. It used to be considered that only urinary and bladder troubles were to be traced to the kidneys, but now modern science proves that nearly all diseases have their beginning in the disorder of these most important organs.

The kidneys filter and purify the blood—that is their work.

Therefore, when your kidneys are weak or out of order, you can understand how quickly your entire body is affected and how every organ seems to fail to do its duty.

If you are sick or "feel badly," begin taking the great kidney remedy, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, because as soon as your kidneys are well they will help all the other organs to health. A trial will convince anyone.

If you are sick you can make no mistake by first doctoring your kidneys. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy, is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases, and is sold on its merits by all druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles. You may have a sample bottle of Swamp-Root by mail free, also a pamphlet telling you how to find out if you have kidney or bladder trouble. Mention this paper when writing to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

A Business Visit.

By ALICE LOUISE LEE.

Copyright, 1906, by Alice Louise Lee.

IF thirty-five years of unmarried life entitle a woman to the sobriquet of "old maid," Elizabeth Fairchild could read her title clear, but of those other attributes supposed to mark an advanced state of single blessedness she possessed none. She was sunny of disposition and met life with the optimism of girlhood. Within her bubbled a living spring of contentment which filled her deep eyes with happiness and made the smiles play about her lips as she worked in her little studio or wandered among the fields and woods back of Highlands.

By the little country town—where marriage was considered the early duty of the individual—she was regarded with great curiosity, and many were the speculations rife as to her probable "chances" during those years, when, as art student and teacher, she had been absent from home.

Being keenly aware of the attitude of her fellow citizens, her heart sank when a letter from Stanley Callaman briefly and abruptly announced that he would arrive at the Highlands the evening of Sept. 8 in order to discuss with her new designs for some decorated china he had ordered.

There was no hotel in the village, and she realized the painfulness of entertaining any man who was single and advanced in age without range of the eyes of Mrs. Bissell watching behind her blinds twenty feet from the east porch; of Mrs. Cavendish, twenty feet from the west bay window, of Mrs. Nash, just across the way, and of Lem Brown, the self constituted village wit, traveling past the front porch.

"Why, mother," exclaimed Elizabeth, half laughing, half frowning, "Highlands will have me engaged to him within an hour after his arrival!"

"What do you care," retorted Mrs. Fairchild, who was white haired, but fun loving still, "I'd like to see Lem Brown get his deserts for once!"

"The probabilities are," Elizabeth told herself cheerily as she set her little studio in order the afternoon of the eighth, "that Mr. Callaman will see nothing and hear nothing which will betray the Highlands' matrimonial settlements, and I can certainly endure the post comments for the sake of orders."

Whereupon she sang gayly and donned a becoming white dress and stylish black hat without at all realizing what a trim and attractive china decorator Mr. Callaman was destined to meet at the little country station.

Her acquaintance with him was brief and confined to an exchange of letters on the subject of painted china. A mutual acquaintance had induced him to give her the first order—the succeeding ones were given voluntarily and were oddly extensive for a bachelor.

The train was just pulling in when she arrived at the station, and the first unwelcome sight which met her eyes was Lem Brown, lounging on the platform, hams in pockets, his voice soaring above the clanking of the wheels.

THE FIRST UNWELCOME SIGHT WAS LEM BROWN.

Presently his voice ceased, and its owner stared hard at a man with a suit case swinging himself down from the rear car, the sole passenger for the Highlands.

It was Stanley Callaman. Elizabeth recognized him by the description given her by their mutual friend—hair touched with gray, blue gray eyes and thin lips, which looked—this she noticed with shrinking—as though they could curl sarcastically, and shoulders broad enough to assist Atlas at his task with the world.

As she moved forward and extended her hand to the stranger Lem Brown's eyes bulged in his fleshy face. But when the two walked off together his feelings found vent in one audible

"Wonder of wonders—Lizzie Fairchild's got a beau!"

Elizabeth's cheeks flamed with mortification, and involuntarily the cordiality of the hostess was swallowed up in the conscious restraint of the women, nor did she see at the corners of her guest's lips the lurking evidence that he understood the situation.

When they reached the Fairchild house she found a caller on the porch. The minister was there, an elderly and benevolent man who had fulfilled his duty to humanity by giving six daughters in marriage at tender ages. To him Elizabeth's state of single blessedness had long been a source of perplexity. Therefore when he saw her approach with a stranger, evidently a gentleman of proper age and dignity, his face shone with that peculiar indulgent, reminiscent expression with which age greets lovers.

Elizabeth recognized the look and swept up the steps and into the hall without pausing. With more haste than ease she dispatched Callaman to his room on the second floor, then turned and faced the minister, who had arisen and followed her, his little clerical joke all ready.

"Good evening, Miss Elizabeth," he said in a loud stage whisper intended to penetrate to the upper chamber. "I see by the signs that the preacher's services will be required later. Ha, ha!" With that he ambled down the steps.

Even Mrs. Fairchild, rocking on the porch, was vexed. "Land!" she exclaimed indignantly. "I hope that Boston man won't think you're being thrown at his head!"

Elizabeth made no reply as she departed to light up her studio, but her lips were pressed together, a red spot dyeing each cheek, and when Callaman entered the room a few moments later he was confronted by a formidable array of designs and by a woman bent on discussing business and business only.

Stubbornly, but unsuccessfully, he rebelled. In vain he directed the conversation longingly to the moon lighted porch—would he like the prevailing tints of the autumn leaves on the tea set red or yellow? His mind and speech wandered to a country drive in the evening light, but his scarlet liped hostess, moving amid her work tall and straight, charming and inexorable, firmly interrupted—did he care for a continuous or broken design around the platter?

The task was not an easy one that Elizabeth had set for herself, and it was a weary head that she laid on her pillow that night. "I hope it rains to-morrow," was her last thought. "So that I may keep him in the studio and out of the reach of remarks." But fortune seemed at odds with her, for the morning dawned faultlessly clear.

After breakfast, when she would have led the way to the studio, Callaman ignored her lead and with "What a glorious out of doors this place possesses," stepped out on the side porch. With a contraction of the heart Elizabeth followed and sat down facing the battery of Mrs. Bissell's green blinds, the slats of which were immediately moved gently to permit of reconnaissance of Mrs. Bissell's eyes.

With gentle firmness Elizabeth began again on the subject of painted china. "Mrs. Bissell shall be enlightened as to my visitor's mission," she told herself and slightly raised her clear voice that it might penetrate the green blinds.

Callaman's eyes smothered a laugh, and his lips twitched in a way which threatened an open rebellion against china, but Elizabeth did not notice. She was talking against time as recorded by the sitting room clock, a view of which her position commanded. And could wishes hasten time, the hands on that clock would have raced forward to train time—11 o'clock.

At 9:30 she heard Mrs. Bissell leave her house by way of the front door. "The worst is now over," she assured herself and drew a long breath of relief—premature relief she discovered the next moment when distant puffs and blowings announced that Mrs. Cavendish was laboring up the back steps for her morning call in the kitchen, and Elizabeth became apprehensive of conversational developments in that direction.

Her apprehensions were almost immediately justified as Mrs. Cavendish's asthmatic utterances were wafted through the vine draped kitchen window. "Dew tell! A man!" Then to Mrs. Fairchild in remonstrating accents: "Ann, you can't fool me on no chiny paintin'. He's here after Lizzie!"

Elizabeth felt the laughter in Callaman's eyes—her own were downcast and smarting—but she talked on bravely, unmindful of the fact that she had asked three times concerning the decorations of a chocolate pot her guest had purchased as a wedding gift. But when a few moments later she arose, announcing it was time to start for the station, and he, surreptitiously examining his watch, found it lacked an hour of train time, his lips tightened and his eyes sobered.

As they emerged from the house the Highlands almost to a man gave them a mute reception. The postmaster, barber, butcher, blacksmith and merchant promptly, as though notified by wireless telegraphy, appeared at the doors of their respective establishments and frankly stared. The women, more discreet, peered from behind their curtains.

Callaman had some difficulty in accommodating his pace to Elizabeth's flying footsteps as she hurried up the street and turned into the pleasant, shady retreat afforded by the bicycle path, which was a short cut to the station. Here she still forced ahead, silent, having reached a state where the anguish of mortification had deprived her of the power of speech.

Suddenly Callaman stopped short beside a big rock overlooking the station and plumped his suit case down. "Miss Fairchild," he began vigorously, "I protest!"

Elizabeth relaxed her speed. She turned and looked back in surprise. Callaman had deliberately seated himself on the rock, pushed his hat on the back of his head and was mopping his face. The lines about his mouth were conspicuously firm as he snapped open his watch.

"It's now only 10:15. That train isn't due for three-quarters of an hour, and here we are so near the station that I could throw my baggage down on the platform. I feel like throwing it. What's more," he added, glancing up with amusement shimmering in the puckers about the corners of his eyes. "Now I intend to sit right here and protest against your treatment of me."

"My treatment of you?" repeated Elizabeth faintly, shivering and flushing at the recollection of the past few hours.

Callaman considerably occupied himself with brushing the rock beside him.

"MISS FAIRCHILD," HE BEGAN VIGOROUSLY, "I PROTEST!"

"You better sit down here," he remarked calmly, leaning back easily against a tree trunk, "because I have no intention of allowing you to dispose of me as you intended to."

Elizabeth sat down in confusion. "I didn't intend to—dispose of you," she stammered, with downcast eyes, which confessed her guilt.

"Oh, yes, you did! You intended to take me down to that station at express speed and leave me there. Yes, you did!"—in answer to a slight shake of her head. "You had the plot all laid and was carrying it out at the rate of half a mile a minute!"

There was an instant's silence, during which Elizabeth, leaning over her side of the rock, examined some moss attentively. Suddenly her shoulders began to shake. The indignation of the situation was taking possession of her. A faint sound of laughter reached the tree trunk. It acted like a spark in a powder magazine, and with a burst all the laughter which Callaman had been repressing rang forth.

They laughed until the tears came. Then they wiped their eyes, looked at each other and laughed again. Elizabeth felt that the cobwebs had been swept away from her eyes, and she could look at her guest for the first time in an open, friendly fashion.

"I wanted to tell you down at the station last night not to mind," Callaman began, "but I didn't dare. I'm sorry to be the cause of so much annoyance to you—and gratification to the minister, that good old duffer!" Here he went off again sending out peal after peal of laughter.

And Elizabeth, happy at being herself again, joined him. "I was afraid you wouldn't understand," she said at last, "not being familiar with the matrimonial sentiments of our village."

"Understand!" he interrupted heartily. "Of course I understand. I was brought up in a little Connecticut town where every man is considered marriageable at twenty. Luckily," with a sideways glance, "I left before that time and so must answer for the crime of bachelorhood."

Elizabeth drew a long breath. "I thought there was no place as openly addicted to matrimony as the Highlands."

Callaman stooped to adjust a strap on his suit case. "No town has a monopoly on that business, I believe," he said drily. "I've known ideas anent it to penetrate to—well, we'll say a Boston apartment."

The whistle of the express sounded far up the track. Callaman arose and picked up his suit case. Then he peered over the rock down on the station. "There's our friend the minister waiting to see me off," he chuckled, "and the fat man who placed me so readily on my arrival last night!"

An expression of annoyance passed over Elizabeth's face. "They must have something to talk about, I suppose," she said resignedly.

For a moment the two walked down the path together in silence. Then Callaman began solemnly, "Miss Fairchild, I should very much enjoy giving these people something worth talking about."

Elizabeth innocently fell into the trap. "How?" she asked, glancing up with a smile.

His tone was earnest despite the quizzical pucker at the corners of his mouth. "By visiting you again in—say, December—not to discuss china! May I come?"

Elizabeth caught her breath. She glanced into the blue gray eyes meeting hers in deep questioning and replied simply, "Yes."

Elizabeth relaxed her speed. She turned and looked back in surprise. Callaman had deliberately seated himself on the rock, pushed his hat on the back of his head and was mopping his face. The lines about his mouth were conspicuously firm as he snapped open his watch.

A Minute Fish.
The most diminutive vertebrate creature in the world is said to be a small fish caught in a mountain lake in the Luzon region of the Philippines. The largest of the species is less than an inch long, but its smallness may be best gauged by the fact that it takes about 6,000 of them to make a pound. Although so tiny, however, the fish, which is named sinirapan, is an important article of diet among the Philippine natives. Obviously it is too small for any net and is caught in coarse muslin sheets. The fish are prepared by being mixed with pepper and other spices and then dried in the sun. They are a great native delicacy.

Book Telling About It.

Always early in the field with its warm weather literature the passenger department of the Central Vermont Railway has just issued its 1907 edition of "Summer Homes," which is sent for 6c stamp on application to T. H. HANLEY, N. E. P. O., 360 Washington St., Boston. The book describes the beautiful scenes among the green hills of Vermont and around the shores of Lake Champlain, is handsomely illustrated and includes lists of hotels and of family homes which are recommended to pleasure and health seekers, excursion fares, maps, and such concise information as will enable the "don't know" tourist to arrive at a decision.

Two Marcellises were discussing the best method of eating game. "Well," said one, "if it is a woodcock, I hang it up on a nail by the beak and fasten some larks onto its claws. After a week I throw away the woodcock and eat the larks, which by that time have absorbed all the flavor of the woodcock." "I do the same," replied the other, "not to be outdone, except that I throw away the larks as well as the woodcock, and eat the nail."—Bon Vivant.

A CATTLE SHIP TRIP.

What It Means to Work Your Way Across the Atlantic.

HARD LABOR AND POOR FOOD

Experience of a College Student Who Wanted to See the Old World on Little Money—His Troubles Abroad and the Return Voyage.

A great many college boys and other youths who have a lot of time and very little money on their hands during the summer plan to get a fine vacation trip with little cost. One of the most popular trips is, of course, to Europe, and as very few of them are able to stand the first or second cabin tariff and sort of flight shy of the steerage, their imaginations turn naturally toward the much talked of voyage as cattlemen. Without knowing very much about cattle or the sea or hard work young men often jump at the opportunity to get to the old world in this way.

About this trip they know just this much: First, that it costs $5 to get the job; second, that the cattlemen must care for the cattle all the way over for no pay, and, third, that the passage back is free. That looks good, but that's only the bare outline. The experiences of a young collegian who took this trip one summer may be of value to those who may contemplate the voyage and of interest to the public generally.

When he got the idea that he wanted to go to Europe, he had $20 in his pocket. Five of this he paid to a steamship agency in an office on South street, where he signed a contract as a cattlemen. A few hours before the sailing he reported on board to the foreman and was assigned to a smelly, greasy bunk in the fore-castle. Then the foreman, who was well liquorered up and remained so all the way over, examined his papers, which contained a minute description of his person. The foreman said they were all right.

The men of the cattle crew were entirely separated from the regular crew of the vessel and seldom came in contact with them during the voyage. Besides the foreman there were two paid men, who also included in liquor all the time and never worked, and four college boys on an outing. The youths got together as soon as they were on board and discussed the possibilities of their job. Going down the Delaware there was nothing doing. The cattle, 210 head of them, were quiet, and things looked rosy to the boys.

They got their first jar when they were called to dinner. This meal was taken in the fore-castle. It consisted of "salt horse," "skunk," "punk," "oloo" and "chicory." Translated, the meal consisted of meat, potatoes, bread, butter and coffee. Some of the boys had been camping and thought they could eat anything, but they balked at the quality of the food and the careless cooking. Then came a row. The foreman and the two paid men asked them if they thought they were going first cabin and threatened to throw them overboard if they did not eat. So they ate.

That night they retired early and were pulled out at 4 a. m. by the night watch and told to go to work. The foreman and his two paid men stood around giving orders, while the boys toiled like galley slaves. First they watered the cattle. Each head of the 210 had to be given five buckets of water, which had to be carried from the outlet tubs at the end of the cattle deck. The boys soon began to sweat under this unaccustomed work and threw off all their clothing except their trousers, in which costume they worked all the way over. It took two and one-half hours to water the cattle, and then breakfast was served, the same kind of stuff that had been given the evening before. By this time the boys were so hungry that they could eat almost anything.

At 10 o'clock the heaviest work started. The hay which was fed to the cattle had to be pulled up from the hold with a block and fall. Eighteen bales of 125 pounds each were hoisted in this manner as well as ten bales weighing from 250 to 325 pounds and eighteen bags of corn of 125 pounds each. Two of the youths hooked the bales in the hold, while the other two pulled. It did not take long for the tender skin on their hands to become raw and inflamed, and the hauling became a positive torture.

When all the hay and corn had been pulled up the corn was fed to the cattle, and then it was time for dinner. This was eaten hurriedly, so that the men could get back to work. The hay was split in the narrow aisles in front of the cattle, and after several hours of hard work at shaking it up the poor beasts were fed. Then the men were fed with far worse food in comparison than that given the cattle. By this time they were tired enough to go to bed. Most of them revolted at the stuffy bunks and slept on the hard deck.

This was the regular programme for each day. On the second day out a little relief came when a poor, starved stowaway was dug out of the hold and set to work. He could not work much, for he was sick most of the time, but he helped a little. So the work went on, and the blistered hands did not have a chance to heal. Before they were halfway over every college boy was praying for land.

There was practically no amusement on board. Isolated from everybody on the ship, the boys had nothing to do to their few spare moments but gamble.

At playing poker the youth who had started with $20, less the $5 to the agency, lost every cent. Occasionally a cabin passenger would visit the cattlemen and bring them a bit of decent food. There was beer also, but it cost 10 cents a small glass and was very flat. They had to take turns standing the night watch and then work just as hard the next day. Three of the cattle died on the way over and had to be dumped overboard. In spite of their hardships the college boys were told that it was an exceptionally easy voyage, as no rough weather had overtaken the ship. On a stormy trip a constant watch must be kept over the cattle, as their ropes are frequently broken, and a regular stampede follows.

Once in Europe the college cattlemen imagined that his troubles are over. If he has any money he can live there cheaply, but if he has none his life is much worse than the American bum's. One particular young man who was out of funds was lucky enough to borrow $20 from a cabin passenger, on which he lived in Antwerp for three weeks. Then he had trouble in arranging his passage home. Having landed the cattle, the steamship company cares very little for its contract to convey the cattlemen back to America. After much argument and waiting the college boy at length succeeded in getting passage on a freighter to Boston.

The voyage home was lazy and tiresome. The food was the same as he had on the way over, with an occasional festival of plum duff. There was no work to do, so it was much better than on the voyage eastward. He did not enjoy it, however, for the sea without proper companionship is the most tiresome place imaginable. He was the only returning cattlemen on board, and the sailors were an ignorant lot and too busy to talk with him. On landing in Boston he had to wire to Philadelphia for money to return home and was glad enough to get here. He is proud of his experience, but declares that it is certainly not worth the price.—Philadelphia Record.

VENETIAN GLASS.

The Different Varieties and the Process of Manufacture.

Venetian glass owes its extreme thinness and lightness to the want of lead in its composition. All the ornamental shapes were blown and owed their beauty to the skillful manipulation of the worker, whose delicacy of touch and artistic taste were often a heritage from generations of glass blowing ancestors.

The most prized of the Venetian productions was the beautiful "vitro-drum," or lace glass, generally known as filigree. Of this there are two kinds, the "ribbato" and the "reticellato." The former was the less elaborate and consisted of a single tube twisted and given a spiral direction, the ground of the vessel being of a different color. The "reticellato" designs were varied. Sometimes the twisted tubes were powdered with gold and made vertical, horizontal, diagonal or curved. Indeed, every variation was given that ingenuity could suggest or fancy devise.

Avanturine glass was invented by the Venetians, its secret being discovered by the accidental dropping of brass or copper filings into a pot of melted glass, which resulted in the diffusion of gold specks or threads throughout the mass. Its name is said to signify adventure, or resulting from chance, a word half Italian, but coined probably for the occasion to denote the peculiar variety.

Marbled or variegated glass was made to resemble chalcidony, jasper, lapis lazuli and tortoise shell. There was a kind of green and purple which became red by transmission of light. A frosted glass which showed an icy coating was made by dipping the vessel when half blown in powdered glass, the particles of which readily adhered to the warm mass, which was reheated and wrought into shape.

Sometimes powdered glass of different colors was used with fine effect upon the same object. These, with delicately gilded glass and some ornamented with jewel patterns like those of Damascus, formed the principal kinds of Venetian glass, which was too thin for engravings and could rarely bear enameling.—Exchange.

Tired of Being a Mascot.

"Do I know where you can find a good dressmaker?" said the smartly groomed woman in a weary but firm voice as her best friend looked anxiously to her for advice. "Yes, I do, but I'll never tell you. Now, don't look so injured. She is my own dressmaker, and I would not give her name or address to anybody for—well, for all my annual pin money. I've had a few experiences in that line which have taught me some lessons. I had a woman who came once a week to do extra housework for me, and she was a treasure—so faithful and so energetic. She came regularly for three years. One day she told me she needed one or two more places, so she could put in all her time, and just about then a friend of mine was looking for extra help, so I recommended Dinah. I never saw Dinah again but once. That was when I went to call on my friend. Dinah was there, putting in all her extra time."

"I recommended my tailor to a friend, and now he has so much work for her that he can't find time to make me a suit within two months, though I was the first customer he ever had after he opened his own shop. Besides, he charges me more because he is so busy."

"I recommended a certain tea room to a friend, and now the choicest table is always reserved for her, while I can sink into any old dark corner that nobody else wants. I'm tired of being a mascot. I'm looking for a mascot of my own."—New York Sun.

What Would You Do

If three good physicians should pronounce your case hopeless. If they should decide that you could not live longer than six weeks. And if you should get well, after using only $12.00 worth of Dr. Miles' Heart Cure and Nervine, what would you advise a friend in like condition to do?

"I have to thank you for saving my wife's life two years ago. We had continued with the doctor until the third doctor, like the two previous ones, said that nothing could be done for her. That she had better be taken home from the hospital to quietly wait her time, which would not be over 6 weeks at the most. I brought her home, and then I thought, probably Dr. Miles' Heart Cure and Nervine might help her, so I got a bottle of each and some Nerve and Liver Pills and commenced to give them to her. We soon seen an improvement, and encouraged by this we continued giving the medicine. We gave her eleven bottles in all of the medicine. She takes it occasionally now if she feels the need of it. I am in the ministry, and have been for 44 years."

A correspondent of the Wakefield Item writes: "I believed that when our representative and senator complete their duties at the state house they should give their respective constituents a complete account of their doings and not go into silent seclusion until again candidates for office. Their constituents are all interested in knowing how they voted on important measures."

Wakefield is in a peculiar situation regarding its board of selectmen. The chairman having been put under guardianship, can neither resign nor can his guardian resign for him, according to legal authority. Four members of the board are transacting the business (practically as in the past, in some respects) but questions may arise where the vote of a fifth member might be necessary. It is an unfortunate thing for the town.—[Wakefield Item.]

The third in the series of band concerts by the Woburn brass band will be given on Manchester Field tomorrow afternoon at 3.30.

Dr. James H. O'Connor, who recently graduated from Tufts dental school, has successfully passed the examination of the board of registration in dentistry.

The members of the Mothers' association met Wednesday in the garden of the residence of Mrs. Harrison Parker on Main street. Various matters were informally discussed.

Rev. John M. Kenney was a passenger on the Cymeric which sailed for Liverpool Wednesday.

Miss Alice M. Crawford of Winchester will fill the vacancy in the third grade at the Greenwood school, Wakefield. She is a graduate of the Bridgewater Normal School and has taught three years at Ware, Mass.

E. W. Ladd of Glen road is at Georgetown, Me., for a month.

Walter L. Rice left Wednesday to spend the summer at Seal Harbor, Me.

Mr. Thomas McCormick and Miss Mary McCue were married Wednesday evening by Rev. Fr. Keleher. Mr. rattrick Murphy was best man and Miss Delia McCue, her sister, was the maid of honor. The bride wore white lace, over a white silk slip. They will be at home at their residence on Hill street, Winchester.

STRUCK BY TRAIN.

Early this morning an unknown man was struck by a train on the Woburn loop near Beggs & Cobbs tannery. He was badly injured and taken to Boston on the train.

PROMPT WORK

THOMAS QUICLEY, JR.

Tel. 81-3.

HE SEES FOR HIMSELF.

Mr. Fred Waldmyer, the water inspector, is a man who inspects and is most thorough in his work. He takes no person's word for the condition of water fixtures in houses or the number. He goes right to the spot and sees for himself. If the fixtures are leaking he at once gives notice, whether a meter is used or not. This has not always been the case in the past, when there was failure in many cases to call attention to the waste of water. Of course if the water is metered then in case of a leaky fixture, the town is making money day and night. Mr. Waldmyer calls attention just as quickly in such cases as he does where meters are not used, and by doing so saves much money to the owners of the leaky fixtures. He has the fixtures of the town pretty well in hand, and as a result the waste of water has been reduced to a minimum, while previous to his taking the position, but little attention was given to this by the inspector, who merely ascertained the number of faucets being used in each house.

SURPRISE AND PRESENTATION.

Rev. C. A. S. Dwight and family of Fells road were pleasantly surprised last Friday evening by the following gentlemen, members of the church committee of the Second Congregational church: Mr. John Park, Mr. Justin L. Parker, Mr. W. H. Hubert, Mr. J. A. McLean, Mr. W. J. Nutting. The gentlemen each brought a gift of brass, and arranged together they formed a complete fireplace set consisting of screen, andirons, tongs, shovel, etc. The affair was unknown to the other members of the church.

The gift was contributed by the entire church committee, of deacons and officers, but owing to the absence from town of many, the above gentlemen carried out the arrangements.

Mr. Justin L. Parker in an appropriate speech presented the gifts and Mr. Dwight in a few words expressed his surprise and thanks.

After a social hour, refreshments were served on the large piazza of the house. This token shows the esteem in which Mr. and Mrs. Dwight are held by their people, as they are both indefatigable workers for the progressiveness of the church and society.

EIGHTY-FIFTH BIRTHDAY.

Samuel W. Twombly Reaches that Age Next Wednesday.

What He Has Done for Winchester—Prominent Men He has Known, etc.

Mr. Samuel W. Twombly, one of the oldest and most esteemed citizens will observe his 85th birthday on Wednesday, July 31st, at his home on Wildwood street. He will be at home all day to receive visitors and aside from this there will be no special observance of the occasion.

Mr. S. W. Twombly was born in Tamworth, N. H., July 31st, 1822. Five years later his family moved to Dover where his mother died in 1829. Samuel, then a boy of seven and a half years, was bound out on a farm until he was sixteen. He then bought his time and for the next two years worked on a farm and in a factory at Milton, N. H. At the age of eighteen Mr. Twombly came to Boston and landed at Wilds Tavern on Elm street, with no friends and not much money. A year later he went into the baking business and worked so hard that his health gave out and he was obliged to give up. Now at the age of twenty he sold out his share of the business for eight hundred dollars in cash. This money he invested in fifteen acres of land in Winchester, then Woburn, at the corner of Wildwood and Cambridge streets.

SAMUEL W. TWOMBLY.

He has long been a member of the Calumet Club and likewise a member of William Parkman Lodge of Masons.

Mr. Twombly served the Legislature in 1871 and again in the years 1900 and 1901, and was dean of the House at the latter period, calling the members of that body to order on the opening day. During those years he never missed a session of the Legislature.

Mr. Twombly's political life has been a most interesting one. He was one of the original Free Soilers who voted for all the candidates of that party, and was present at the Buffalo convention in 1854 when the Republican party was born. He has been a staunch Republican ever since.

Winchester was then a small village of a few hundred inhabitants, mostly farmers. The streets were narrow and there were no sidewalks. Since it has become a town Mr. Twombly has taken a great interest in its development and hardly any improvements have been made but what he has been one of the leading spirits in them.

Mr. Twombly's political life has been a most interesting one. He was one of the original Free Soilers who voted for all the candidates of that party, and was present at the Buffalo convention in 1854 when the Republican party was born. He has been a staunch Republican ever since.

He was a leading worker in the widening of Cambridge, Church, Main, Mt. Vernon and Pleasant streets, and to his active interest in these improvements is the town indebted in a great measure at the present time for these beautiful thoroughfares. Old residents will remember that it was his persistent work that brought about the widening of Church street, the project being strongly opposed by many prominent citizens of the town. The fight lasted three years before his labors were rewarded. At the time of the struggle one prominent man declared that it would keep two men busy mowing the weeds on the side of the street, if it was made 60 feet wide. Today, as the citizens look upon Church street, they wish it had been broadened to 80 or 100 feet when the work was first undertaken.

Probably no man has had an experience at the White House similar to that of Mr. Twombly, where he has been a guest for three days at a time. Was at the inaugurations of Presidents Hayes and Garfield. Broke bread with President Harrison at his table, rode in his carriage, and at diverse times has stood on the reviewing stand in front of the White House with Presidents Grant, Hayes, Cleveland and Garfield with their cabinets and members of the Supreme Court. Was introduced by President Hayes to his Cabinet, Chief Justice Waite and Gen. Grant, and always kept up his acquaintance with the families of Hayes and Harrison, knew all of their children and was invited to their homes.

Mr. Twombly was one of the original members of the Village Improvement Association, and served as its President for six years. The work of this Association during its lifetime in beautifying the town can never be measured in dollars and cents, and the town owes it a debt that it can never repay to those men composing it for the splendid work done. Take the Common, the refreshing plot at the junction of Main and Washington streets, these are two of the creations of the Association. The plot at the corner of Wildwood and Willow streets was given to the town by Mr. Twombly. The Common was his pet, however, and for years he carefully watched over it and tended to it. His interest was so great that he personally, he ped to grade it, and he set out all the trees. Another piece of work which he takes much pride in today is Wildwood street, acknowledged to be one of the prettiest streets in town. When the street was laid out, he gave a strip of land five feet wide for its entire length and furnished and set out all the beautiful maple trees seen on the street at the present time. He was an active worker for the water system and gave all encouragement and support to the first water board. He was a member of the committee charged with the erection of the Wyman, the old High and Wadleigh school buildings. These are only a few of the many instances where he has given his services to the town.

In 1865 he was elected one of the selectmen with O. R. Clark and D. N. Skillings. Then the selectmen were highway surveyor and overseers of the poor. He served as selectmen eight years and then as assessor and has been in some manner connected with the town most of the time since. He is at present chairman of the cemetery commission and superintendent of the cemetery.

A few months ago he lost his wife, after more than sixty-three years of happy married life—she passing away at the old home to which she came as a bride. In 1868 they celebrated their silver wedding in a tent in the field adjoining the house, and in 1893 their golden wedding was observed in the Calumet Club house. This event will be remembered by many of the citizens.

GEORGE A. SPAULDING.

GEORGE A. SPAULDING.

Winchester suffered the loss of an esteemed and highly respected citizen Thursday morning in the death of Mr. Geo. Albert Spaulding of Prospect street. Mr. Spaulding's death was caused by diabetes, after a confinement to his home of but three weeks. He was 52 years of age, during the past 20 of which he was associated with the Boston Post as advertising manager.

Mr. Spaulding came from a newspaper family, his father, the late George F. Spaulding, being prominently connected with the Boston Traveler for many years, and his brother, Charles H., being on the business staff of the Boston Record, having formerly been also connected with the Traveler. He was born in Dracut, Mass., Feb. 14, 1855, his parents being George F. and Johanna (Small) Spaulding. He was married sixteen years ago in Brooklyn, N. Y., to Miss Carrie Homer Symmes, who was born in this town. Following his marriage he moved to Winchester, residing here ever since. Besides his wife he is survived by one child, Miss Gladys Spaulding, and in addition to his brother Charles, of Roxbury, he leaves a sister, Mrs. Laura Holton, of Lexington. He was highly respected by all who knew him, and numbered hosts of friends, both in business and socially.

Funeral services will be held tomorrow (Saturday) at 2:30 p. m. from his late residence, No. 10 Prospect street, conducted by Rev. Henry E. Hodge, to which relatives and friends are invited. The burial will be in Oak Grove Cemetery, Medford.

MYSTIC VALLEY TROLLEY CLUB.

Enjoys a Pleasant Trip to Nantasket Beach.

The third excursion of this year was on Thursday, July 25. Leaving the centre at 7:40, Arlington was reached promptly at 8 o'clock. Thence the route was in Subway to Park St., via car to Harvard Square, in North Cambridge car to Dudley St., and in Neponset Bridge car to that point, arriving shortly after 9:30. Here was a wait of about twenty minutes for car of Old Colony St., Railway through Nantasket Point and the party disembarked at Wade's about 11:30. One of his justly celebrated clam bakes took the sharp edge off the appetites of the members.

At quarter before one return was made to the beach and about two hours were pleasantly occupied in sitting on the shady piazza of the Nantasket Hotel watching the rolling waves of old ocean. Boarding the electric train of the N. Y., N. H. & H. R. at 2:45, a beautiful ride along that line in sight of the sea brought the party to Pemberton at 3 o'clock. Here the steamer South Shore was taken for a delightful sail among the islands of Boston Harbor, landing at Rowe's Wharf at 3:50. An elevated train to Sullivan Square and the 4:17 North Woburn car from that station completed the travel of the day, the members taking transfers from the centre to their respective destinations, arriving before 5 o'clock.

Total fares 75 cents, dinner 50 cents, mottle, root beer and cigars extra. No crowd at any point. Everyone pronounced it a delightfully spent day.

Present: George S. Littlefield, George W. Payne, James H. Winn, Henry C. Miller and Dr. Albert F. Blaisdell.
Next trip will be to Historic Plymouth by way of Brockton, returning by boat, on Thursday, Aug. 1. Start on 7:10 Arlington car from the centre. Put nickels in thy purse and board the car. No initiation fee is required to secure membership in the club.

BACHELOR CLUB

ENTERTAINED.

The members of the Bachelor Club, composed of some of the most popular young men of the town, entertained about sixty of their friends at their Camp "Evergreen" on the banks of the Concord River, last Sunday.

On arrival at the camp, the visitors were taken on a ten mile trip up the river in a naphtha launch. About six o'clock a bountiful repast was served by the young men which was enjoyed by all present. In the evening an excellent entertainment was given. Piano selections were rendered by the Misses Emily Dowd, Annie Glendon, Mary Cosgrove, Helen Doherty and Fabiola Gendron, and vocal solos by Mr. J. Frank Davis, and Mr. F. Harkins of Woburn. Guests were present from Woburn, Arlington, Cambridge, South Boston, Lowell and Winchester.

Those present from Winchester were: Misses Annie Glendon, Grace Doherty, Annie L. Dowd, Mary Phyllis Spillane, Fabiola Gendron, Helen Doherty, Mary Doherty, Rose E. Doherty, Kathryn Mawn, Lucy Hargrove, Lillian J. Kane, Alice F. Sullivan, Nellie M. Sullivan, Mary Cosgrove, Marcella F. Dowd, Emily Dowd, Sue Morse, Mary Lally. Messrs. Clarence Mobbs, Robert Cosgrove, H. R. Glendon, Howard Cosgrove, Louis Smith, J. Frank Davis, Phil O'Melia, Stephen Cahalin, Daniel Lynch, James McCarthy.

FIVE FIREMEN INJURED.

St. Mary's Church Struck by Lightning and Steeple Burned.

One of the Worst Storms for Many Years—People Badly Frightened.

The severest thunder storm of this season visited Winchester on Saturday evening. Besides drenching the town with rain, a bolt of lightning struck the steeple of St. Mary's church, setting it on fire and causing several thousand dollars damage before the blaze was extinguished.

The storm broke without warning shortly before ten o'clock, accompanied by a heavy wind and much brilliant lightning. The latter was noticeable by the absence of the usual accompaniment of thunder, flash after flash lighting the town without a sound of thunder, and which terrified many of the inhabitants.

At ten minutes of ten a brilliant flash, followed almost instantaneously by a peal of thunder which shook the town, gave warning that a bolt had struck. Almost immediately the fire alarm sounded from box 36, and a few minutes later the eastern section of the town was lit up by the blazing steeple of St. Mary's Church.

The alarm was rung in by Jerry Moulton, who lives beside the church, he discovering the flames immediately after the lightning struck. By the time the first round of the alarm had sounded the fire apparatus was on the scene, the steeple at that time burning fiercely. The firemen were greatly hampered by weak hose and falling slate from the roof, but their work soon had the blaze under control, it being fought from the interior of the church and on both sides. During the early part of the fire the hose burst four times under the pressure of the steamer, necessitating the delay each time of coupling on new sections.

During the fire five men had a narrow escape from death by the breaking of a forty-foot ladder, the only thing preventing a serious catastrophe being a shorter ladder which was beneath the longer, and which prevented it from falling directly to the ground. Michael Ambrose was at the top of the ladder, just about to step onto the roof of the church, and he with the men beneath him fell to the concrete sidewalk. All received numerous cuts and bruises, John Flaherty of Hose 2 being cut and bruised about the stomach and George Osborne of the same company received a badly wrenched foot and elbow. John McCarron was badly cut on the face by falling slate, necessitating four stitches, and Ernest Polley received a badly torn leg from a barb on a hose nozzle, which also had to be sewed up.

As soon as the full pressure from the steamer could be brought to bear upon the flames the firemen had them under control, the damage being confined to the steeple and the water damage in the basement. Just as the flames were about out the water pipe on Elm street where the steamer was pumping, broke, the old cement pipe being unable to stand the strain. This flooded Elm street for a time, until the main could be shut off. The damage to the church was about $3,000. A peculiar fact was that the lightning, after striking the church, struck a large elm tree on the parochial grounds on the opposite side of the street, cutting off a large limb as clean as if done with an axe, the bough falling over against the electric light wires, which prevented it from blocking the street. The church was used on Sunday as usual the main auditorium being used for all services as the basement was filled with water.

Owing to the steeple being unsafe, Bridge street and a part of the walk in front of the church was roped off.

The shower was of a short duration and cleared the air wonderfully on Sunday, which was a magnificent day and very comfortable after the excessive heat of the week before.

The insurance adjusters Tuesday viewed the damage done by the fire. It was found that the tower was badly gutted above the church and will have to be entirely rebuilt. The main auditorium was little damaged beyond wetting the walls near the tower. Outside the tower the principal damage will be in the basement of the church. The vast quantity of water poured into the tower all ran down into the basement and settled there. This will probably necessitate the removal and relaying of a portion of the hardwood floor, although the exact damage cannot be told for a few days until the floor dries and its condition is ascertained.

MAD DOG SCARE.

There was a mad dog scare on the Plains Tuesday forenoon. Word was telephoned to the police that a dog was mad on Swanton street and roaming about to the danger of all in that vicinity. Officer Hargrove and Veterinary Buckley immediately visited the scene of the disturbance and found that the animal had been trapped in the house of George Hunnewell on Swanton street, the inmates having left the house and locked the door.

The animal was barking to get out, but Dr. Buckley thought it improbable that he was mad. However, the owner desired the dog shot and he was captured with a ship noose and killed. A large crowd had collected when the officers arrived and when the dog was brought out to be killed there was a wild scramble for places of safety, trees, telegraph poles and the roofs of low houses being soon covered in a highly amusing manner.

BLANK BROS. LEATHER WORKER KILLED.

Georgios Michulis, a Greek, aged 28 single, who lived at 50 Fowle street Woburn was struck by the B. & M. railroad train that left Woburn at 5:55 last Friday morning as was stated in last week's STAR, died at the Massachusetts general hospital.

Michulis was an employee of Blank Bros' leather shop, and was on his way to his work when he met with the accident that caused his death. He was walking on the track and at a point near Swanton street he stepped aside to let the train pass. In stepping back he was hit by the rear end of the last car, knocked down and his skull was fractured. Conductor Richard Carton, upon being notified by passengers who saw the accident, stopped his train and took the injured man to Boston, where he died soon after reaching the hospital.

POSTPONEMENT OF OPENING OF SCHOOLS.

Instead of opening the schools on the Wednesday after Labor Day, as provided in the rules and regulations of the school department, the school committee has decided to begin the fall term this year on the following Monday, September 9.

A BAFFLING FIRE.

Box 7, Central Fire Station, called the department out Wednesday afternoon for a fire that could not be located in the store in the small unoccupied building just north of the crossing. When the department arrived smoke was coming from the chimney and also from under the eaves. When the door was forced open the room was found to be full of smoke, but there appeared to be no blaze in sight. The interior of the room was searched and the roof examined still no indication of a fire other than smoke. At the rear of the building between the fence that adjoins the railroad tracks a small pile of rubbish was finally discovered smoldering, and it is supposed the smoke from this entered the building between the partitions, thence into the room and out again through the chimney and eaves. For a time it looked as if the firemen would have to break into the walls to discover where the smoke came from, but Engineer DeCoursey waited for a while before injuring the building, and in the meantime the rubbish heap was discovered. The adjoining store is occupied by a cobbler and he was absent at the time, having closed his store for the afternoon. The damage, if any, was slight. The fire is supposed to have been caused by a spark from a locomotive.

The crowd that congregated within a few minutes after the alarm had been sounded indicated that there are considerable many people yet in town, and that the business men even if their stores were closed, and their help off on a good time, were evidently working as usual behind closed doors getting their stores ready for business on the next day.

WINCHESTER BOAT CLUB.

Third in International Canoe Race.

The first race in the three events for the international sailing canoe trophy of the Royal Canoe Club was sailed at Langston Harbor, England, on Tuesday.

Kismet, sailed by Linton Hope of the Royal Canoe Club, finished first; Comancina, owned by G. Brambilla of Italy, was second, and Rosamond, built and sailed by Charles Burgess of the Winchester Boat Club was third.

In the second race, sailed yesterday the same canoe again won first place with Burgess second. This keeps the trophy in England.

AN UP-TO-DATE TOWN.

Hopdale Noted for its Magnificent Public Buildings and Public Parks.

A Real Democracy where Employer and Employee Co-operate in Everything that's for the Public Good.

Millford Journal Series.

There are few towns in our Commonwealth whose people enjoy all the modern conveniences of city life. It can be said that Hopdale furnishes all the conveniences of an up to date city. Though a town of less than 3,000 inhabitants, Hopdale has all the modern public improvements. It has a complete sewer system which was built and is maintained by the Draper Company. It has one of the finest systems of park roads that can be found anywhere in the state; water works, electric lights, public baths, parks, playgrounds and public buildings.

What the town is today, it was made by the Draper interests; both George Draper and his sons have shown great interest in its development. The late George Draper gave the Town Hall, a magnificent granite structure. His sons, Lieut. Gov. Draper and George A. Draper, gave the beautiful memorial church. Gen. and Mrs. William F. Draper gave the beautiful marble fountain. The high school building was donated to the town by the companies. The Draper Company also gave land worth $5,000 and about $5,000 in money to the Union Church. J. B. Bancroft, vice-president of the Draper Company, gave the town its library. With an innate love for the town, all the members of the Draper family have maintained their homes in Hopdale. They were born and brought up there. They laid there a foundation for their success. They reside there most of the year beside their employees.

What might be termed the "Draper influence," which frequently is emphasized by substantial moves for social advancement, is reflected in every section of the town. The whole town is an example of prosperity in which honest plainness knows how to live. Here is a manufacturing town in which the head of the family bows to none.

SAVINGS BANK INSURANCE.

Frederick W. Coburn, who is a member of the Committee of One Hundred of the Massachusetts Savings Insurance League, is the author of a long editorial article in The Outlook of July 20 on "The Savings Insurance Plan." This subject is likely to be of particular interest to Winchester people, among other reasons, because Preston Pond, a trustee of our local savings bank, is one of the board of seven trustees of the General Insurance Guaranty Fund appointed recently by Governor Guild. The concluding paragraphs of Mr. Coburn's article are as follows:

"There is historical presumption, however, for believing that once savings banks have been empowered under proper restrictions to enter the field of life insurance, whose province is in reality very closely related to their own, they may make a success of the undertaking, not perhaps to the extent to which some enthusiasts expect them to succeed, but yet steadily and progressively in much the same manner in which the savings banks themselves have made headway in the century of their existence, until today the 1,310 institutions of this kind in the United States represent 8,027,192 depositors and the tremendous total of $3,482,127,108 deposits. For the argument was satisfactorily applied to the savings banks themselves in the early days of their existence. Then it was commonly said that the average working man, having at best a mere pittance for his daily wage, would, as long as human nature is what human nature is, spend any little surplus over his absolute necessities at the public house or the cockpit. From time immemorial working men had always been improvident. A proportion of savings could be set aside from their earnings only through compulsion—that is, by direct or indirect taxation. There were even those who believed with the Duke of Wellington that if an ordinary man had a surplus to spare for the savings bank it was time to reduce his wage. Yet the event, in every civilized land, has proved the soundness of the argument of those who have asserted the capacity of individuals to regenerate themselves, or given the incentive of a stable and well-conducted system. The assumption that the savings and insurance bank, because it will not employ a force of solicitors and collectors, will be unable to make headway, is contrary to the present tendency among American savings banks which in 1906 increased their deposits by $26,497,000 in the face of the present high cost of living.

"This savings insurance movement is, therefore, in reality very important. It rounds out the conception of the functions of the savings bank as outlined by Samuel Whitbread during his memorial speech on reform of the Poor Laws in the House of Commons in February, 1807. The institution for savings, in the thought of humiliating necessities that in many places send so many wives and children out of their homes to a handicapped struggle for honor and independence. With his own hand provides what the household needs, and exercises the free and untrammelled right of an American citizen. It is stating but the truth when we say that no town on either side of the Atlantic furnishes so many happy homes with all the comforts of life, as the busy little town of Hopdale, and this, too, at less cost to the large army of wage earners than can be found in any other manufacturing city or town in the United States. Labor is an important element in any progressive town. The question of wages is always important to the man who works. As a note-worthy factor in his earning capacity must be mentioned first of all the auspicious circumstances that he is as well paid as any man in the country doing the same kind of work and always on good terms with his employer. Perhaps the most striking evidence of this is the freedom from industrial controversies. There have been no strikes at the Draper Company's works in the forty years of their operation. With such an ideal situation the employer and employee entertain the respect and good will of each other, all of which have a potent influence for the well being of the town.

The government of the town is in the hands of citizens who feel a personal responsibility for its well being. It matters not whether it is employer or employee, or whether it is the head of a department, or a mechanic or artisan. It is a real democracy and exemplifies an ideal condition through personal co-operation in everything for the public good. With such conditions, Hopdale presents a living example of what a real New England town government may accomplish where harmonious action is the dominating characteristic of citizenship.

the great Whig reformer, was to do more than receive accumulations and put them on interest; it was also to insure those of its depositors who desired life insurance and was to deal in annuities. It was to be the financial guardian of the thrifty poor, encouraging them to protect themselves in every way against the evils due to illness and superannuation. The central feature of the plan outlined by Whitbread, the ordinary savings bank, has now been in beneficial operation for a full century in this country at least. It remains to be seen whether or not its extension in the direction now proposed will be an adequate answer to the important question, 'How can the poor man insure his life for the benefit of his family economically and in conveniently timed installments?'

OLD HOME WEEK PARADE.

A prominent feature of Boston's Old Home Week will be the Parade on Wednesday, July 31st. Lieut. Gen. Nelson A. Miles has it in charge and it is estimated that it will be hours in covering the line of march.

About 10,000 men will be in line. The procession will leave the junction of Commonwealth avenue and Arlington street at 11 a. m., sharp, and go over the following route: Arlington, Beacon and Charles streets to Park Square, Columbus avenue, Berkeley, Tremont, Boylston, Washington, Summer, High, Pearl, Milk, Broad, State, Devonshire, Washington and Hanover streets, Tremont row, Tremont and Boylston street, Park Square.

ICE FELL ON CHILD'S HEAD.

Mary Elliott, 6 years old, living on Spruce street, was badly hurt last Friday by being struck on the head by a block of ice. The iceman was carrying a piece of ice to a nearby house on Lake avenue and as he passed the child, who was playing on the ground, the block slipped from the ice tongs and struck the little girl on the head. She was removed to her home in a very serious condition.

A GREAT POWER PLANT.

61,000 Horse Power, or More than the Energy of Merrimac River.

Description of the Edison Power Station at So. Boston.

How many persons as they stroll around Boston on an evening, and scarcely notice the innumerable electric street lights, realize the tremendous energy required to keep them burning brightly, or the wonderful and intricate mechanism required to provide that power?

Boston's street lights, as well as those of many of the suburban cities and towns are furnished through contract by the Edison Electric lighting company, which has several plants in various parts of the city to provide the energy for these lights and for motive power for factories as well.

Its combined plants generate a total energy of 61,000 horsepower, or in other words the power capacity of its system is greater than the energy taken from the Merrimac river by the combined mills and plants along its banks.

If all of the mills along the river were to shut down simultaneously and in a few moments to start up again, the amount of energy taken from the river at the starting moment would be about as follows: Lowell mills, about 15,000 horsepower; Lawrence mills, about 15,000 horsepower; Manchester mills, about 10,000 horsepower; Garvin Falls mills, about 8,000 horsepower; Sewalls Falls mills about 5,000 horsepower; Hooksett plants, about 3,000 horsepower; a total of 56,000 horsepower.

There are a few other plants outside the points mentioned which would probably require about 4,000 horsepower to start them, so that the Edison company's total energy capacity exceeds the demands upon the forces of the Merrimac river by about 1,000-horse power.

Outside of the mechanical expert, few persons realize the potency of 61,000 horse power. To give the lay reader a suggestion of what that force means, let him realize that one horse power will lift 33,000 pounds one foot per minute; then he can understand that the power generated by the Edison system can lift 2,013,000,000 pounds one foot per minute, or 1,007,500 tons the same height in a like time.

According to experts it requires 3 1/2 horse power to start one loaded freight car of 30,000 pounds weight, but after being started one-half horse power will keep the car in motion on a level rail. Therefore the power capacity of the big Edison system would start a loaded freight train of 17,714 2/7 cars, or would keep moving on a level rail a train of 122,000 loaded cars.

The average freight car in use today is 32 feet long, the space between cars is about three feet. Therefore a freight train of 122,000 cars, allowing also for the space between, would extend more than 808 1/2 miles. The energy generated in this big Boston plant would, then, move a string of loaded freight cars reaching farther than between Boston and Halifax, N.S., which is 732 miles, and the train would be longer than the distance between Boston and Detroit, a distance of 759 miles; longer than between Montreal and Halifax, where the distance is 758 miles; longer than between New York city and Augusta, Ga., a distance of 804 miles; almost as long as between Boston and Wilmington, N.C., a distance of 819 miles or between Boston and Chicago, where by the Nickle Plate road the distance is 1,010 miles.

A visitor can see a turbine engine of the L-street plant of the Edison company which is one of three such and the fourth is about being installed. Each has a capacity of 5,000 kilowatts, or 6,734 horse power, giving the plant a total turbine capacity of about 26,000 horse power.

WONDERLAND.

"Old Home Week" in the greater Boston will be a most appropriate time to visit Wonderland, New England's greatest park and most famous recreation grounds, swept by the cool sea breezes at Revere Beach. An extraordinary programme of attractions many of them free has been arranged for that week.

Every week at Wonderland is presented, absolutely free of charge, a number of the highest class acts mainly in the big circus ring and the trapezes and rings above it. For "Old Home Week" the principal free acts will be by the famous Kishizuna troupe of Japanese acrobats, one of the highest cost acts in the amusement world. Another will be Rose Wentworth, for many years with the Barnum & Bailey show, assisted by Gilbert Eldred and Harry Wentworth, in an equestrian novelty exhibition. Another will be the marvelous performances of Minton, the Marvel, who rides up and down a 50 foot pole on a unicycle. Then there will be concerts by the Ninth Regiment M. V. M. band, Washburn's famous Punch and Judy, Blake's high diving dog, Willard's French Horn quartette, George Steadman, who sings with the band, the Wonderland harlequins and the great board walk parades. These are at 2 and 7 o'clock.

There are about two dozen other notable attractions, such as Fighting the while from its other plants throughout Boston and vicinity it creates 35,000 additional horse power.

At the L-street station in So. Boston the turbine rooms are so arranged as to provide for four sets of turbines, each room having four such engines. In the first turbine room, that is now in use, are the four 5,000 kilowatt turbines. The second room, for which some of the engines have already been ordered, will have turbines of 8,000 kilowatt capacity. What the power of those to be placed in the two remaining rooms will be no one as yet has any idea, so many and important changes are taking place almost monthly in electrical power machinery.

While any person may see the innumerable street lights fed by the company's extensive system, and in some cases the motors its power runs in the various manufacturing establishments, even such a sight gives but a faint idea of the plant such a great system requires.

For instance there is over $5,000,000 worth of its wires buried under the streets of the city. In one small space 4 x 2 x 12 feet, at the Head pl station underground, is over two tons of copper bars, technically known as "bus bars" and yet when that same chamber is completed there will be no less than 27 tons of these bars to be seen there. In the Atlantic avenue and L-street plants there is a great deal more used.

What are they for?

An official of the company explained that they are for the purpose of carrying the current after it has been transformed from the alternating form as sent out from the L-street station, into the direct current of the commercial order, with a voltage of from 110 to 220. The former is used for the incandescent and arc lights and the higher power for driving motors in manufacturing establishments.

One of the monster valves is to be seen at the Atlantic-av station. These are 60 inch valves set in the exhaust steam pipes, and because of their tremendous size the valves are operated by electric motors. An idea of the size of the valves may be gained from the fact that it would require six men working in two relays 38 minutes to either open or shut one of them, whereas the motor does the same work effectively in one minute and a few seconds.

Another sight is the oil switches. These are electrical switches set in oil and the big copper bars (bus bars) are connected at certain points of the outside surface of the feeder main of the system. At different times and at varying places it is necessary to open the circuits and to do this the switches have to be pulled out.

A man does this work by the pressing of a button, although the amount of energy required to pull the switch out is equivalent to that necessary to stop an express train. When the switch is withdrawn a report almost like that of a cannon results. These switches are seen over in the L-street plant at South Boston, where there are quite a lot of them, placed in a double row.

The self-stoking furnaces over in the L-street plant, which are a great saving in labor do the work they are designed for even more effectively than could a man and saves the labor of many men. The coal is fed into hoppers at the top, and runs down through a chute to the furnace. The whole fire bed of the furnace travels back and forth, and by that means the coal is evenly spread upon the fire. It is a most fascinating thing to watch these stokers caring for the fires with almost human vigilance and care.

Flames, the Chutes, the velvet coasters, etc. Children, accompanied by parents, are admitted free to Wonderland until 6 o'clock every day, and to every performance of the great spectacular "Fire and Flames" for ten cents.

POLAR DAYS AND NIGHTS.

Day, Which Is Summer, Is Not So Bad, but the Night Is Awful.

During a polar winter the average thickness of ice on the ocean where no storms or strong tides interfere reaches six feet or more. There is really no warm season. Even during the long summer days snow still falls frequently. Clear spells are relatively warm, but, especially in the antarctic, fogs and clouds are frequent, while winds bring low temperatures.

Nevertheless the summer near the margins of the arctic zone is described in the Journal of Geography as having clean, pure, crisp air, free from dust and with little precipitation.

The monotony and darkness of the polar night is decreased a good deal by the long twilight, due to the high degree of refraction at low temperatures. The sun actually appears and disappears some days before and after the times which are geometrically set for the change.

Light from moon and stars and from the aurora also relieve the darkness. Optical phenomena of great variety, beauty and complexity are common. Solar and lunar haloes and coronae and mock suns and moons are often seen. Auroras seem to be less common and less brilliant in the antarctic than in the arctic. Sunset and sunrise colors within the polar zones are described as being extraordinarily brilliant and impressive.

Thus the north polar summer, in spite of its drawbacks, is in some respects a pleasant and healthful season. But the polar night is monotonous, depressing, repelling, an everlastingly uniform snow covering, rigidity, lifelessness, silence, except for the howl of the gale or the cracking of the ice.

Small wonder that the polar night has sometimes unbalanced men's minds. The first effects are often a strong desire for sleep and indifference. Later effects have been sleeplessness and nervousness, tending in extreme cases to insanity, anaemia, digestive troubles.

Extraordinarily low winter temperatures are easily borne if the air is dry and still. Nansen notes "not very cold" at a temperature of 22 degrees when the air was still. Another arctic explorer at 9 degrees says, "It is too warm to skate."

Zero weather seems pleasantly refreshing if clear and calm. But high relative humidity and wind, even a light breeze, give the same degree of cold a penetrating feeling of chill which may be unbearable. Thus the damper air of spring and summer usually seems much colder than the drier air of winter, although the temperatures may be the same. When exposed directly to the air, the skin burns and blisters, the lips swell and crack. Thirst has been much complained of by polar explorers and is surely due to the active evaporation from the warm body into the dry, relatively cold air.

There is no doubt that polar air is singularly free from micro organisms, a fact which is due chiefly to lack of communication with other parts of the world; hence diseases which are common in temperate zones, colds among them, are rare.

A BUNCH OF ROSES.

At a regatta on Lake Lucerne the whole surface of the lake was strewn with roses.

The rose has through all time been the symbol of the purity and charm of girlhood.

Spartan soldiers after the battle of Circha refused offerings of wine unless it was perfumed with roses.

The rose seems to have long been the symbol of silence. It has been suggested that the utter inability to set forth the charms of the rose has admonished to silence.

Sweet as the fragrance of a garden is the Persian fable of the lump of clay which gave to the air a perfume that floated over the garden walls of fair Iran. "I have been dwelling with roses," said the clay.

In Bulgaria and Roumania, which are great centers for the manufacture of attar of roses, damask roses are exclusively used. These are gathered at dawn, just as the buds begin to unfold, and the essence is distilled from them before the sun sets.—Circle.

BOSTON LETTER

Lodge Will Enthuse Delegates to Republican Convention

BARTLETT MEN WIDE AWAKE

Democratic Machine Is Largely For Nomination of Henry M. Whitney—Independence League Will Have Its Own State Ticket

The announcement that Senator Henry Cabot Lodge is to preside at the Republican state convention in October has pleased every loyal Republican in the state. It is 16 years since Mr. Lodge has acted in that capacity in Massachusetts, and his selection was one in every way fit to be made.

There is no contest over any place on the state ticket this fall and there will be very little to bring the delegates to Boston. But Senator Lodge can always draw a crowd and fill a hall in Boston, and his selection makes it certain that the state convention will have a full quota of delegates. No man in Massachusetts today has done so much for the Republican party as Senator Lodge. He is pre-eminently the one Massachusetts leader who can arouse the enthusiasm of a Republican gathering and set Republican committees heartily at work for the ticket. At Washington he is known as the ablest senator in the country, and he has earned this reputation by hard and persistent work and by his brilliant and scholarly attainments.

It is quite possible that Democrats may not like this selection. Mr. Lodge is too forceful a fighter to be particularly pleasing to Democrats. He knows their weak points and his shafts of logic and satire easily penetrate them. His speech to the state convention will undoubtedly be the ablest deliverance of the kind in this state for many years. It will be worth a great deal to be present and listen to what the senior senator has to say upon the issues of the campaign.

Possibly this appointment will not please everybody in the party. There are some who would prefer a person half Democratic, rather than the senator, who is altogether Republican. But the real Republicans, those who are party men month in and month out, will be delighted to come to the convention and listen to the remarks of the greatest statesman in New England today.

Bartlett in Dead Earnest

If anybody ever had any doubt of the sincerity of General Charles W. Bartlett's candidacy for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination that doubt must now be dispelled by the earnest work being done to boom the Boston man.

For some weeks now several of the men most closely connected with the Bartlett movement have been canvassing the state to ascertain, as nearly as possible, just what Democratic sentiment in regard to the nomination may be. The results of this canvass have convinced the Bartlett men that there is a very emphatic protest against the nomination of Henry M. Whitney of Brookline.

There is a very considerable element in the Democratic party which regards Mr. Whitney as an undesirable candidate. They recognize his shrewd political mind, and are well aware that he is a man of large ability and incessant activity.

None the less they felt that it would be decidedly unfortunate for the Democratic party, in a year when Democratic opportunity seems to be unusually promising, to nominate a man whose record would need instant defense after the adjournment of the state convention. They feel that his relations with the Massachusetts legislature have been of such a nature that he would justly be the target for the attack, not only of Republicans and Independence Leaguers, but also of independent citizens, who owe no allegiance to any party whatever.

Mr. Whitney has been a long time in the public eye. He has been a financier, a promoter of large undertakings, a manipulator of legislative bodies, the head of a great traction company, and has also figured in various other capacities.

Such Democrats feel that the Democratic party should nominate a man less vulnerable than Mr. Whitney. They argue that there is no lack of gubernatorial material and that the wisdom and discretion of the Democracy should lead it to make a stronger choice than would be done by nominating Henry M. Whitney. There is no doubt that Mr. Bartlett stands extremely well in the party. If nominated, he could properly expect the full Democratic vote, since he has always been a Democrat and known as such from time immemorial.

Whitney Making Hot Fight

At the same time it must be conceded by these Democrats that Mr. Whitney also is making a tremendous campaign. His friends have been traveling through the state for a good many weeks and during their journeys they have met with a large number of influential Democrats and built up a Whitney organization which looks strong and substantial. There is no doubt that Mr. Whitney is making an intelligent and active canvass for the nomination. His lieutenants have done sufficient work to show public sentiment to be at present for Whitney rather than for Bartlett.

Blanchard, Kendall & Co.

This is partly true for the reason that nearly all the old warhorses of the Democratic party came out for Whitney early in the season, and before it was generally known that General Bartlett was to shy his castor into the ring. These men feel that Mr. Whitney is to be the nominee, unless something entirely unforeseen should happen meanwhile to upset the present calculations. There was a time when Mr. Whitney felt that a nomination for the governorship would be almost as good as an election. He does not think so now. He is well aware that Governor Guild has made an excellent executive and undoubtedly strengthened himself with the masses by his acts during the past six months.

The Independence League has no use for Henry M. Whitney. One of its members said the other day that members of the league would absolutely refuse to vote for any man with the legislative record of Henry M. Whitney. He said he could heartily support General Bartlett, but so far as he was concerned, if Whitney were nominated by the Democratic state convention, he for one would refuse to vote for him at the polls, but on the contrary would vote for Governor Guild in preference.

Independence League Anti-Whitney

But now it is the fixed intention of the Independence League to nominate an entirely independent state ticket from top to bottom, and come out alone, wholly without regard to what action the Democratic party may take. It cannot be denied that the league has considerable strength. Some of its friends claim that it has a following, at the present time, of at least 20,000 voters, and that by next fall it will be considerably larger than this.

Democrats, however, declare that the Independence League will cut both ways; that it will injure not only the Democrats, but also the Republicans, and that it is possible it may inflict greater injury upon the Republican party than upon the Democratic. It is extremely doubtful if this is true. The larger number of those who will be found in the league column will come from the Democratic ranks. Those who have attended the League meetings say a great majority of those present have been men who were formerly well known as Democrats. This was said to be the case last year and it is even more likely to be so this year.

The recent interview given out by John B. Moran, the picturesque district attorney of Suffolk county, has given the Democrats and also Whitney and Bartlett both a pretty emphatic jar. For Moran declared that with either Bartlett or Whitney, Democratic defeat was certain, and he undoubtedly spoke a large amount of truth. He might also have added that with Moran at the head of the ticket, defeat would not only be certain, but deserved. A good many other men are quite as thoroughly convinced that Whitney or Bartlett would be defeated, whichever one secures the Democratic nomination. That feeling is growing very much stronger all the time.

It is recognized in all quarters that Governor Guild has made a splendid executive. No governor for years has made such excellent appointments, absolutely above criticism, as has Governor Guild. All his official acts have been above just attacks, and he is undoubtedly much stronger today than he was a year ago. From all parts of the state general commendation of his policies and his acts as governor have come down to Boston, and show better than anything else how he has gained ground in public estimation.

ASKS AN INVESTIGATION.

An Illinois Mayor Says Waterworks Are Wastefully Operated.

In asking the council of Galesburg, Ill., for an investigation of the water department Mayor Shumway of that city brought out some rather startling facts. He states that receipts from rentals are $1,400 a month and that $1,000 a month may fairly be allowed for hydrants, yet the operating expenses are $2,500, which thus exceed the income, although, according to the report, there is no allowance for depreciation or sinking fund and apparently none for interest on the $300,000 investment.

Even more remarkable is the mayor's statement that three-quarters of the water pumped is unaccounted for. To quote:

"From this condition of affairs it is manifest that the amount of water reported pumped is grossly exaggerated, or the leakage unaccounted for demands prompt and careful investigation."

To remedy these conditions the mayor makes several recommendations, among which are the following:

"First.—I suggest that a careful survey of the plant and report of condition of same, with suggestions for the placing of the plant on a paying and businesslike basis, be made.

"Second.—That the water rates be revised.

"Third.—That the free list of water takers be suspended."

But why should there be a free list? Or is that supposed to be a necessary incident to political management?

Keeping in Touch With the Town.

The absentees are making this a very quiet town the past four weeks. But through the columns of the STAR they are keeping in close touch with what is taking place in Winchester.

Been at it Too Long.

The Boston Herald is busily engaged these days trying to disrupt the Republican party. Its hostility to Senator Lodge dates back many years and is personal. When Massachusetts has the services of such an able statesman as is Senator Lodge then the state is indeed fortunate. The voters do not place much stock in the Herald editorials—they are not even Democratic although always hostile to the Republican party. The Senator has too strong a hold on his party to care much about what the Herald says.

Moth Question at Woburn.

For the past three weeks state employees have been working on the gypsy caterpillars at Woburn. Supt. Kirkland of the state said that the city should spend more money and employ more men in the work of destroying them than had been the case, but as Mayor Blodgett thought Woburn was doing all that it could, and as the borrowing capacity was practically used up, he failed to do as Supt. Kirkland demanded. Hence the presence of State men. The question now in the mind of the Mayor is where is the money to come from.

Weak Hose a Serious Matter.

During the fire at St. Mary's Church last Saturday night the fire hose broke no less than four times at critical stages of the fire, thereby losing much valuable time in cutting out the broken sections, and but for the heavy rain, the damage to the building might have been far more serious. Fire hose that is weak or worn out lessens the efficiency of the work of the entire department more than fifty per cent. Of what good is the steamer and alert and capable firemen if the hose fails to withstand the strain. This matter should be attended to immediately and all defective hose consigned to the old material heap and disposed of.

The engineers of the department were evidently not aware of this serious state of affairs at the time their annual report was made in March, or if they were they failed to ask for money

ELECTRICITY.

It does seem strange that anyone should be willing to forego the advantages of the electric light—the safe, convenient and really economical modern illuminant. Improved lamps and the reduced rates make it a more economical light than ever before.

Have you learned for hose because of other more pressing necessities. They state in their report, "Most of the hose is in serviceable condition." Surely the fire of last Saturday night, does not bear out this statement. Again they say:

"The Department needs at least 5000 feet of good hose on hand at all times, and we feel that some should be bought every year, but as we have nearly the above amount on hand, and as hose can be bought in 48 hours' notice, we do not feel that it is necessary to purchase any at once, but we do recommend that the sum of $250 be appropriated to be used if necessary."

The engineers should cause at once an inspection of all the hose now in use, and that found to be defective or weak thrown away or kept for use in cases where the steamer is not called into service, and new purchased.

Of what good is the fact that hose can be bought on 48 hours' notice. The time to have reliable hose is during a fire, and not in the fact that it can be procured quickly or after serious loss to property has occurred from its defective condition.

A line of hose is no stronger than its weakest spot, and a repetition of the serious state of affairs at Saturday night's fire should not be allowed to continue for a day longer.

A Good Swimming Place.

The children of Winchester are to be congratulated in having so good a swimming place as is "Sandy beach," so called, even if it is some distance from the centre of the town. Pure water is much more preferable than having a bathing place a short distance away and assuming the chances of impurities. The water that passes down the Aberjona river to Mystic Lake contains many impurities, as one can see by standing on the bridge on Pleasant street and watching the chemically green water that comes down from the chemical works at North Woburn. This with the other putrid water collected on the way down through Woburn and Winchester to the Lake would not make a bathing place near to the mouth of the river desirable or safe.

Warning from Board of Health.

The Board of Health sends out a warning (printed elsewhere in this issue) cautioning people against eating berries of all kinds, found either in the woods or on roadsides, owing to the universal use of arsenate of lead on trees and shrubs.

OBSERVATIONS.

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

After hanging at $16.80 for three years, 1903-5, the tax rate has now reached a dollar more and many citizens are inquiring why, as they were given to understand that the advance to $17.60 last year was caused by the gypsy and brown tail moth appropriation and that it would go down this year. Well let us look at the items for the past two years, '06-'07, and see what caused the increase of rate:

Note.—The Assessors overlay adjusts the slight difference between these figures and actual result.

Now the town could have kept down the rate at least half a dollar by managing a little differently, by raising the money for sewer construction by bond issue instead of taxation and by making some of the appropriations a little less, but it did not choose to do so. Our State, County and Metropolitan taxes have also increased our tax rate about thirty cents over last year for those items. In ten years, 1898-1907, our town appropriations have increased 37 per cent. and State, County and Metropolitan Sewer and Park appropriations 152 per cent. It looks very certain that the rate in the Metropolitan district and in fact in all growing places will keep up close to $20 until more personal tax is collected.

The cups have appeared upon the Lebanon street fountain, now let the mud puddle be done away with as it has existed too long already.

There was some careless work at the Catholic church fire last week. The ladder which broke was put against the building at altogether too flat an elevation and then a rope was stretched across Bridge street and left there with no lantern upon it. The hydrant opposite Kendall street on Bridge would have been a better one for the steamer than the one used on Elm street.

If the Winchester's who played last Saturday is a local team I should like to see what an out of town team looks like. I guess they were "barn stormers" but they played pretty good ball just the same and had too. But why are not these Saturday games bulletined in the local paper so that people may know there is to be a game?

It does not look as if the merger issue will hurt Whitney's chances for election any. There is no question about his nomination and the indications at present are very strong for his election. The people of this state are demanding men who will look after its interests and not be completely tied up to the national party.

This is the time of year when the town buildings and grounds should be put in order. The School Committee should fix up some of its buildings and yards, also the Water Board and the Selectmen. By the way, why is it that work on the walls and ceilings of the offices and corridors of the Town Hall building for which money was appropriated last year has not had attention yet?

The reason the special committee reported against selling part of the Eaton street lot was because the neighboring property owners worked against it as they preferred the open space. The town needs this land just about as much as a cat needs two tails.

I am glad to see the street department has started upon repairing the macadam streets as it is the most necessary work it has before it and there is much to be done. Some of our macadam streets are very far from being in good condition because they have been neglected too long and with the settling where trenches have been dug are anything but smooth. When the board has the money and the street railway is ready to lay new rails on Washington street the crown should be raised four or five inches as the street was built too flat originally.

OLD WINDMILL

BLOWN DOWN.

The storm of Saturday night wrecked the large 70-foot windmill that stood on the Brooks estate, Grove street, Medford, and was one of the landmarks of this vicinity. Sunday morning the tower was found blown down and almost demolished. It will be rebuilt.

Miss Hilma Abramson is stopping at Hyannisport.

TOURIST BUREAU.

A general tourist bureau for free information has been established in Boston, the offices being located in the Old Corner Bookstore building at the corner of Washington and School streets, one of the most historic of Boston's landmarks. The office, which is on the same plan as ones now maintained in New York, Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore and other places through the West and South, will be under the management of two young men, Mr. Thomas P. Patrick and Robert H. Derrah both of whom are well known in the railroad fraternity. Mr. Derrah started his career with the West End Street Railway Company sixteen years ago in the office of Henry M. Whitney where he remained for ten years. He was also passenger agent of the Boston & Northern and Old Colony Street Railways, and has done more to create pleasure travel by the trolley than any other person. His Street Railway Guide has been a standard publication for many years. Mr. Patrick is well qualified to handle the steam railroad and steamship lines as Mr. Derrah is the electric and they certainly do make a good combination. Mr. Patrick was for fifteen years with the Southern Pacific and other steam roads as traveling Passenger Agent and during that time has made thirty round trips to California in charge of parties. This office will furnish all the information you may desire pertaining to the trolleys, steam, steamship lines, summer hotels, seashore and country resorts, etc.

A cordial invitation is extended to the public when visiting Boston to make this office their headquarters where every courtesy will be extended.

PARAGON PARK, NANTASKET.

The phenomenal success of Paragon Park this summer is attributed by Manager George A. Dodge, to two things—first to the arrangement of the Park itself, the "de luxe" idea it might be called, and second to the great list of free attractions. Mr. Dodge has always believed that the public appreciate a park which is not built on the rough and ready plan. He has been especially fortunate in securing attractions for his free open air circus. Starting out with the idea of eliminating all vaudeville acts he has engaged circus features regardless of cost. This week Speedy, the champion high diver of the world, is daring death at every performance by plunging 150 feet through the air into a tank of water only 36 inches deep and 10 feet square. At night Mr. Norin does the great "Fire Dive" which is perhaps the most sensational act ever shown at a summer park. A distinct novelty is Don Pedro Mauregon, "The Human Spider," who climbs a rope to the top of the electric tower by his toes.

Other free attractions at Paragon Park are the Martland Band Concerts, Johnnie and Florence Maguire who sing with the band, the Sand Bumps, the Hurly Burly slide, the Hot Sands, the Baby Elephant—who is to have a public christening a week from Sunday, by the way. The Japanese Village, The Bridge of Sighs, Houdini 2d, and others too numerous to mention.

LOVELY MONTEPELIER.

Yearly Growing in Favor as a Summer Resort.

Montpelier, in Vermont, familiar to the tourist as the half way place between Lake Champlain and the White Mountains, is also widely known as a delightful summer resort. Living in the valleys of the Winooski and Worcester rivers, the city is surrounded by wooded hills, green lawns and pleasant groves, and is in every essential a natural park. As a summer home, Montpelier offers superior attractions to city residents and yearly increasing numbers Boston and New York people are learning that it is a most excellent place for a family outing of several weeks or the summer. Within easy riding distance is Mirror Lake, a lovely little sheet of water two and a half miles long by one half mile in width with fine farms lying back from its shores and with numerous cottages scattered along its banks. Cedar groves and pleasure grounds are conveniently near, affording excellent facilities for tent-life and bivouac. There are skiffs, launches, sailboats and a small yacht on the lake and visitors find it a most delightful and restful retreat. A more detailed description of Montpelier's charms is given in "Summer Homes," issued by the Central Vermont Railway and sent for 6-cent stamp enclosed to T. H. Hanley, N. E. P. A., 360 Washington St., Boston.

SPAULDING—July 25, George Albert Spaulding, aged 52 years 24.

LONDON'S EAST SIDE.

Fearful Picture of Poverty and Dissipation.

A SATURDAY NIGHT SCENE.

The Awful Spectacle That a Bitterly Cold Evening in Winter Disclosed to the Wayfarer in the Streets—The Hucksters and Their Customers.

Let me show you something which is more terrible than tragedy and more hideous than vice. It is a close wedged procession of thousands of happy but shabby men and women and children passing at a crawl between shop windows and costermongers' barrows on a Saturday night in winter in south-east London. The wind from the Thames blows bitter and thither the flames and naphtha lamps and makes them tug and hiss at the greasy burners. It is bitterly cold. Women draw their gray shawls closer over their heads; men turn up their coat collars, hump their shoulders and thrust their hands deeper in their pockets, and the blue faced children, squeezed between the legs of the crawling multitude, shiver and snuffle as they creep so slowly forward with chattering teeth and purple lips, which twitch and shudder, half from cold and half from hunger.

Look at some of the faces. The women have their hair dragged back from their foreheads. The eyes are hardly visible. The noses are short and broad. The blubber lips reach across their swollen faces. The men have shifty eyes. Their underjaws project. There is nothing in their faces which suggests dignity or kindness. On all the faces you read satisfaction and content. Even the starving children peep about with excitement.

On the top rail of a stall, stuck upon hooks and just high enough to grin above the multitude, are the heads of two sucking pigs. The eyes are half open and wear a glassy smile. Round the rim of the ears and at the edge of the open grinning lips is a line of blood. They seem to hang there like the presiding deities of the market, the gods of this sordid festival.

Butchers stand before their open windows, calling loudly and briskly for customers and reaching down joints of meat from steel hooks, which they fling to a man inside to be weighed. Children, bareheaded and in rags, thrust themselves among the crowd, offering beet roots on pieces of dirty newspaper. The street is filled with cries. There is a smell of fish and fusty garments. Into our faces as we go forward foul, fat women with hoarse voices shove handfuls of animal matter—things all bloody and dreadful—and tell us that the cost is only two pence. At another barrow an old woman and her three daughters are selling for pennies, twopennies, threepences and fourpences the loathsome oldments from their rag shop. Blouses, stays, petticoats, nightdresses, trousers, waistcoats and caps—all of them so sodden and musty that we doubt if they would burn—are snatched up from the wide stall, flourished in the light of the naphtha lamps and flung across to the highest bidder for a few coppers.

And, while this marketing is going on and while the air is filled with the hoarse shouts of the hucksters, out from the public houses, like bees dislodged from a swarm, drop men and women, many of them carrying babies in their arms, and slouch away into the darkness of some neighboring court. The gin shops are crammed—crammed with men, women and children. The more careful housewives are fingering bits of meat scarce fit for dogs and haunting the stalls till they have collected enough for Sunday's dinner, but when this is done they, too, fling their way into the gin shops and drink till closing time. In and out of the pawnbrokers' shops pass the mothers who wish to rescue their best clothes for the Sunday. The money lenders' doors are never still. And the crowd in the street grows denser and noisier. The smell of it fills the soil with nausea.

A young man, with a child or two in his arms, comes out of a public house. His wife and a girl friend follow after him, looking for him going home so early. The wife carries a baby of three or four months in her arms. In the middle of the road the girls begin to dance and sing. The husband turns round and laughs. The child in his arms, with dazed eyes, watches her mother singing and dancing. The dirty woman cap on the baby's head slips off as the mother whirls about, and we see the poor little bald head going round and round in the glare of the naphtha. How that tiny brain must swim! How it must wonder at the shrill laughter of its swaying mother! The baby is no larger than a skinned rabbit. Round and round, round and round, to the shrieked tune of "Sally, Sally, Was in the Ballet," while the husband stands grinning and the girl friend suddenly reels and goes down behind a barrow, chuckling and cursing—Detroit News.

"To the Lamp-post."

"To the Lamp-post" is a mistranslation of "a la lanterne." There was no lamp-post. The lamp was hung over the middle of the street, in the center of a cord, which passed over pulleys at the sides of the street. The lamp was let down, the person to be hanged was substituted for it, and the ends of the cord pulled—London Notes and Queries.

"THE GREEN BIRD"

NEXT MONDAY.

This is the last week of rehearsals of "The Green Bird" and next Monday night the new D. K. Stevens and John A. Bennett musical show will be given for the first time on any stage at the Majestic theatre. Although the piece was written by a Boston man and is backed by Boston capital it is a thoroughly New York production for all of the principals are Broadway favorites and the chorus is composed of Manhattan's very prettiest maids.

Fred Lennox, George Schiller, Will H. Sloan and John P. Kennedy, who have the four leading comedy roles have all been featured in Broadway productions within the past year.

Miss Elsa Ryan needs no introduction. Eleanor Kent closed her season with Anna Held in "The Parisian Model" to join "The Green Bird." Alice Hosmer is considered to be one of the funniest character comedienne on the stage and Helen Hayes is always popular.

"The Green Bird" is being staged by James Francis who has put on any number of big Broadway shows, and the music is under the direction of DeWitt Coolman one of the best men in his line of business.

AUTO COLLISION.

Last Saturday night at Swampscott, Mr. and Mrs. H. N. Nickerson were in a smashup in which three automobiles were badly damaged. Mr. and Mrs. Nickerson, who are staying at the Lincoln House, Swampscott, had been on an automobile drive along the North Shore, and were returning to the hotel at 9:30 o'clock. In a machine immediately behind them Mr. and Mrs. Craig were on their way to a German at the New Ocean House. Both cars were making good time, when from the opposite direction, going toward Marblehead, another machine appeared, and this machine being on the wrong side of the road, there was a collision.

The only person injured was Mrs. Nickerson, who received unimportant bruises, notwithstanding the fact that she was thrown some distance from the machine.

No person except the duly authorized agents and employees of the Selectmen shall carry in or through any of the streets, squares, courts, lanes, avenues, places, or alleys within the Town of Winchester, any house-dirt, ashes, or house offal, either animal or vegetable, or any grease or bones, or any refuse substances from any of the dwelling houses or other places in the town, unless such person so carrying the same, and the mode in which the same may be carried, shall have been expressly licensed by the Board of Health upon such terms and conditions as it may deem the health and interest of the town require.

SECTION 2. No person without the license of the Board of Health shall throw into, or leave in or upon any street, court, square, lane, alley, public square, public enclosure, pond or body of water, or vacant lot within the limits of the town, where it would be offensive or injurious to health, any dead animal, dirt, sawdust, soot, ashes, cinders, shavings, hair, shreds, manure, oyster, clam or lobster shells, waste water, rubbish or filth of any kind, or any refuse, animal or vegetable matter whatsoever.

SECTION 3. Whoever violates any provision of the foregoing by-laws shall be punished by a fine not exceeding twenty dollars.

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

Humor and pathos to the accompaniment of exquisite music will rule at the Castle Square next week. As a special Old Home Week attraction, the management will offer a double bill consisting of Gilbert and Sullivan's comic opera "H. M. S. Pinafore" and "Cavalleria Rusticana," Mascagni's masterpiece of musical tragedy.

The cast at the Castle Square next week will include Otis B. Thayer as Sir Joseph Porter, J. K. Murray as Captain Corcoran, Geo. Shields as Dick Dead-eye, Harry Davies and Geo. Tallman alternating as Ralph Rackstraw, Lois Ewell as Josephine and Louise LeBaron as Hebe.

"Cavalleria Rusticana" is also of apparently never-ending popularity. Next week Miss Clara Lane will sing the role of Santuzza, with Louise LeBaron as Lola, Harry Davies and Geo. Tallman alternating as Turiddu, J. K. Murray as Alho and Hattie Belle Ladd as Lucia.

"Carmen" will follow during the week of August 5th.

THE TAX RATE.

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

In your report of the town meeting of July the chairman of the assessors said in reply to a question as to what the tax rate would be—that it would be similar to last year. Then the $800 additional money was voted for street lighting.

The Sunday Herald of the 21st in large type says "Highest Ever" the tax rate of Winchester $17.80, a fine ad. is it not?

Will the Chairman kindly tell your readers on what ground he based his statement? WHITEFIELD TUCK.

VERMONT IN . . . SUMMER TIME

Central Vermont Railway
Has Issued Handsome
Book Telling About It.

Always early in the field with its warm weather literature, the passenger department of the Central Vermont Railway has just issued its 1907 edition of "Summer Homes," which is sent for a stamp on application to T. H. HANLEY, N. E. P. O. A., 360 Washington St., Boston. The book describes the beautiful scenes among the green hills of Vermont and around the shores of Lake Champlain, is handsomely illustrated and includes lists of hotels and of family homes which are recommended to pleasure and health seekers, excursion fares, maps, and such concise information as will enable the "don't know" tourist to arrive at a decision.

The Night Errand of a Knight Errant.

By JEANNETTE H. WALWORTH.

Copyright, 1906, by James Schreiber.

THE Panola people are exclusive. So are the mountain peaks. Both are lonely. Also both inspire awe in the beholder.

There are five of the Panola people to share the exclusiveness and the loneliness they have elected to maintain, a mother and four daughters. The mother looks as young as the youngest daughter, and the youngest daughter looks as old as the oldest. The entire group has a contemporaneous appearance. They talk contemporaneously, and they think in a batch. They have the effect of being preserved in amber for the consideration of future students of their kind. They would well repay the cost of the amber and the labor of preservation. They are the peculiar product of a day that is done.

Locally they are always spoken of as "the Panola ladies." Panola is the Indian word for cotton. As their lands are given over to the exclusive cultivation of that staple the name stands justified. Even in their industries, you will perceive, they were exclusive.

Whenever the demands of the larger world render it imperative that provisions shall be conveyed from the store to the plantation two of the young ladies go for them. It is not at all easy to decide whether it is the youngest two or the oldest.

It was on one such occasion that Bixby, the storekeeper, bubbling over with the best intentions, gave some advice and invited his doom. Few people ever ventured to advise the St. John Daltons. No one ever did it successfully.

In a spirit of veiled apology for the meagerness of the purchases he was making under the seat of their old buggy, one of the young ladies thus plaintively alluded to the stringency of the money market:

"What with our cabins out of repair and the restlessness of tenants it is impossible to keep such a large estate as ours in proper condition at the present price of cotton."

Bixby beamed benevolently upon the two plucked aristocrats, blundered and fell from grace: "Right you are, my dear young ladies. But I say, why not cut the blasted old place up into small farms and sell 'em off to darkies? You could keep enough right around the house to do for a garden and a corn patch for old Highflyer here and live in clover on the proceeds of the rest."

The stiff leathern reins were gathered more tightly by the small, thin hand of the driver. Her finger tips showed through the frayed fingers of her gloves. The flash of a diamond ring pierced the third finger of the old gloves. Its wearer looked vaguely over Bixby's head:

"Did you put up 10 cents' worth of laundry soap, Mr. Bixby?"

Bixby quailed before her frigid glare, but answered meekly, "Yesum."

"And a package of cooking soda?"

"Best blackb. Soda's all right."

"Thank you. That is all this morning. Get up, Highflyer."

After the manner of a woman practiced in rubbing things in, the storekeeper's wife added a last drop to his cup of bitterness:

"Maybe some of these days, Bixby, you'll know enough to save your breath to cool your porridge. When folks gets to giving advice to them St.

John Daltons it's time for the cows to come home with butter on their horns. Come to your dinner, Reuben."

She had found him conferring affably with a strange man. From Mrs. Bixby's point of view measureless possibilities of iniquity attached to every strange man.

"Ladies from top to toe," Bixby was saying, "but in a fair way to come to actual want with silver and gold enough tucked away in jewelry and tableware to keep them in comfort all the rest of their days."

"How about the men of the family?" the strange man asked with what Mrs. Bixby declared "vicious alertness."

"Got none. Father and two boys picked off at Chickamauga. Mother writes poetry about 'em and about old times. Daughters scuffle round some sort of fashion to keep body and soul together."

"How far do they live from here?"

"About three miles straight back to the swamp. A lonesomer spot never was. Hanged if I don't think it's a deadly risk for a lot of unprotected females to be livin' in such a place with no locks and no men folks."

At which juncture Mrs. Bixby had appeared on the store gallery and given her peremptory invitation to dinner with such an accompaniment of frowns that Bixby accepted it without delay. When they reached the family quarters behind the store Mrs. Bixby turned upon her spouse to read him.

"Heaven help you, Reuben Bixby, for a first class idiot. For you to up and tell a strange man, from the Lord only knows where, exactly how he can help himself to all he wants out of Panola. If they are every one of them murdered in their beds tonight, poor creatures, they will have you to thank for it."

Bixby's flesh turned rough with terror. He blanched at the picture of his wife's drawing. She beamed her satisfaction at results.

"So you begin to see it, do you?" she went on.

He began to see it. In great distress of soul he took counsel with his bookkeeper. What should he do to prevent those five innocent aristocrats from being murdered in their beds or, to them a much worse fate, being despoiled of their ancestral belongings, the things which were more than meat or raiment to them?

Bixby's bookkeeper was young. More than that, he had long entertained a hopeless adoration for the youngest of the Miss Daltons. He was fired with the chivalric resolve to protect the whole batch of Panola ladies from the possible consequences of Bixby's indiscretion.

By the time his own supper was disposed of that night the bookkeeper's plans were perfected. He would drop in at Brent's, where the fellow had left his sample trunks, and find out what he was about. It was clearly his duty not to lose sight of the villain. But at Brent's, where a laughing story telling group of knights of the road were filling the air with smoke and chatter, that particular drummer was not to be found.

The inference was plain and blood curdling! He had already started for Panola with heaven only knew what diabolical schemes in his head. Interception then must be his own role. It was a good three miles' tramp along a dark and muddy lane, but immortal glory awaited him at the other end. "The fellow" must have had a good start of him. There were no signs of the villain anywhere. Not even when he reached the much bepatched fence about the Panola house were there any signs of travel in that direction save the footprints he was himself leaving in the heavy mud.

Under that lichen covered roof slumbered five timid, helpless females, all of them lovely, one of them adorable. They would never know it, for he, their guardian angel, would stand away with the first gray shaft of dawn, having kept vigil over their slumbers through all the hours of darkness.

Or, greater glory yet, he might fall a victim to his chivalric duties. With a shuddering sense of his own inferiority he recalled the stalwart proportions of the inquisitive villain. But to die in defense of such a creature—his soul clung to the singular number—would be bliss provided he might only hear her say before his last gasp, "Jonas, live for me!" which of course he would politely decline doing.

As a group the Panola ladies were interesting. As an individual Miss Maude was absorbing. He had never yet addressed her as an individual. She knew him only as a fetcher and carrier of brown paper parcels from Bixby's shelves to their buggy.

The world had doled out happiness to Jonas with but a niggard's hand. But tonight he would wipe out all old scores. He groped his way through the wreck of a highly ornate front gate. He advanced boldly up the broken brick walk. As the villain had not preceded him he was still to arrive. Fortune had given him the field. Tonight he was only Bixby's clerk. Tomorrow he would be—

Bang!

He spun about, with his hand to his pistol pocket. Where was the miscreant?

Bang! Bang!

Heaven's! Those shots came from behind those faithless doors. The miscreant had already effected his entrance.

Bang! Bang! Bang!

There must be twenty men there. He promptly put a tree between himself and annihilation.

As the smoke of this one sided battle cleared away a gentle unshaken voice floated across the intervening space charged with inquiry:

"Kindly let us know who that is skulking behind that pecan tree. Speak distinctly, please, so that no mistake shall be made between foe or friend before we fire again."

Bixby's bookkeeper preferred not to speak at all. He was making a mental map of the premises he had traversed with a view to strategic movements toward the rear. Again that sweet unshaken voice:

"Please let us know who that is behind our pecan tree. We do not want to hurt any one, but we ought to tell you that there are still three loaded pistols on hand."

A dim vision of flying legs and fluttering coat skirts was vouchsafed the fair garrison briefly. The big gate groaned on its rusty hinges impelled by a wild push. There was nothing but a straw hat left on the battlefield.

With a momentary disregard of values, Miss Maude Dalton laid her still smoking pistol down upon a priceless Florentine table. She glanced at the weapon frowningly.

"I must take it to pieces tomorrow. It is getting hard on trigger. Rusty from disuse, I suppose."

The oldest Miss Dalton picked the weapon up and wiped off the Florentine table caressingly with the sleeve of the wrapper she had drawn over her nightgown.

"Maude, you show our dear old table no more respect than if it were kitchen deal."

Miss Maude followed her sister's movements abstractedly. "I do wish we knew who it was," she said.

The five St. John Daltons laughed contemporaneously and contemptuously.

"Some one who has yet to find out that women can protect themselves in the hour of need. Maude, dear, I do hope this untimely disturbance will not give you one of your bad headaches," said the eldest.

Bixby's clerk stopped in at Brent's tavern on his way back to the store. He really felt the need of something to quiet his nerves. Moreover, he might incidentally learn something about the movements of that fellow. Agitation, disappointment and perplexity struggled for the supremacy in his knightly bosom. The night clerk at Brent's bar must have made the toddy Jonas ordered unusually strong, or perhaps fatigue did it. He fell asleep on the cane settee soon after imbibing it.

When he awoke it was midnight, and the inquisitive villain was giving an order to the night clerk. Bixby's bookkeeper was intensely wide awake in half a second. His tired eyes opened to their fullest capacity when he discovered in the fellow's hand the straw hat which he was last conscious of as it had dropped from his fleeing head.

The fellow came over and seated himself by the dazed owner of the hat.

HE DISCOVERED IN THE FELLOW'S HAND HIS STRAW HAT.

He passed a long gentlemanly hand gently over its soiled ribbon as he said:

"I picked this up in the Panola front yard a little while back, and as it is not likely I shall be going back to Mr. Bixby's perhaps you will be so good as to leave it on his counter so that the owner may find it."

The baffled knight errant fell into the trap. "Then it was you that fired all those shots?" he asked.

A demure smile wrinkled the corners of the "fellow's" lips. "No. No. I am afraid I cannot claim the laurels of this occasion. I suspect it was my cousin Maude," he said.

The jaws of his hearer dropped disconsolately. Your what?</

Tired Nervous Women Make Unhappy Homes

MRS. NELLIE MAKHAM

MRS. GEO. A. JAMES

A nervous irritable woman, often on the verge of hysterics, is a source of misery to everyone who comes under her influence, and unhappy and miserable herself.

Such women not only drive husbands from home but are wholly unfit to govern children.

The ills of women act like a fire brand upon the nerves, consequently seven-tenths of the nervous prostration, nervous despondency, the "blues", sleeplessness, and nervous irritability of women arise from some organic derangement.

Do you experience fits of depression with restlessness alternating with extreme irritability? Do you suffer from pains in the abdominal region, backache, bearing-down pains, nervous dyspepsia, sleeplessness, and almost continually cross and snappy? If so, your nerves are in a shattered condition and you are threatened with nervous prostration.

Proof is monumental that nothing in the world is better for nervous troubles of women than Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs. Thousands and thousands of women can testify to this fact.

Mrs. Nellie Makham, of 151 Morgan St., Buffalo, N. Y., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I was a wreck from nervous prostration.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotics or harmful drugs and today holds the record for the largest number of actual cures of female diseases of any medicine the world has ever known, and thousands of voluntary testimonials are on file in the laboratory at Lynn, Mass., which testify to its wonderful value.

THE OSAGE MONSTER.

How a Steamboat Whistle Affected Missouri Pioneers.

STORY OF A HISTORIC HUNT.

Armed For the Fray, the Frightened but Determined Old Settlers Sought the Ferocious Beast With the Fearful, Screeching Voice.

The first steamboat that ever turned her prow against the muddy Osage waters was the Flora Jones in the spring of 1844. There was no commercial club in those days to stimulate river traffic, no telegraph or telephone to herald to the hardy pioneers the approach of the boat—only the unearthly shriek of a banshee-like whistle, enough to blanch the cheek of the simple minded folk who had lived far from the world's progress.

The little boat went up as far as Harmony, Mo., in Bates county. History records the fact that when the Flora Jones puffed her way along the St. Clair county shores and the wail of her siren was tossed back and forth by the limestone bluffs many of the old settlers were not only frightened figuratively out of their boots, but literally out of their homes. Matthew Arbuckle, a pioneer, tradition tells us, was plowing in his field about a mile from the river when the wail of that whistle struck his ear. He unhitched his horse from the plow, managed to get on its back and, wild with terror, struck for the hills. In one hour he was at Papinville, fifteen miles distant, the horse white with foam, the rider white with terror. He had barely strength to tell of "an awful animal" from which he had made his escape. He had not seen the fearful beast, he confessed, but he had heard his voice, by which he knew it to be a monster of terrific proportions.

Arbuckle's neighbors were brave and, though much disturbed by his account, determined upon a campaign of extermination. They had defended their homes against Indians, and they reasoned that no wild animal, however ferocious, could withstand their rifles. They gathered at Uncle John Whitley's. He had seen service under Jackson at New Orleans. His home was up the tortuous stream from Arbuckle's farm.

The next morning a crowd of hardy pioneers, with guns and dogs, were ready at Uncle John's. The gallant band numbered among its members Uncle John Whitley, James Breckenridge, Benjamin Morris, William Bacon, Hamilton Morris, Benjamin Burch, William Roark, Frank Roark, Benjamin Snyder, Snowden Morris and Matthew Arbuckle.

They were agreed that there should be undertaken a quest for the mysterious monster threatening their homes and families. Just before the signal to start was given Mattie, a daughter of Whitley's, went down to the river, 300 yards distant, for water. In her absence the Flora Jones, which had tied up for the night at a bend in the river below, again sounded the terror inspiring whistle.

"Charge, men!" roared Whitley, seizing his gun. "Matt went to the river for water, and I reckon she's dead afore now!"

The crowd rushed to the river, determined to rescue the girl if she was yet alive. But Matt, it is hardly necessary to state, was met on the way. She was headed homeward, her hair streaming behind and her face blanched with fear.

With their weapons ready for instant action the determined hunters continued riverward. The crew of the Flora Jones, proud of her whistle, continued to sound it at frequent intervals, and its reverberations rang from bluff to bluff unceasingly. Each fresh blast added to the uneasiness of the band of settlers. Frequent councils were held. The failure of the dogs to take the scent perplexed them.

The hunters scoured the Osage thickets all day. Breckenridge lost faith in hounds and declared that he would go to St. Louis for Newfoundlanders. Meanwhile the Flora Jones had proceeded up the river to Harmony, and her whistle was no longer heard. As night came on a storm broke, and the hunters took refuge in a cave.

With the return of dawn there began again the hideous wail of the mysterious monster. The Flora Jones was making an early start on her return trip down the river. Nearer and nearer sounded the whistle, until the hunters, who had tumbled hastily from their cave, could distinguish a puffing and blowing, supposed to be the snorts of the advancing foe.

The moment of decisive action seemed at hand. The hunters rushed to the river bank. Each selected a tree to stand behind and looked to the priming of his gun.

An instant later the Flora Jones rounded a bend and loomed into view. Upon her deck was a gay crowd of passengers watching the early sunrise flooding the water with rosy light. Uncle John Whitley, Jimmy Breckenridge and their band of heroes were too astonished to answer the friendly hail as the boat swept down to the next bend, her whistle mocking their past fears.

Little was said as the hunters tracked homeward. Unostentatiously each sought out his home. And so ended the historic hunt for the monster of the Osage valley. —Kansas City Star.

The Figures Would Open Their Eyes.

There can be no doubt that all the water supplied free by municipal water departments should be paid for.

by the particular bureaus or departments that use it. Just as would be the case if they were supplied by a private company. The water so used is a debt to the taxpayers of the town, and if the statistics of free water were published the eyes of water consumers would be opened as to how much they are taxed for the payment of water to sprinkle boulevards, streets in front of non-water paying tenants and water to protect the property of people who make their tenants pay for their supplies of water.—Editorial in Fire and Water Engineering.

THE POET WHITTIER.

How He Met His Only Love and How They Drifted Apart.

John Greenleaf Whittier was one of the sweetest poets that this country or any other has ever produced, and this in spite of the fact that he was doomed to live and die a bachelor.

In the spring of 1828, when the poet was about twenty years old, he did his first and last courting.

In the quaint old town of Marblehead, in the home of a well to do shipmaster, dwelt Evelina Bray, the shipmaster's daughter. Evelina was "sweet sixteen," as pretty as a peach and as pure as the wood violets with which she loved to decorate her hair, and with the winsome, modest maiden Whittier fell desperately in love.

During the aforementioned springtime as the flowers were creeping up from under the snow and the landscape was taking on its first delicate touches of the summer to come young Whittier went down to Marblehead, found Evelina and told her of the sentiment that he could no longer conceal. To his joy he learned that the sentiment was reciprocated.

But the "course of true love did not yet run smooth," and it was already decreed that Whittier's was to be a "lost love."

The shipmaster of Marblehead was a worldly man, and one of his chief delights when on shore was to hear his daughter play on the piano and sing, while Whittier himself were of the strictest sect of the Quakers, in whose eyes a piano was an emblem of sin and music the sure and certain mark of wickedness.

Between these opposite, antagonistic and uncompromising views of things there was no concord possible. Whittier knew it. Evelina knew it, and, like the philosophers that they were, they concluded to say no more to each other upon the tender subject—and they never did.

Five years later, in 1833, the couple met again, but no word was spoken of the affection that each knew was in the other's heart. It was the meeting of friends, that was all.

It was not until 1835, at a class reunion at the Haverhill academy, that the poet and his sweetheart again stood face to face. Since he had last beheld her fifty-two years had rolled away. The two were now old. The rose had faded from Evelina's cheek, and into her lover's face wrinkles had stolen, and upon his head old time had left his time.

But the heart never grows old; love is immortal—immortality young and fresh—and, parting from his old love forever, the poet went home to write the touching lines—

Look forth once more through space and time
And let thy sweet shade fall
In tenderest grace of soul and form
On memory's treasured wall—
A shadow and yet all.

BEER FOR BREAKFAST.

The Awful Morning Meal That Was Once in Vogue in England.

The breakfast appetite varies strangely. Some persons are content with a cup of coffee and a piece of toast. Others make it the most determined meal of the day. Once it was formidable indeed. In Sir John Hawkins' "History of Music" is quoted a sixteenth century manuscript belonging to the house of Northumberland which gives the breakfast arrangements of the Percy family both for Lent and for flesh days, and, oh, how some of us have fallen away in trencher work! Here is the simple Northumberland scheme: "Breakfast for my lord and lady during Lent: First, a loaf of bread in trenchers, two manchets (a manchet was a small loaf of white bread), a quart of beer, a quart of wine, two pieces of salt fish, six bacoon'd herring, four white herring or a dish of sprats. Breakfast for my Lord Percy and Master Thomas Percy: Item, half a loaf of household bread, a manchet, a bottle of beer, a dish of butter and a piece of salt fish, a dish of sprats or three white herring. Breakfast for the nursery for my Lady Margaret and Master Ingerman Percy: Item, a manchet, a quart of beer (this for the nursery), a dish of butter, a piece of salt fish, a dish of sprats or three white herring."

At ordinary times my lord and lady fared thus: "First, a loaf of bread in trenchers, two manchets, a quart of beer, a quart of wine, half a chine of mutton or else a chine of beef boiled." Lord Percy and Master Thomas Percy disposed of "half a loaf of household bread, a manchet, one bottle of beer, a chine or else three mutton bones boiled," while to the thirsty nursery went "a manchet, one quart of beer and three mutton bones boiled."—Cornhill Magazine.

She Wasn't Engaged.

"And do you have to be called in the morning?" asked the lady who was about to engage a new girl.

"I don't have to be, mum," replied the applicant, "unless you happens to need me."—Yonkers Statesman.

Nerve Sick

If weak, worn-out, nervous, cannot sleep; have indigestion, headache, neuralgia or periodic pains, it is because your nerves are weak. It is the lack of nerve force that makes the stomach, heart, lungs, etc., work imperfectly—become sick. Dr. Miles' Nerve Cure cures the sick when it restores nerve strength, and puts the power behind the organs to do their work.

"Almost three years I suffered from nervousness, indigestion, and palpitation of the heart. I could not eat or sleep with comfort, or walk or talk without suffering. Together I was in a bad condition. My doctor did not seem to do me any good. I had tried so many remedies that I did not have much hope of any of them doing me any good. Dr. Miles' Nerve Cure was suggested by a friend. I got relief from the first, and after a few days I felt like a new person. It not only relieved my heart and nerves, but has invigorated my whole system. I am very grateful because since I have stopped using it, I have had absolutely no return of my old trouble."

Why Committee Reported Adversely.

An unfavorable report on municipal ownership was made to the city council of Kaukauna, Wis., by an aldermanic committee that visited Belkfontaine, Columbus, Richmond, Reeseville and Evansville. Alderman Martin said the lighting plant at Belkfontaine cost $73,000; that the city owes $322,000 bonded debts and has a tax rate of 4 per cent. The city owns waterworks, gas and electric lighting plants, conducts extensive improvements and pays its public officials high salaries for tending the plants.

Alderman Martin further says that in other cities, in the effort to make a good showing, plants are allowed to run down until the amount they are bonded for would not be covered by the present value of the property.—Municipal Journal and Engineer.

Equipping Boston's suburban railroad service for electric power is only a matter of a few years, in the opinion of many, and renewed interest in the proposed idea will result in the announcement of the new electric schedule of the N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R. from New York to New Rochelle. The electric cars between Boston and various suburbs, including Wakefield, are crowded practically all the time at present, and railroads must meet the competition. The chances are that the installation of electric service on the railroads would not affect the present electric railways and both would be well patronized.—[Wakefield Item]

A lucky woman in Caribou, Me., recently by mistake used fine cut tobacco instead of tea at the morning meal, and claimed afterward that she had discovered a new cure for the use of tobacco by her husband, which had proved effectual.

The Medford postoffice has been added to the Boston post office district. Sooner or later about everybody who lives within 25 miles of Boston will be entitled to register as of "Boston." Don't worry about the Methodist ministers of the country. The average salary of those unfortunate in the United States, last year, was $437.35 and if they have succeeded in living on that they have shown that nothing can be beyond their achievement. But as to the living as the word goes, one can have grave doubts of its enjoyment.

Mr. Eben Caldwell has been elected treasurer of the Winchester Savings Bank, succeeding the late Charles E. Redfern.

Miss Josephine M. Brine of 219 Washington street is spending a few weeks with her friend, Mrs. Boylston at Princeton, Mass.

The Attorney General has approved the additions to the Board of Health by-laws voted by the town at the last special meeting. They can be found on page five.

Richard Reynolds of Woburn, who was drowned in Horn Pond yesterday, was born in this town and had many friends here.

Dr. Henry J. Olmsted has rented the lower apartment in the brick apartment house on Church street opposite the Common, through the office of Sewell E. Newman.

Miss Annie McNamara died at the Salem hospital Wednesday of cancer. The remains were brought to this town Thursday and the funeral will take place tomorrow at 3.30 from the home of her nephew, Michael McNeil of Washington street. High mass will be celebrated at St. Mary's Church at 9 o'clock. The burial will be in Calvary Cemetery.

Rev. and Mrs. S. W. Adriance and sons, William and Robert, leave next week for a stay at New Harbor, Me.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur B. Grover left Fitzwilliam Depot, N. H., and are now stopping at Hudson in the same state.

Mr. Herbert L. Larrabee, the well known insurance agent of this town and Boston, has moved his Winchester office into new quarters in Waterfield Building, next to the post office. Mr. Larrabee's new office is the neatest and handsomest in town for any business, and he will continue to give insurance in all the best companies to the satisfaction of his many customers.

TO SWIM IN DIKE'S POND.

Stoneham citizens desire that town to take steps towards opening a public swimming place in Dike's pond, it having been suggested that the surplus money left from July 4th be used for that purpose.

In connection with the proposition the Stoneham Enterprise says: "That many citizens claim that the Metropolitan Park Commission and the town of Winchester, interested parties, would have a spasm if Dike's Pond was used as a public bathing place. This feature of the discussion should be considered before any definite action is taken."

Dike's pond has been the source of considerable controversy in this town, during the past, being situated near the north reservoir and flowing into that place. It is doubtful if the scheme for swimming there is carried out.

FUNERAL SERVICES OF GEORGE A. SPAULDING.

The remains of the late George A. Spaulding, of Prospect street, vice president and a member of the board of directors of the Post Publishing Company, and also advertising manager of the Boston Post, were laid to rest in the family lot at Oak Grove Cemetery, Medford, on Saturday afternoon.

Impressive services, conducted by the Rev. H. E. Hodge of the First Baptist Church, a life-long friend of the deceased, were held at the home on Prospect street. The house, commodious as it is, was crowded with neighbors, business associates of the Post, relatives, and the heads of some of the large business houses of Boston, who attended the services to pay their respects to their departed friend.

There was a wealth of flowers, among them offerings from E. A. Grozier, head of the Post Publishing Company; W. A. Grozier, business manager; the Post staff, and many contributions from prominent business houses.

The Rev. Mr. Hodge in the course of his remarks said:

"Our brother has entered into rest and gone to his long home. In his life he had a deep religious experience and was most active in church matters for many years."

"He had many characteristics which endeared him to those with whom he came in contact. He was kind and gentle. I found the best of his life in his own home with his family."

"He was a man of great integrity and high ability and was beloved by all. Only his life was taken away, but although he has ceased to be with us, he has a home with his heavenly father."

During the services Mrs. F. W. Cole sang "The Ninety and Nine," a hymn which was a favorite with the deceased.

Among those present were the following: Charles Spaulding, brother of the deceased, and his wife; W. I. Symmes, brother-in-law; Mrs. Frank Reynolds, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Bernard M. Wolf, Miss Minnie Fuller, Miss Clara Hilborn, Miss Carrie Gunnison, Mrs. Charles Lunt, Harry Lunt, Mrs. Fanny Converse, Miss Edith Rice, Miss Dodge, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Holton, Mrs. M. Butler, J. A. MacDonald of the Dodge-Spear Company, Samuel Turtellot, and many other intimate friends.

The Boston Post was represented as follows: W. A. Grozier, business manager; editorial department, William Taylor of the board of directors and John Kerrison; advertising department, J. G. McGowan, G. F. Madden, Louis Merrick, composing room, A. H. Marchant; financial department, W. E. Soule; circulation department, D. A. Maloney.

A QUESTION OF ACCOMMODATION.

EDITOR OF THE STAR.

This summer there has been placed at the Winchester station of the Boston & Maine railroad a settee. This seat was placed presumably for the accommodation of the lady patrons of the road, as it is situated just outside the door at their waiting room.

If this is so, why is it that from morning till night this seat is occupied by men? Not once since the settee was placed here have I been to the station when men were not occupying it; and the majority of the men who so occupy it do not appear to be patrons of the road, but rather employees.

On an afternoon of last week I found three men using the seat, one reclining at full length and all smoking. Although the day was extremely warm I was obliged to sit on the sunny side of the waiting room, as the pipe smoke blew through the open windows in such quantities as to make it very unpleasant on the shady side.

If the settee is intended for the men and station employees to lounge upon, why does not the road place it at the other end of the station, so that ladies need not be annoyed by pipe smoke when standing outside or sitting near the windows.

I think that my expressions voice the opinion of almost every lady who waits at the station, and hope you will consider them of sufficient importance to make mention of the matter in your paper.

MRS. N.

MRS. BRIDGET FLAHERTY.

Mrs. Bridget Flaherty, aged 54 years, wife of Coleman Flaherty of Main street, died at the home of her son John, No. 8 Oak street, on Sunday. She leaves her husband and three sons, John J. Coleman, Jr., and Martin. A sister, Mary Beatty of this town, and a brother Philip Doherty of Lynn also survive her.

Funeral services were held from St. Mary's church on Tuesday at 9 a. m., conducted by Fr. Roach. The choir of the church rendered several selections during the services. The pall bearers were James Kern and Coleman Connolly of Woburn, Patrick Thornton of Boston, Peter McNulty, Michael Crampton and Thomas Connolly of Winchester. The burial was in Calvary Cemetery, Montvale.

IT IS NOT FAVORITISM.

Mr. Henry C. Robinson, Supt. of the Southern division of the Boston & Maine is not losing a great deal of sleep because of the Mayor of Woburn's hostility to him, and the threat to take his grievance up with President Tuttle. The Mayor and a committee of the city government waited on Supt. Robinson for the purpose of securing additional trains and reduced fares. It is said the visitors lost their tempers, and felt aggrieved because the Superintendent talked back to them a little. If Winchester receives better accommodations than Woburn, it is because Winchester is on the main line and not for the reason of favoritism shown by Supt. Robinson or any other official. This town is credited with being among the leading towns in this part of the State in the number of passengers carried, and that is the reason for the present service. If this was not so, trains would be withdrawn. Mayor Blodgett should not accuse Winchester of being unduly favored, thereby hoping to carry his point. It only served to make Mr. Robinson a little warm.

NO INTERFERENCE

HEREAFTER.

It is said that the work at the recent fire at St. Mary's church was much retarded by numerous orders given to the firemen by outsiders. There were a number of men present not connected with the department who pitched in and did what they could but there were others it is said whose aid consisted solely in giving orders to the firemen. This caused much confusion, and Chief Symmes hopes that this will not be the case again, for if it is he says he will call on the police to stop or arrest the offenders. Chief Symmes takes the right stand in this matter, as all orders should emanate from him. He has the experience and has assumed the responsibility and if any man knows what to do at a fire he certainly should be the one. Numerous orders from several individuals, would soon demoralize the men. The order has now gone forth "Let the men alone." It is said the misplacing of the ladder on which the men were injured was due to not knowing how to handle the ladder by an outsider.

F. H. MARRINAN, Leader.

NEW SUB-MASTER AT HIGH SCHOOL.

The school committee appointed this week Mr. Benjamin D. May as sub-master at the High school to fill the position occupied by Mr. Robert T. Elliott. Mr. May comes here from Nantucket, where he has been principal of the High school. He is a graduate of Tufts College, class of 1898, with the degree of A. B., and also holds the degree of A. M. at Harvard. He enters upon his duties here with the opening of school in September.

Another new teacher which the committee have appointed to the same school is Miss Marjorie N. Weeks, Radcliffe college, who will take Miss Hill's position as teacher of English. Miss Hill having accepted a position in the Boston Latin school. Miss Weeks comes from Manchester, Mass., where she taught the same course in the High School of that place.

STORES CLOSED.

The stores will be closed next Wednesday, "Traders' Day." There will be an outing at Bass Point, where there will be a game of base ball. Many of the business men and their clerks will go on individual excursions with their families.

REPUBLICAN STATE CONVENTION.

The Republican State convention is to be held in Symphony Hall, Boston, on October 5th. Senator Henry Cabot Lodge has been selected to preside.

THE OLD SHOE SHOP.

This shoe shop was built in 1837 by Mr. Sumner Richardson, for his cousin, Mr. Samuel S. Richardson and was used by the latter for a shoe factory. It stood on the site of the present Lyceum Hall Building. Pleasant street did not then exist.

WILL ASK FOR MORE HOSE.

In a chat with Chief Engineer Symmes of the Fire Department he informed us that his board will ask for 1000 feet of new fire hose at the March town meeting. This he believes will replace the greater part of the weak hose. Compared with other towns he believes that the present condition of the hose compares favorably, and perhaps averages better. Breaks, he claims, are bound to occur, as in many instances it is the first indication of weakness even where it has been carefully inspected. A source of injury to hose is running over it by the wagons of the department, which cannot always be avoided. The sharp caulk of the horses' shoes also at times cut the outside covering. Mr. Symmes says the former could be eliminated by the use of the rubber tires on the apparatus, which are not so very expensive considering the saving effected in this direction and the long time that the tires will last. Another thing that will tend to prevent bursting hose is to have the fire hydrants closer together. The distance between them should be cut down at least a third more if possible—as this would save a great deal of wear and tear as hose in the end is more expensive than installing additional hydrants. He estimated the wear on the hose at the fire in St. Mary's Church to be several hundred dollars, as over 2400 feet had to be used. With closer hydrants this expense would be greatly reduced. This depreciation will occur at any large fire when a large amount has to be used between the scene of a fire and the hydrants.

LARGEST ATTENDANCE YET.

The band concert of last Saturday afternoon was attended by the largest audience since the series opened. There was no ball game to detract from the pleasures of listening to the sweet music, and this may in a measure account for the large attendance. We counted at one time twenty-five autos and carriages standing on the parkway and fifteen canoes in the river, the occupants of both being much interested in the music. The scene on and near the river was very pretty, the gaily decked canoes and bright costumes of the ladies, the gay occupants of the autos and carriage and the large number of women and children in holiday attire making the occasion one of beauty and animation. There is much pleasure to be derived from attending these concerts and the wonder is that they are not more generally patronized. The music by the Woburn Brass Band is most excellent and there is plenty of it, of great variety and with no tedious waits. Leader Marrinan is certainly endeavoring to make these concerts successful and popular, and in his efforts he has the hearty cooperation of the members of his band who are all experienced and highly trained musicians.

A STURDY MEMBER OF SYMMES FAMILY.

Mrs. Sarah Symmes, a member of the famous family of that name, paid a visit to the Times office Monday to get a copy of that paper containing Dr. March's sermon, last Sunday on his first birthday.

She and all her family drove from Arlington to the First church in this city, when children, as there was no church of that denomination either in that town or Winchester.

She is the only surviving child of Mr. and Mrs. Symmes. The former died aged 90 years, the latter aged 94. Two of the children died at a ripe old age, Stephen, Jr., being 84 years and Mrs. Josiah Locke, 85 years.

The family were great admirers of Dr. March and have all of his books in their library.—(Woburn Times.)

MASSACHUSETTS AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.

There will be a summer school at Massachusetts Agricultural College in 1908. This will follow somewhat the same lines as the school which has proved so popular and successful this year. This announcement came officially from the Dean, Professor F. A. Waugh, on Thursday. It was stated further that although the courses would be somewhat changed in 1908 the main idea of this year's school would be adhered to and improved as far as possible. Probably one or two strictly technical courses in certain lines of horticulture will be offered and if possible there will be additional professional courses for teachers. The expenses of the course in 1908 will be considerably greater than they have been this year, but will not exceed a total of $5 to $6 a week. It is expected furthermore that some definite limitations will be put on the number of courses which students may elect and also upon the number of students admitted to each class. If this year's experience is an indication of what may be expected next year it will be necessary also to put some limitation upon the total number admitted to the school.

MR. PHILIP J. BLANK WEDS.

Mr. Philip J. Blank, one of the best known business men and largest real estate owner in town was quietly married on Monday evening at six o'clock to Miss Marguerite Chase Curtis of Boston.

The ceremony was private and very quiet, being performed by Rev. Mr. Wright a personal friend of the bride and taking place at her home on Concord street Boston.

Upon their return from their wedding journey Mr. and Mrs. Blank will reside at Mr. Blank's home, No. 84 Walnut street.

ELECTRICITY FOR SUBURBAN TRAINS.

That Boston's suburban train service is soon to be equipped with electricity is the statement contained in a report given out yesterday by the railroad commissioners in regard to the enforcement by the board of the abatement of the smoke nuisance.

The report says: "In suburban service there is good reason to anticipate an early adoption of electricity as motive power."

MYSTIC VALLEY TROLLEY CLUB.

Look a Trip to Historic Plymouth Yesterday.

On Thursday, August 1, the start was on Arlington car at 7:10. Beacon street car from Arlington taking transfer to the Elevated south at Scollay square; at Dudley street, Canton car as far as Mattapan arriving at 9 o'clock; 9:05 car for Brockton, through Milton, Quincy, Randolph and Avon. Arrived at Brockton at 10:15. Short rest with moxie and root beer accompaniment. At 10:30 through car for Plymouth, through Whitman, Hanson, Hattax, Pembroke and Kingston. Arrived at Samoset House at 12:30. Here the party partook of dinner and at 2 o'clock began to explore the town. The new Registry of Deeds and Probate building was first visited. It reflects great credit upon Plymouth County. The County Jail next was carefully inspected. Turnkey Herman Tower conducted the party about the various parts of the building, including the wash room, the kitchen, the corridors lined with prisoners' cells, the hospital and the chair factory. Everything was found in first class condition and well adapted to its purpose. Mr. Tower and the Judge indulged in some reminiscences of the old time bowling, when the former was captain of the Commercial Club of Brockton and the latter of the Calumet Team. They agreed that the only game is "bottle pins," and that "candles" and "Bostons" are not in it.

Cole's Hill Burying ground was visited and the fine view of the harbor delighted the party. But the hour of return was soon at hand, and at 3:30 the "Old Colony" was boarded for a beautiful sail past Duxbury, Marshfield, Scituate, Cohasset and Hull into Boston Harbor, and then past the forts and islands, which gave a fitting termination to the doings of the day. Rowe's Wharf was reached at 6:15, and by way of the Elevated, and Lowell car from Sullivan Square, Winchester square was reached at 7:05 p. m.

Present: George S. Littlefield, George W. Payne, Henry C. Miller, James H. Winn, Warren Johnson, Albert F. Blaisdell and F. E. H. Heath.

Mr. George F. Parker, who had come up from Cottage City intending to join the party, was taken suddenly ill and was unable to make the start, much to the regret of the other members.

A pleasant feature of the return trip was the exchange of salutes with the tug Juno which was returning from the fishermen's race and a like interchange of courtesies with the victor of the race.

The band on board the schooner saluted the big steamer with the strains of "Yankee Doodle" to which the pilot of the "Old Colony" gave a suitable reply with the steam whistle.

Next trip Thursday, August 8th to Worcester, starting from centre at 7:25, Arlington car.

COMPLIMENTED BY A LARGE AUDIENCE.

Rev. Geo. B. Spurr, a young Unitarian divine, preached at the Universalist Church on Sunday morning. Mr. Spurr, who has many friends and relatives in Hyannis was complimented by a large audience who were in attendance to hear him preach. Mr. Spurr's subject was, "The Triumph of Faith," and the text, "I believe. Help thou mine Unbelief." St. Mark 9:24. The preacher said that this was an age of doubt, and that life was hampered by the pessimistic view many took of it, while optimism and faith not only made the future outlook happier, but faith also tends to develop the best qualities of character. Faith sees also the best side in others and makes those who possess it appreciative of the good in human nature. Mr. Spurr's message was a plea for the higher plane of living which the adoption of faith in God produces. Mr. Spurr has an advantage over many public speakers in the fine quality of voice and the pleasant, clear enunciation of which he is the possessor. The service was impressive.—(Hyannis Patriot, July 29)

THE VACATION QUESTION.

Valuable Pointers in the Central Vermont Railway Handbook.

Where to go for a vacation is the question that is perplexing thousands of individuals and families, and it's not an easy one to settle. Those who seek the kind of a vacation which will afford a complete change of scene and which will send them home thoroughly rested and invigorated, should know that Vermont is the best place to get it.

Vermont's attractions include the Green mountains region, the islands and shores of Lake Champlain, and the picturesque Winoski valley, all on the line of the Central Vermont railway, Montreal, the Thousand Islands, Ausable Chasm and Niagara Falls are also reached by the famous Green Mountain route via White River Junction.

MANY CONGRATULATIONS.

Mr. Samuel W. Twombly on the occasion of his 85th birthday, Wednesday, was the recipient of many letters, telegrams and telephone calls. The following from a former resident, was particularly pleasing to Mr. Twombly, and by his permission the STAR reproduces it for the benefit of its numerous readers:

MONTAGUE, July 30, 1907.

Accept, Dear Sir, my cordial cheer As you round out your eighty-fifth year; Your face shines bright in the Winchester STAR.

Your name and fame shine out afar. To fertile soil on "West Side" street In early days you turned your feet. There to your home you brought your wife;

The joy and helper of your life. For three and sixty years you wrought With her dear self in every thought. Her charms, and sense and thrift combined

To give you a contented mind.

In all the cares and woes of earth, To you she proved of heavenly worth. But when the three-score years and more Of wedded joy were counted o'er,

Her precious life came to an end, From age and death nought can defend. But still her sweet and loved career, In charming memories lingers near.

In offices of State and Town, In faithfulness you've earned a crown. With presidents and chieftains great In social converse you have sat.

Near Mr. Lincoln you have stood And heard his stories in a flood. You've felt the charm of that great man And seen his face, as now none can.

Indeed, in lineaments of your face, His noble features we can trace. On Wednesday, July thirty-first, Your friends and townsmen will adjust

The brilliant meed of praise your due. They'll tell it fine and tell it true. So long you've dwelt 'neath golden dome, It well might seem to be your home.

So many years you'd there been seen You reached the goal of being Dean. Twelve score of men you called to order, Of honored life the just rewarder.

Your latch string, lapse, I cannot pull, And so I send this shocking scrawl. I hope your years will reach a hundred Before your thread in life is sundered.

And when you leave this mortal sphere, May heaven and hope your spirits cheer.

FRANK L. FERGUSON'S SUCCESS.

There is probably no man interested in the advancement of Jamaica, L. I., who has individually accomplished more toward that end than Mr. Frank L. Ferguson, whose real estate and insurance offices are located in Room 50 of the Queens County Trust Building at No. 375 Fulton street, that place. Although he has been established in business there for only thirteen months past, Mr. Ferguson has already made himself felt as an influential factor in the material development of the community. He conducts a general real estate and insurance business, making a specialty of mortgage loans, and it is noteworthy of his activity as a realty operator that he has sold no less than $200,000 worth of lots adjoining the Normal School property. Mr. Ferguson is president and manager of the Norwich Realty Company, which owns Jamaica Hill, of the New York and Philadelphia Associates, owning Highland Park, and of the Jamaica Associates, also controlling valuable holdings in the same vicinity. He is notable as the only man in the town connected with representative syndicates, such as those named. Mr. Ferguson is a man of more than ordinary ability. He has been prominent in real estate work for twenty years and is unerring in his foresight and a shrewd judge of future possibilities whose judgment is distinguished by unflinching accuracy. Mr. Ferguson was formerly in business in Boston, Mass., where he erected 103 houses and met with success similar to that which is attending his Jamaica operations. He is energetic and progressive, and Jamaica is fortunate at his having seen fit to make it his headquarters.—(The N. Y. Mercantile and Financial News.)

Messrs. William J. Ladd and H. D. Murphy are attending the annual encampment of the A. C. A. at Sugar Island, Clayton, N. Y. They will represent the Winchester Boat Club in the canoe races at the Thousand Islands, Aug. 9th to 23d.

Mabel, the little daughter of Police Officer Hargrove was taken to the Homeopathic Hospital, Boston, today, to be operated on for appendicitis.

Among the Winchester people in the auto parade in Boston yesterday were noticed Mr. P. G. Gray in his Welch car and G. C. Squires in his Premier.

The Misses Mary A. and Anna Lyons of Oak street will spend a month at Boothbay Harbor, Me.

HOPEDALE'S INFLUENCE.

Town of Milford Been Recipient of Most Generous Treatment.

Public Spirit of Lieut. Gov. Draper Benefits His Native Town and its People.

Milford Journal Series

It is a true axiom that every individual exerts an influence upon his associates. It is equally true that every town exerts an influence upon neighboring towns. No individual can live absolutely for himself, neither can a town live exclusively for itself. For that reason, the towns of Milford and Hopedale illustrate the influence that one has upon the other. Twenty-two years ago, what is now the Town of Hopedale was a part of our own town. Milford regretted very much the proposed separation. This feeling, however, was not based upon sinister motives, but rather from a feeling of affection for our friends and neighbors. The Draper Companies were small then, as compared with their great interests of today, but they were none the less influential. But the separation came, and, notwithstanding the regretful attitude of our people, their business and social relations have been most intimate. The reasons for this are obvious. The Drapers have always been closely allied with our people and the influence of Hopedale upon her neighbors has been for the good of all.

The public spirit and philanthropic work of the Draper family have not been confined to the limits of their home town. At least 1000 of our citizens find remunerative employment in the Hopedale works and the interests of the Draper Company in their employees is not confined to Hopedale. Hardly less comfortably housed are some of the employees who make their homes in Milford. When the employees of the Hopedale works began to settle in our town, rents naturally went up. To protect them against the advance, the Draper Company bought a tract of land and erected a large number of brick houses of which the rent is from $1.75 to $2.25 per week. While thus engaged in providing comfortable homes for employees, they became substantial tax payers in the Town of Milford. They are now engaged in erecting some forty tenements at a moderate cost to meet the growing demand of their people.

The Town of Milford has ever been the recipient of their most generous treatment. One of the latest gifts is the Milford Hospital, presented by Lieut. Gov. and Mrs. Eben S. Draper, unconditionally to the town. In construction and appointment, this is as fine a hospital as can be found anywhere in the United States. The pride of the beneficiaries as well as the benefactors. The hospital stands immediately over the line from Hopedale in a most beautiful locality, with expansive prospects in all directions and is easily reached from the populated centers of both towns. With such evidence of mutual regard for the care and comfort of their fellow men, the Draper family has won the esteem of all who appreciate their magnificent gifts for the public good.

Our people have had few opportunities to show their appreciation, but it can be recalled that when Gen. William F. Draper was a candidate for Congress in 1892-93 that notwithstanding that Milford was Democratic by large pluralities, the general received handsome majorities over his opponent, and at a more recent date when Eben S. Draper became the Republican candidate for Lieutenant-Governor, the people gave him substantial majorities even though the Democratic ticket was generally successful by a large vote. These incidents show the high regard of our people for the men who have been most active in the upbuilding of our community.

LINCOLN STEFFENS

In the August American Magazine Mr. Steffens tells the story of the beginnings of Francis J. Heney, who prosecuted Schmitz and Ruel and the land thieves. He calls it "The Making of a Fighter," and it is a genuine wild west story.

POSTAL CARD CHANGES.

Another postal improvement which went into effect August 1, will interest the public generally as much as any change that has been inaugurated in recent years. The new order promulgated by Postmaster-General Meyer provides that the face side of a postal card may be divided by a vertical line placed approximately one-third of the distance from the left end of the card; the space to the left of the line to be for a message, the portion to the right being used for the address only.

After August 1, a very thin sheet of paper may be attached to the postal card if it completely adheres to the card, and such a paper may bear both writing and printing. Advertisements, illustrations or writing may appear on the back of the card and on the left third of the front.

The new regulation permitting the use, after August 1, of a portion of the face of the postal card for the message corrects an inconsistency that has long existed. For years Americans and others have been sending to the United States from foreign countries postal cards and post cards (private mailing card) with messages written on the front as well as on the back of the cards, although in this country this advantage has been denied the users of government postal cards. Some months ago the United States postal regulations were amended so as to give that privilege to buyers of post cards, but such concession was not made applicable to postal cards.

CONG. McCALL AND HIS COLLEGE COLORS.

Congressman Samuel W. McCall hailed an acquaintance in Newspaper row yesterday, and observing that his friend wore the Dartmouth colors on his straw hat, the congressman said that way back in the early '90s, when he was a freshman at Dartmouth, he was called home to Illinois, where his father then lived. "I was perhaps one of the freshest freshmen of my class," said the congressman, "and wore my college colors on the lapel of my coat. I stopped over in New York a day or two and soon noticed that I was attracting a great deal of attention. I never realized what a great risk I had taken in wearing my college colors so prominently while in New York until I picked up a paper and learned that only a day or two before the great Orange riots had taken place in which several were killed and many hurt. When the orange and green came together, as soon as I learned what had taken place your Uncle Samuel removed his college colors and put them away in his inside pocket until he left Gotham, and they did not see the sunlight again until I got to good old Illinois."—[Boston Globe, July 24.]

WONDERLAND.

Bewilderment is the first sensation one experiences upon entering Wonderland, that fairyland by the sea at Revere Beach. And it takes more than a single visit to establish a person not to be at least astonished at what he sees and hears in this vast recreation ground. These "shows" range from the famous spectacle "Fighting the Flames," to the simplest factor considered essential nowadays for the completeness of one of these great "summer cities." It cost nearly $1,000,000 to bring Wonderland to its present state of perfection, and last season, two million persons enjoyed its many entertaining sights and sounds.

The aim of the management is to change the menu, so far as possible every week. So for one thing, the concert are supplied every two weeks by different bands, occupying the new $10,000 music court. The coming week the Ninth Regiment M. V. M. band will play and will be followed by the Waltham Watch Factory Band.

The great board walk parades, at 2 and 7 o'clock, are mardi-gras carnivals in themselves and worth going far to see.

Excursionists by the thousands are at Wonderland every day and evening. The park is open from one until 11 every day.

THE MERGER ISSUE.

Already the general wisdom of concentration of the transportation systems has been approved by the inter-state commerce commission a body that has stood many times between the people and the railroads in solving the great problem of trade relations between one state and another.

The issue, if raised at all, is likely to prove of advantage to Mr. Whitney, providing it is clearly and logically presented to the people instead of being pictured in lurid form as popular passions and prejudices are usually appealed to for effect. Whitney says he does not fear that or any other issue, if properly presented to the people, and says he is ready to meet it in a common sense and practical way. He says his sole aim in the campaign is to do something for the industrial benefit of New England and the people of those states.

At his age in life the political game, as such, has no charms for him. He is perfectly contented to rest where he is, if the people do not regard his views of sufficient consequence to put into effect. He is confident that their adoption will mean the commercial and industrial rejuvenation of New England industries, and the prosperity of the people. To bring this about he urges Canadian reciprocity as the first step, and in this belief he feels confident of being successful in his campaign.—[Practical Politics.]

Tobacco Smoke Poisonous.

It is often said that tobacco smoke is a powerful germicide. The composition of tobacco smoke is complex, the principal constituents being oils of a fatty nature. Nicotine itself is a strong germicide, but the quantity of this poison in tobacco smoke is minute. The oily matter which accumulates in a tobacco pipe is highly poisonous, but does not contain any appreciable quantity of nicotine, the chief constituent of this residue being a very poisonous oil known as pyridine. Tobacco smoke contains a decided quantity of carbon monoxide, which is a preservative and which must possess germicidal properties. One of the principal constituents accounting for the germicidal properties of tobacco smoke is the powerful antiseptic formaldehyde.—[New York Herald.]

His Logic.

A keen business man bought at a low price a theater that had long been unprofitable and by economical management put it immediately on a paying basis. But he was very economical. He watched the expenses with the sharpest eye. The first month's expense account contained the item: "Meat for cats, to protect the scenery and properties from the rats' ravages, $2." The proprietor struck this item out, writing on the margin: "If the cats eat the rats, wherefore the meat? If they don't, wherefore the cats?"

No Samples.

"Well," demanded the stern visaged woman at the back door, "what do you want?" "Why," replied the tramp, "I seen you advertised 'table board' in dis mornin's paper." "Well?" "Well, I thought mebbe yer wuz givin' out some samples."—Catholic Standard and Times.

BEGGS & COBB CO.

The Beggs & Cobb Co. is now operating two patent leather shops, which have a capacity of 1,400 sides. One is near factory E, in Woburn, the other is what was the peg shop of the old McKay plant in Winchester. An unusual feature at the Woburn shop is the finishing of 300 sides a week into patent leather, usually large frames being used to tack the leather on. At this time, 300 sides of patent leather are being finished daily at the Woburn shop, with a capacity of 1,000 sides. At the Winchester shop, 200 sides are being finished.

The company has three tanneries, one at Confluence, Pa., one at Wautauga, Tenn., and the Winchester plant. All told about 1,200 hides, 2,400 sides, are being tanned daily. There is no finishing done at the southern plants. This is about half the capacity of this firm. Both bark and chrome tannage are used and most of the splits are being finished into blacks the balance into flexibles.—[Woburn Times.]

LOCATION GRANTED.

The Somerville aldermen have given the Boston Elevated railroad permission to construct a double track railway along Mystic Avenue from the Charlestown line to the Fellsway boulevard leading to the Middlesex Fells. This action removes the one obstacle to the immediate construction of the long promised electric road through the Fells. Attorney White stated that the construction of the road would be commenced at once. The next thing is to persuade the Boston & Northern to continue the road through to Stoneham. The B. & N. have been holding back on this matter because of the great expense of building the road and the indications of light receipts from passengers.

FIRST CHAIN CABLES.

They Supplanted the Use of Hempen Rope on Warships.

The first man who succeeded in making a useful chain cable was Robert Flinn and he experimented with it in 1808 in a small ship named the Anne and Isabella, of 300 tons burden. His cable was made of very short links, with no stay pins or studs, says the London Globe, but it served its purpose and was, moreover, favorably reported upon by some of the progressive seamen of the time.

At about the same period a lieutenant in the navy named Samuel Brown was also experimenting with chain cables made of twisted links, and this when it was duly patented he brought to the attention of the navy board. After much discussion it was decided to give Lieutenant Brown the command of a sailing vessel, the Penelope, and send him on a voyage to Martinique and Guadeloupe. At his own expense he was to supply chain cables for the ship, and they were to be experimented with on the voyage. During the four months the ship was away the new cables were given a thorough trial and proved quite satisfactory.

When Brown made his report a committee was appointed to advise as to the adoption of the chain cable in place of the hempen, and as a result the new tackle was gradually introduced into men-of-war. Between 1810 and 1811 the first chain cables were served out to the ships, but the full complement of hempen ropes was still retained. This system remained in force until 1844, when the number of hempen cables was reduced to three, and in 1847 a further change was ordered, two hempen cables only being retained as principal mooring tackle.

During the Russian war the superiority of chain cables was amply demonstrated on many occasions. The vessels were exposed to the gales and hurricanes of the Baltic and the Black sea, but whereas the men-of-war with these chains were able to keep their moorings in the roughest weather many of the merchantmen transports, fitted only with hempen ropes, broke away and met with disaster. And so an ancient industry, one which in early days was almost a monopoly in Dorsetshire, was placed indefinitely in a secondary rank. No act of parliament such as that of Henry VIII. ordaining that "no person but the inhabitants only shall make cables" could bring back the prosperity to Bridport which that town had enjoyed in the earliest days of England's naval glory. A modern battleship carries four main cables and anchors, each costing about £1,200. This gives her a total of 450 fathoms of chain cable. —London Globe.

The Alpine Good Night.

Among the lofty mountains and elevated valleys of Switzerland the Alpine horn has another use besides that of sounding the far famed "Ranz des Vaches," or cow song, and this is of a very solemn and impressive nature. When the sun has set in the valley and the snowy summits of the mountains gleam with golden light the herdsman who dwells upon the highest habitable spot takes his horn and pronounces clearly and loudly through it, as through a speaking trumpet, "Praise the Lord God." As soon as the sound is heard by the neighboring herdsman they issue from their huts, take their Alpine horns and repeat the same words. This frequently lasts a quarter of an hour, and the call resounds from all the mountains and rocky cliffs around. When silence again reigns the herdsman kneels and prays with uncovered head. Meantime it has become quite dark. "Good night!" at last calls the highest herdsman through his horn. The words resound from all the mountains, the horns of the herdsman and the cliffs, and the mountaineers then retire to their dwellings.

Charlie Remembered Her Well.

A young woman of social prominence and respectability was to unite with the church in her home town and desired the ordinance of baptism by immersion in the river. Among the number that gathered to witness the baptism was a little boy friend, Charlie, about four years old. The proceedings were entirely new to the child, and he looked on with strange curiosity as the candidate was led into the river. The spring freshets had made the river somewhat turbulent, and it was with difficulty that the minister maintained his footing. During the following week the young woman called at the home of his family and after the usual greetings said to the little boy as she extended her hand: "Come here, Charlie, and see me. You do not know who I am, do you?" she continued.

"Yes, indeed, I do," said the boy. "You is that woman that went in swimming with the minister on Sunday." —Judge's Library.

EMPRESS EUGENIE.

Her Dramatic Descent Upon the Cabinet Council.

In Frederic Lollée's "Women of the Second Empire" the author tells a sensational story of Empress Eugenie of France. It concerns a pressing political matter, one of church and state. Because the empress felt strongly on it the emperor feared lest she should endeavor to influence the deliberations of the cabinet council by appearing in person. Accordingly he gave orders that the meeting should be kept secret from her. M. Lollée says: "But the matter so carefully concealed was already known to her, and acting on the first impulse of her fiery Spanish temperament, to long over with anger, she flew rather than walked to the council chamber. A sentry had been placed at the door with orders to allow no one to pass. He opposed the entrance of the impetuous sovereign.

"I wish to enter. Stand back!" she cried angrily. Finding himself in a horrible quandary between the orders he had received and his fear of hurting his empress, the guardsman, between his gallantry to her sex and his fidelity to the word of command, fell at the feet of Eugenie with his bayonet laid across the doorway.

"Your majesty," he said, "no one may pass, by order of the emperor." "We shall see," replied Eugenie, and without more ado she leaped over the sentry's bayonet, burst open the door and entered the council chamber with the violence of a whirlwind. The emperor was presiding, grave and imperious, he alone having his head covered in the presence of his respectful and attentive ministers.

"But the sovereign failed to impose respect on his angry wife, who saw in him only the man and the husband. Going straight up to him, with a backhanded blow she knocked off his hat, then, without a word, withdrew as she had entered, leaving the ministers dumb with surprise and consternation."

City Plants Are Inefficient.

In 1902 the United States department of commerce and labor published a special census report on electric light and power stations, compiled by T. Commerford Martin, editor of the Electrical World and a recognized authority on the subject. A comparison of the statistics of municipal and private plants given in this report demonstrates the far greater efficiency of the latter, as the following table shows:

Private. Munic.
Output in kilowatts per wage earner employed.....	110,777 79,410
Output in kilowatts per $1 of wages.....	170 138
Average wages per year.....	$650 $577

Only operative wage earners are considered, because in a large number of municipal plants all or part of the clerical work is done by other departments. The operative wage earners, however, perform the same duties in both municipal and private plants.

On the basis of wage earners employed the output of municipal plants is only 72 per cent of that of private plants, and in spite of the lower wages paid in municipal plants their output per $1 of wages is only 81 per cent of that of private plants. The chief loser by this relative inefficiency is of course the public that pays the bills.

STATE POLITICS

Bartlett Preparing to Test Sentiment of Democracy

CAMPAIGN BECOMING WARM

There Is No Discord Between Senators Lodge and Crane, Nor Has There Been

The campaign on the Democratic side will begin in dead earnest in August, so far as General Bartlett or Henry M. Whitney are concerned.

It has been an active campaign for a month at least on the part of Mr. Whitney, and the Bartlett forces have been laying out the campaign for two or three weeks, but have not been nearly so energetic as the men behind the Whitney movement.

When General Bartlett makes a tour of the state, which he is already doing, he will get a very definite idea of the way in which his candidacy is received by the Democrats of the commonwealth.

Meanwhile there are other elements liable to enter into the campaign. Former Congressman John R. Thayer of Worcester is being groomed by his friends for the nomination, and James B. Carroll of Springfield is a hopeful candidate, although, so far as one can see, they are fully as liable to weaken General Bartlett as they are to injure the candidacy of Mr. Whitney.

It is well known that Congressman Thayer is not very much of a Whitney man. He was one of those who deprecated last year the nomination of Whitney and urged Governor Douglas of Brockton to come into the field against him. It was this move which forced Whitney out of the fight and resulted in the nomination of John B. Moran.

Thayer Is Against Whitney

Mr. Thayer does not regard Mr. Whitney as a proper man to be elected governor of Massachusetts, or to receive the Democratic nomination for that high office. He has said so repeatedly and he believes, as do many others, that the nomination of the Brookline man would put the party immediately upon the defensive and result in a disastrous defeat. It is said that he is of the opinion that the nomination of a Democrat against whom no charges could be brought and who stands well with the people by his election at the polls. He believes Mr. Whitney, if nominated, is predestined to defeat.

Mr. Thayer is not anxious for the nomination. His friends say his only interest is that the Democratic party should not make a false move. Mr. Thayer would undoubtedly be perfectly satisfied with the nomination of General Bartlett or that of ex-Governor Douglas of Brockton.

However, it is votes which tell the story at the caucuses, and the man who secures the largest number of delegates to the Democratic state convention will be the man to lead the party in November.

It is well known that Governor Douglas himself is enthusiastically in favor of the nomination of General Bartlett. He believes he is a man thoroughly well fitted for the position, that having received it once and making a good run, he should have an opportunity to make another try at it, and that his prospects of election would be much better than when he ran two years ago.

It is equally well known that Governor Douglas has no use for Henry M. Whitney. He does not regard him as entitled to the nomination or even worthy of it. He is behind Bartlett morally and financially for that reason. It will be remembered that two years ago he made a heavy contribution to Bartlett's campaign fund, but there is no record that he contributed one penny to the election of Mr. Whitney for lieutenant governor.

Hot Air Political Yarns

In the summer time people naturally look for stories of the sea serpent and other mythical monsters. The summer time is also the season when political fairy tales blossom abundantly by the wayside. The recent fairy story in a Boston newspaper in which it was detailed with much circumstance that a bloody feud was on between President Roosevelt and Senator Lodge on one side, and Senator Crane on the other, has taxed the credulity of credulous mortals much too far. It was as nearly a wholesale fabrication as any article ever printed in a Boston paper.

It can be said upon the highest authority that Senator Lodge and Senator Crane are upon the best of terms; that neither is thirsting for the blood of the other, either politically or physically. It is well known to those conversant with the situation that Senator Lodge is for Taft for president, while Senator Crane has not yet declared himself in favor of anybody upon the presidential issue. There is nothing in this plain statement of the situation to justify the lurid headlines which have disgraced the pages of one of the Boston newspapers. The other newspapers in the city simply laughed at the strenuous effort of this solitary newspaper to create a situation which did not exist.

Harmony Is Near

There never has been a time since Senator Crane was elected to represent Massachusetts in the United States congress when there has been anything but good feeling between the two senators. They have not always agreed in their opinions of policies presented for support, but they have always maintained the most friendly relations under these and all other circumstances, as sensible men naturally would do.

As the time approaches for making nominations it becomes peculiarly appropriate that the voters should take especial pains this fall to secure the nomination of good men to every position on the state ticket, and especially to nominate for the house and senate men of the utmost honesty and integrity. The men who make the laws of the commonwealth should be so far above suspicion as to disarm criticism. Men who make laws for others should certainly be above suspicion themselves. It is time that the people themselves took a hand in making nominations and that nominations should no longer be dictated by corporate influences. It is none too early for the voters, who wish to be represented in the legislature, to get to work to name their choice, for the other influences are already on the ground and waiting for an opportunity to nominate someone amenable to corporate influences.

BUNGLING M. O. OPERATION.

Freeport, N. Y., Is Paying Several Times Too Much For Street Lighting.

All the evils connected with municipal ownership have grown out of bungling municipal operation. A carefully wrought out plan, with those in charge held to responsibility, must be devised before municipal operation can be successfully carried on. Leaving the matter in the hands of new officials, elected every year or two, without any knowledge of how to carry on the business, cannot be successful except in very rare instances.

Take, for example, the municipal lighting system at Freeport. There is a valuable franchise which ought to bring in a fair revenue to the village treasury. Some time ago a wealthy lighting company, which understands the lighting business and can produce incandescent light at a small fraction of the cost of generating it at the Freeport power house, offered to pay $30,000 for the use of this franchise. Computed at 5 per cent, that meant a rental of $1,500 per year. The company also offered to light the village with a larger number of arc lamps than are now in operation for $3,000 a year. Deducting the rental of $1,500 from this annual payment, the village street lighting on an all night system would cost the taxpayers $1,500 a year. But the villagers thought it better to have the system operated by their elected officials, none of whom is an expert in lighting matters, and we notice that this year they propose to levy between $3,000 and $10,000 by taxation. They assure us that none of this money is for private lighting. If so, it must all be for street lighting. Thus the street lighting costs several times as much under municipal operation as it would with municipal ownership and intelligent business operation.

A Funny Book.

An old actor who was not much given to the cheering glass, says the Bill-board, one evening went to dine at the club with a friend—met several more, with the result that he got "pretty mellow." He left his friends and started home and said to himself: "My boy, you're drunk. What are you going to do about it? I know. I'll go home and read. Whoever heard about a drunken man reading?" Well, home he went in a cab—went to the library and commenced to read. Mrs. Actor later appeared on the scene. "What on earth are you doing?" she questioned.

"Why—er—can't—you see what I'm doing, my dear? I'm reading."

"Reading?" said his wife scornfully. "What are you reading?"

He looked at the book, but couldn't see the words, so said, "That book's been in the house for the last twenty years, so if you don't know I'm not going to tell you."

To this his wife replied wrathfully, "You old fool, shut up that valise and come to bed."

A Mean Thief.

Last Friday one of the cups and chains were stolen from the Lebanon street fountain and on Saturday the second disappeared. These cups were riveted onto the pipe at the fountain with heavy chains, but nevertheless the rivets were broken. Considerable force must have been used, and it is a question whether children had the strength to break the fastenings. Such wanton thievery is to be deprecated and the person caught should be severely punished. Hundreds of persons daily enjoy the clear cool water of this spring and it is too bad that they should be deprived of it because of the action of some depraved thief. Chief McIntosh is determined to make an example of the first person found injuring the fountain or attempting to carry away the cups.

Safe Place for Records.

There is sorrow ahead for the city and town clerks; also junk dealers. The former must now provide a safe place for all the public documents sent them by the secretary of the Commonwealth and keep them there. Hitherto they have been passed on as soon as they were in the way.—[Boston Transcript.]

Sometime ago the STAR recommended that a brick vault be built at the rear of the Town Hall for the safe storage of records and other valuable papers. The only place available at the present time is the loft in the Town Hall building where they are thrown in promiscuously, it is said, with no regard to their value. In case of fire their fate is easily imaginable. A brick vault outside the building, with proper ventilation, would not cost a very large sum of money, and here they could be safely preserved until their value has ceased to exist. No doubt if the Selectmen were to present this matter to the citizens at the next March meeting, the money would be readily voted. As it is now the records are in constant danger of being destroyed or lost.

Short of Funds.

The Board of Health in its program of keeping Winchester healthy and preventing sickness, finds itself considerably cramped for funds. It is said their appropriation is already exhausted, and that all contemplated work will have to be postponed until next year as Auditor Herrick has refused to permit the Board to overdraw. There never was a time when health matters were given the consideration that they are at the present time throughout the entire country. Leading authorities now recognize that many diseases are preventable and that they can be stamped out through the agencies of Boards of Health who are the only ones empowered to look after the general health of their respective communities.

It is too bad that the local Board finds itself cramped for funds so early in the season, but this was unavoidable as many matters calling for the expenditure of money have come up that could not be anticipated at the annual meeting when the appropriations were made up. The Board could, no doubt, secure additional funds at the fall town meeting, if one is called, but in the meantime necessary improvements in health conditions should be continued, even if a point has to be strained.

Water Meters.

The Water Board is placing meters as fast as the funds at their disposal will permit in houses where they have good reason to suppose the water is being wasted. Ultimately the entire town will be placed on meter, the minimum charge for which is $12 a year. The Board favors the use of meters, not in the hope of increased revenue, but to conserve the supply of water, a great deal of which (much more than the people imagine) is going to waste because of heedlessness or carelessness on the part of users. During the cold winter months the water in scores of houses is going to waste in order to keep service pipes from freezing. This state of affairs exists to a great extent in houses of the inexpensive class where there are but one or two fixtures, and where no provision has been made for safely shutting off the water during cold weather. If the Board failed to take some steps in regard to the great waste, it would be but a short time only when there would be a scarcity of water. Should that time ever come, then Winchester would be compelled to ask permission to get its water from the Metropolitan supply—conditions which are not desired by the citizens. Under such an arrangement the present freedom in the use of water would be greatly curtailed as the water coming from that supply would be served to the entire town through a meter, and hence rules far more stricter than those now prevailing would be necessary. Cities and towns now receiving their water from the Metropolitan supply are frequently making complaints, but there is little if any chance of these being given much attention. It is to prevent this that our Water Board are using every endeavor to check the needless waste of water now going on.

GETTING READY TO SELL.

Valley City, N. D., and Souderton, Pa. Tired of Their Electric Lighting Plants.

Valley City, N. D., has decided by a vote of nearly three to one to sell its electric light plant, every ward in the city voting in favor of the sale. In explaining the cause of this action a local banker writes that, like most such enterprises, the Valley City plant "has become a burden to the city" and has been furnishing poor lights for the past two years. For this reason and because of increasing prices many have deserted the service.

The dissatisfaction with the service has been growing a long time. Two attempts were made to dispose of it three years ago. The first bids were rejected as being too low. The next bid, accepted by the council, was not in accordance with the specifications, and another bidder secured an injunction restraining the sale. Many business houses have installed private gasoline lighting systems of their own.

According to the Electrical World, the town council of Souderton, Pa., is considering the proposition of abandoning the borough electric light plant and purchasing electricity to operate the borough lighting system, the West Telford Electric company having offered to furnish electric energy at a lower price than the borough can manufacture it.

ELECTRICITY.

OBSERVATIONS.

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

The mugs attached to the Lebanon street drinking fountain remained about a week which is as long as could be expected. The only kind of mug that will stay is one that cannot be separated from the chain, and a chain that cannot be broken or pulled from its fastening. Such a one as some of the old timers will remember Frank Johnson had made and attached to the old town pump that stood on Main street opposite John Price's barber shop. That mug was made at a blacksmith shop and fastened to a chain whose links were more than a quarter of an inch thick and attached to the pump with four inch staples. Frank guaranteed it would stay, and it did.

About four hundred people were present at the band concert on Manchester Field last Saturday and thirty teams and autos and fifteen canoes were counted at one time. It was a very pretty scene, but if the band would play more popular pieces and not so much classical it would please the crowd more. The band plays well, but it inclines too much toward difficult music.

Another gas company, the Fall River, has just declared its regular semi-annual dividend of five per cent and an extra dividend of twenty per cent, more, and as it had a surplus of $448,000 June 30th, 06, of which $135,000 was cash it undoubtedly could have paid more if modesty had not forbidden. When the Lynn gas and electric company paid similar dividends last year Mr. Burdett said it should be commended for its courage and as it had a surplus of $953,000 after paying, it certainly was brave. But if the people do not know or care enough to have the price reduced, which they could get for the asking in such cases, why shouldn't the stockholders scoop in the surplus profits? All the big companies in Massachusetts, about twenty, are preparing a campaign to secure a sliding scale bill similar to the one the Boston company pushed through last year, so as to secure larger dividends than they know to be policy to declare at present. These companies, gas and electric, have over five millions surplus now and yet the people don't know or care enough to ask for a reduction of price. Still people talk municipal ownership. Why?

I understand the Park Board looks for a "kick" from me every week and rather than disappoint them I will "kick" at that useless and horrible looking grand stand which was put up as an experiment and proved a failure, and which should not be permitted to mar the landscape any longer.

I hear that the W. A. A. was disgusted with the small collections made on Manchester Field for the ball games and so tried Arlington. They cannot expect to get much of a collection without a crowd, and they cannot get that unless they arrange a schedule of games and properly advertise them. There should be no trouble about getting games with other clubs and having them well attended and supported if it is handled right.

It has become pretty evident that the town meeting must go back to the old practice of instructing its officials to do certain things instead of late years leaving them to do them as part of their natural duties. There are too many things neglected.

Last week Somerville Aldermen granted the last location to the L. needed to complete the line from Sullivan Square through the Fells to Stoneham. While this line will be a great benefit to the crowded districts of Boston it strikes me that if four policemen are needed at the band concerts on Manchester Field about four hundred will be required to look after the crowds in the Fells during the summer after this road is in operation. I understand that the L. will begin work right away on its end and the B. & N. on theirs.

The Italian's fireworks at North End Park, Monday night were great and went ahead of anything seen in Boston before, and made the city's July 4th display look like punks. Some of the bombs exploded ten times and were of great size. The set pieces were beautiful and of great novelty. The Italians are fond of noise and some of the detonating bombs were of such power that they were heard fifteen miles. It was a great show.

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

The summer opera season at the Castle Square theatre is drawing to a close and for the last weeks the management is offering exceptionally strong attractions. "Carmen" will be sung next week and there is no doubt that the theatre will be filled to its capacity at each performance, as Bizet's dramatic work has always had power to attract a Boston audience. "Carmen" has made the reputation of several great singers and the opportunity to hear it again is one which will be seized upon eagerly by all lovers of good music. Miss Lois Ewell will sing Mechaella, Miss Louise LeBaron will be the Mercedes and Mr. J. K. Murray will act Escanillo. Mr. Harry Davies will alternate with Mr. Geo. Tallman as the soldier Don Jose. Mr. Shields, Mr. Thayer, Mr. Pringle and Miss Bartlett will also be in the cast. The new leader of the orchestra, Mr. Charles Zimmerman, has proved a distinct addition to the Castle Square forces and under him the musicians are doing excellent work.

NOTICE.

Notice is hereby given that the Town By-Laws relative to carrying ashes, etc., through the streets of Winchester will take effect Sept. 10, 1907.

SCENE AT WONDERLAND.

SYSTEMS CONTRASTED

European State Owned Telephone Service Woefully Deficient.

Here the Talking Wire is Operated as a Business Proposition—Not Only Is It Conducted Much More Efficiently in America Than Abroad, but Employees Are Better Paid and Better Treated Here.

By WALTER W. BURGESS.

It is my opinion, based upon a study at first hand, that the state owned telephone systems of Europe compared with the telephone systems of this country, both as regards development and from a financial and service standpoint, are woefully deficient. So ludicrous is the comparison that it puts me in mind of the American gentleman who, when traveling in Asia Minor, insisted upon the similarity of the rivers in that country with the rivers in Ohio—because there were salmon in both.

I have been greatly impressed with what I might term the telephone habit of the people in this country. The various telephone companies appear to make every effort to foster and develop still further this habit, both by attractive schedules of rates, graded so that they make provision for the most moderate user, and by adopting improvements which will tend to make the use of the telephone more frequent. Contrasting this with the state of affairs in Europe—take London, for example—it is a common occurrence and within my own personal knowledge that nine months have elapsed between the date of the order being given and the actual installing of the telephone. In Germany there are two stated periods during the year in which telephones are installed. Should a person require a telephone installed apart from either of these two set periods a special charge is made. In addition to this, not intending subscribers must first obtain written permission from their landlords.

The rates for long distance service in this country are much higher than in Europe, but the service given, which is the real criterion, is correspondingly much more satisfactory. Although the rates in Europe are low, you cannot get service. In continental Europe especially the toll lines are so limited that practically throughout the busy hours of the day up to late in the afternoon the lines are continually blocked. This has led to the establishing of what are termed "urgent rates." For instance, if you require to communicate with a subscriber promptly by paying three times the amount of the ordinary rate your call takes precedence over the ordinary message. In Great Britain a toll line can only be held for a six minute period, when the line must be relinquished, a restriction which only a government department would dare to enforce and which would not be tolerated by the business men of this country.

The contrast between the operators is most marked. I have been impressed with the intelligence, vim, snap, call it what you will, of the American operator. When I consider the number of calls they handle, their speed and accuracy seem to me little short of marvelous. I was astonished at the length the companies go in looking after their physical welfare. After looking through an exchange in Chicago I was shown over the operators' retiring rooms. I could not help contrasting the pleasant surroundings with those of an exchange I visited in Paris. There the switchboard was in an extremely dirty condition, and the switch room had evidently not been cleaned for days. No retiring or lunch rooms were provided for the operators, who apparently were doing just as they pleased. Some were reading, and some were indulging in animated conversation, the answering of calls being quite a secondary consideration. In Berlin, Stockholm and London the surroundings were certainly much better, but nothing to be compared with what I saw in Chicago, and the operating was terribly slow. I attribute this difference to the fact that, whereas in America the operator's position and advancement depend upon her ability, in Europe the operators, being a part of the civil service, cannot be discharged and thus, having obtained a position for life, have no further incentive and rapidly absorb the well known inertia of that department.

As far as my investigations go, the telephone systems in this country are managed along commercial lines. Rates are fixed with regard to the actual cost of giving service, improvements are adopted as soon as their efficiency has been demonstrated, and a plant which, owing to improvements in the art, has become obsolete is at once discarded. This is far from being the case in Europe. There the business is conducted by methods that are neither practical nor commercial. Considerations which are quite foreign to the business enter in. Rates are fixed without regard to the factors which should govern them. For instance, in Switzerland the same rate is charged in Davos, a city of 8,000 inhabitants, as in Zurich, with 150,000 inhabitants. The tendency is also very great to oppose any improvement or any change which tends to make additional expenditure necessary. Berlin is now just adopting the common battery system after operating for years with a cumbersome and old fashioned grounded line magneto system. It has been periodically announced that the telephone system of Paris is to be reconstructed on modern lines, but each year there is a new excuse, and Paris is still struggling along with a most miserable and hopelessly antiquated system.

BENJAMIN WEST.

Queer Experience of the Young Artist When He Was in Rome.

When it was known that a young American had come to study Raphael and Michael Angelo, some curiosity was excited among the Roman virtuosi.

The first fortunate exhibitor of this lion from the western wilderness was Lord Grantham. He invited West to dinner and afterward carried him to an evening party, where he found at most all those persons to whom he had brought letters of introduction.

Among the rest was Cardinal Albani, who, though old and blind, had such delicacy of touch that he was considered supreme in all matters of judgment regarding medals and bugloss.

The cardinal knew so little of the new world that he conceived a young American must needs be a savage. "Is he black or white?" said the aged virtuoso, holding out both hands that he might have the satisfaction of touching at least this new wonder.

Lord Grantham smiled and said, "He is fair, very fair."

"What? As fair as I am?" exclaimed the prelate.

Now, the complexion of this churchman was a deep olive, that of West more than commonly fair, and as they stood together the company smiled. "As fair as the cardinal" became for awhile proverbial.

Others, who had the use of their eyes, seemed to consider the young American as at most a better kind of savage and accordingly were curious to watch him. They wished to try what effect the Apollo, the Venus and the works of Raphael would have upon him, and "thirty of the most magnificent engravings in the capital of Christendom and filled with some of the most erudite characters in Europe," says Galt, "conducted the young Quaker to view the masterpieces of art."

It was agreed that the Apollo should be first submitted to his view. The statue was inclosed in a case, and when the keeper threw open the doors West unconsciously exclaimed, "My God—a young Mohawk warrior!"

The Italians were surprised and mortified with the comparison of their noblest statue to a wild savage, and West, perceiving the unfavorable impression, proceeded to remove it. He described the Mohawks, the natural elegance and admirable symmetry of their persons, the elasticity of their limbs and their motions free and unconstrained.

"I have seen them often," he continued, "standing in the very attitude of this Apollo and pursuing with an intense eye the arrow which they had just discharged from the bow."

The Italians cleared their moody brows and allowed that a better criticism had rarely been pronounced. West was no longer a barbarian—Mirror.

The Cause of Many Sudden Deaths.

There is a disease prevailing in this country most dangerous because so deceptive. Many sudden deaths are caused by it—heart disease, pneumonia, heart failure or apoplexy are often the result of kidney disease. If kidney trouble is allowed to advance the kidney-poisoned blood will attack the vital organs, causing catarrh of the bladder, or the kidneys themselves break down and waste away cell by cell. Bladder troubles almost always result from a derangement of the kidneys and a cure is obtained quickest by a proper treatment of the kidneys. If you are feeling lousy you can make no mistake by taking Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy. It corrects inability to hold urine and scalding pain in passing it, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often through the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and is sold by all druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles. You may have a sample bottle of this wonderful new discovery and a book that tells all about it, both sent free by mail. Address, Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper. Don't make any mistake, but run the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

REUB. A Fourth of July Story.

By FRANK H. SWEET.

Copyright, 1906, by Frank H. Sweet.

"No, there won't be no celebrating, an' ye won't go traipsin' off to no town either. I went there last Fourth, an' the boys scart my horse so he run off an' broke four dozen eggs. Nobody's goin' to step a foot off this farm tomorrow, not if I know it. The Fourth's all humbug an' foolishness."

"But ye said I might have a day off for workin' so hard through the spring," ventured the boy, a little rebelliously.

"Mebbe I did, an' mebbe I didn't, but 'tain't to be on the Fourth. Ye'll have the day some quiet time, when there ain't no horses to scare an' leadin's on to mischief. If ye're sensible ye'll wait till huckleberries are ripe, when ye can pick enough in a day to buy a pair o' shoes."

"But we furnish Reub's clothin'." Enos, who was the boy's father, remonstrated. "You know that was our agreement with his uncle. An' Reub has worked awful hard since he come an' been a good boy."

"Reasonable clothin', Anna," impatiently, "that's the 'greement. I've had one suit o' clothes the last year, an' Reub's had one; I've had one straw hat an' one homemade cap, an' Reub's had just the same, an' last Christmas I bought two pair o' fine dollar shoes. Mine's good yet, an' Reub's jest about gone. Talk o' bein' reasonable! Not many men would treat their help jest like themselves. When my shoes are worn out I'll buy two more pair. An' now, Reub," turning again to the boy, "ye'd best be gittin' off to bed. Ye must be up early tomorrow. Them stones must be all out an' the ground leveled by next week, so we can be gittin' in the turnip seed. How's it comin' on?"

"Pretty well, I guess, sir. I've got about forty big rocks drilled."

"Fifty?" with some appearance of surprise, which, however, was instantly checked as he went on. "Seems to me ye might have done more'n that if ye hurried. Well, soon's they're all done they must be set off, so we can gather up the stones an' cart 'em away. If ye hurry like ye'd ought to mebbe ye can finish 'em tomorrow. Then I'll help carry down the powder, an' we'll set 'em off. Better do it 'fore it's fairly light, on account o' the pasture bein' next the main road. Some fool

ENOS JUDKINS THREW HIMSELF HALF UP horse might get scart an' the owner be pesterin' us 'bout damages. Come," as Reuben stood silent, but with an odd look on his face. "Didn't ye hear me tell ye to be gittin' off to bed? An' don't come home tomorrow till the last o' them big stones is drilled."

Reuben slipped quickly from the room, glad to escape any direct questions. In spite of the hard work and lack of commendation, he had never tried to evade the truth. Enos Judkins was suspicious by nature and sometimes not overscrupulous, but he knew that he could trust the boy to do just as good work when off in a field by himself as when in full view of the house and that whatever the boy said could be relied on as being absolutely true.

"Be ye goin' to let Reub help set the rocks off?" asked Mrs. Judkins as the receding footsteps grew fainter up the attic stairs. "Powder's mighty unreliable for boys to mix up with."

"Reub's safe enough," gruffly. "He helped the last year an' has helped other folks. He don't do so much work as he ought, but he's better'n the common run o' boys. An' I don't mind sayin' he drilled them rocks quicker'n I'd 'a' believed anybody could. If he finishes 'em tomorrow—which, of course, he can't—I shall be with him the day arter to look out for the blowin'."

At that very moment Reuben was throwing himself upon his cot in the attic, shaking with merriment. Not come home on the morning until the last one of the rocks was drilled? Lucky Mr. Judkins had been too busy to go to the road pasture during the last few days, and lucky that tree grew just outside his attic window, so he could shin down when he wanted to do a little extra work by moonlight.

Wouldn't Mr. Judkins be surprised if he knew that a considerable portion of the powder had disappeared from its dry storage in the barn and was at that moment packed solidly in the bottom of a hundred or more deep holes drilled in about forty rocks, each with a fuse leading a few inches away from the top? And he had told the truth, for there were only about forty rocks altogether. He had counted them, and Mr. Judkins had not. And not only that, had not Mr. Judkins' words implied that he wanted the rocks "set off" just as soon as they were ready? Well, he would attend to it and would see that they were set off before it was light enough for travel to commence on the road.

Enos Judkins was an extremely early riser, sometimes not waiting for the first call from the barnyard to be up and out. But the next morning even the most alert of the roosters was asleep when there came a crash which shook the very windows of the house. Enos Judkins threw himself half up then fell back with a snarl.

"Them loonatic Fourth o' Julyers," he grumbled; "they're startin' wuss'n they did last year. I never heerd them winders rattle afore. Folks 'd think 'twas right in the next room 'stead of in a village a half mile off. Huh!" for another tremendous crash, louder even than the first, again set the windows rattling. "What they got over there, anyhow, gov'ment artilories or Mount Pelees? The cannon they had last year didn't make quarter that noise. I-a-n-d!" as a succession of half a dozen explosions, followed by an almost continuous rumble, with scarcely an appreciable space between, shook the earth. "What is the matter, anyhow—the world comin' to an end?" He rose hastily and began to dress, for the roosters were now all crowing and the dogs barking, and from the barn came a frightened bellowing and stamping of cattle. In the darkness and utter stillness of the night the crashes were terrifying. Before he could don his clothes and get outside there were a dozen or fifteen more explosions, some coming singly, others in a long, scarcely broken rumble or in one great crash.

But, once outside, the mystery was partly explained, for the air was strong with the smell of burned powder. "I was the Fourth of Julyers, as he had first thought, but how in the name of reason had they managed to make so much noise?"

Then came the last crashing explosion, and he started, at first blankly, then with a sudden comprehension. The crash had not come from exactly the direction of the village, but from the road pasture.

"The young reprobate!" he cried wrathfully. "He's been settin' off them rocks, an' I told him plain they was to be let till all was drilled. I might 'a' s'pliced from the way he took my souldin' an' then slipped off upstairs. He needs a good larrupin', that's what he needs, an' I feel jest the right way now to give it to him." Then something of the humor of the situation seemed to strike him, for he commenced to chuckle, which was, however, instantly suppressed. "Didn't he make a noise, though?" he went on. "Whew! He must 'a' been up all night gettin' that powder ready. I wonder what the village Fourth of Julyers are thinkin' o' 'bout now, gittin' beat at their own game by a little farm boy they won't ask to none of their doin's. I've a good mind to walk down that way an' see an' then come back an' give Reub his larrupin'. If it 'waint that he didn't wait like he was told I'd be minded to let him off easy jest for shakin' the village winders. I ain't heerd so much as a torpedo from there yet. 'Praps they ain't been able to catch their breath back."

He stood hesitating for a few moments. Over in the east a long line of daylight was beginning to appear. Then came a loud barking from the road pasture, toward which the dogs had rushed at the very beginning of the explosion; then he heard Reub's voice calling the dogs. Well, he was glad the young scamp was not hurt, though of course there had been no real danger. He had never known the boy to be careless about such matters.

Suddenly he seemed to make up his mind, for he turned and walked rapidly toward the village, muttering as he did so: "I've got to larrup Reub for not waitin' till all the stones was drilled, of course, but I'm glad 'twas done so early. 'Fore travel begun. I've laid awake nights lately thinkin' 'bout accidents an' damages."

The village was awake, as he had expected, but none of its own celebrating seemed to have yet commenced. Apparently its enthusiasm was momentarily paralyzed by the unexpected and tremendous noise which it could not hope to emulate. As he appeared among them, Enos could see fingers begin pointing toward him from the various groups, and he raised his head defiantly. He was accustomed to pointing fingers and even to hooting from the younger boys. He had not been a public spirited man, and the village had resented it. None from his farm was ever asked to join in the "doins'."

But now something very strange happened. Behind the pointing fingers he began to see smiling, admiring, even cordial faces. Several of the prominent men started toward him with extended hands.

"Well, Enos, you certainly did us up that time," chuckled the doctor as he held out to the horny hand and looked at its owner admiringly, "and, what's more to the purpose, you did up the folks in the town across the river. They've been crowing over us for ten years, setting themselves up as the most patriotic village in the county, and I'll admit they did make an outrageous racket on the Fourth. But this year we made up our minds we'd beat 'em if it split the last gun. And here you come in, without so much as a horn blowing on ahead, and do us both up. Well, it serves us right for not asking you to join in, though none of us thought you cared for such things. But how'd you come to hatch out such a plan, Enos?"

"I 'waint me. That boy Reub—"

"Oh, yes. We know that boy Reub did the firing. And I must say he's a prime hand at it. Some of the smaller boys started for your place at the first explosion, but when they got in sight of the field the air was so full of rocks and smoke they got scared and scurried back. Then some of us older ones went out and saw your boy Reub running the field like an engineer at his throttle. Well, it was certainly a great plan."

"But I tell ye 't was Reub!"

"Oh, yes. You've been having those rocks drilled for two weeks past. I've been by there and know. One day I saw you working with the boy yourself. And there hasn't been a single explosion in two weeks. Needn't talk to me. You've been saving up for this morn-

"WHAT'D YE SET THEM STONES OFF FOR?"

ing. But there's something else. We're planning for a pretty big day, and we want you and your folks to join in. It's late askin', I know, and we feel ashamed of havin' overlooked you, but you must let bygones be bygones. There's to be a big dinner in the hall, and some speeches, and in the afternoon games, and then fireworks and ice cream and some other things for the evening. And, by the way, we want that boy Reub of yours to help let off the fireworks. He's a prime hand. No," as he saw protest on Enos Judkins' face, "there isn't to be any ifs or ands. You just hurry home and tell your wife to get ready and then come right over to my house. We'll start from there. But excuse me," as a figure passed them on the sidewalk, "there goes one of my patients. I want to see him a minute."

Enos Judkins walked back toward his farm in a dazed manner. They, the villagers, wanted him to join them in everything to be one of them. It seemed incredible. His farm people had always lived apart from the village in a social way. Even his father had felt and been considered outside. It was their way.

But something in the cordial grasp of the doctor's hand which he had never felt before, and in the new way the people had looked at him was stirring a strange, unknown chord in the crumbled old man's heart. He had never voluntarily given a dollar for public good, and he understood that being one of the village people in a social way would involve this also, but for some reason the thought did not make him wrinkle up his face as it would have done an hour before. Indeed, it would almost seem that he found the thought a pleasant one, for more than once on the way to the road pasture he muttered: "Mebbe 'twould be wuth it; mebbe 'twould be wuth it. An' he's a real nice man, that doctor."

But when he came opposite the pasture and saw Reub working among the stones, whistling, his face hardened.

"Come here, Reub," he called angrily. Then as the boy approached, "What'd ye set them stones off for when I told ye to wait till they's all drilled?"

"They was all drilled," answered Reub. "I drilled the last rock an' had the powder all in 'fore I went home last night."

"Then why didn't ye tell me?"

"Ye didn't ask. Ye said they was to be set when all was done, an' ye said ye didn't want 'em set by daylight, when travel was goin' on. An'—an' to-day's the Fourth."

Enos Judkins' eyes twinkled a little, but his face remained grave. He continued to regard the boy for some moments in silence.

"Yes, 'tis the Fourth," he said at last. "I guess ye'd better go on to the house, Reub, an' put on your good clothes. An' tell Ann to get ready. We're goin' over to the village to help with the doins'."

Reliability.

"Do you regard the faith cure as reliable?"

"In one way," answered the sardonic person, "it seems quite reliable. There appears to be no doubt whatever about its paying dividends."—Washington Star.

Bismarck's Intense Hate.

That Prince Bismarck was a good hater is shown in the reminiscences of Herr von Tiedemann, formerly chief of the imperial chancellery. During the first dinner at which Herr von Tiedemann was present with the prince, Bismarck said he thought Goethe was wrong in saying that only love beautified life. Hate did the same service and was quite as great a vivifier as love. "To me," added the prince, "are indispensable love for my wife and hate for Windhorst." One morning Bismarck said to Herr von Tiedemann, "I have not been able to sleep; I have hated the whole night."

Fine Job Printing AT STAR OFFICEA CHEAT SOLD AT AUCTION.*How a Gambler Paid For Alexandria's Town Clock.

The public sale of a gambler on a block used for auctioning off negroes once paid for a clock for the city of Alexandria, Va., just across the Potomac river from Washington.

In the days ago the historic old city of Alexandria was known as a place where all kinds of games suited to the sporting fraternity could be found without difficulty. Stories of large sums lost and won are still current. Of these now is more interesting than the one which reveals the history of the old town clock of that ancient city.

The story is to the effect that on one occasion Alexandria was infested by a party of shrewd gamblers from the southwest. At that time an interesting game could sometimes be made up with citizens of high standing, but who enjoyed a brush at cards. One of these, a merchant, fell into a snare which was set for him by the visiting gamblers, aided by a local stool pigeon. After a series of games the gentleman found himself out of pocket several thousand dollars and the gamblers in possession of his notes for large amounts.

The citizen "made good." But a lucky thought enabled him to bring about his revenge on the leader of the blacklegs. He was acquainted with the fact there was an old law of the state—and a similar law is still on the statute books—in which it was made and provided "that if any man cannot show that he is pursuing some lawful means of procuring a livelihood he shall be sold or hired out at public auction or sale to prevent by his labor his becoming chargeable to the town." Going before a justice of the peace, the "good citizen" entered a charge against the leading gambler, who was immediately arrested by the town marshal. He was carried to court, tried, convicted, and the sentence was that he be sold at public auction.

The "good citizen's" programme went through without a slip. The gambler was at first disposed to treat the matter as a huge joke, believing that with the outlay of a little of his easily earned money he could secure his freedom. But he did not know the temper of the Virginians. He spent the night in prison and was taken on the following morning to the "block" and put up for sale. The first bid came from the "good citizen," and it was an even $100. Bidding for his own freedom, the blackleg quickly offered twice that sum. This was raised to $300 by the fleeced merchant and in turn to $400 by the gambler. While the assembled crowd cheered and laughed the two alternately responded to the auctioneer's appeals until the bidding reached $2,000.

Then the gambler begged for mercy, pleading poverty. He declared that his companions had deserted him and carried off the larger part of all winnings made in the town. The "good citizen" calmly raised the bid to $2,100. There was no alternative, the gambler must either be forced into a service of degrading labor under the supervision of a man who had small cause to love him or he must go on bidding for himself. When the bidding reached $3,500 he was permitted to pay over the amount and depart from Alexandria, a crowd of hooting, yelling men and boys following him to the wharf. The proceeds of the sale of the gambler were given to the town for the purpose of buying a town clock and building a steeple for the town hall and market house. This was destroyed by fire in 1871, but a new structure was erected on the same site, the steeple and clock being made as near like the old as possible.—Kansas City Star.

Truth Explodes M. O. Fallacies.

There is a curious analogy between certain chemical and economic experiments. If, for instance, equal volumes of hydrogen and chlorine are put into a glass receptacle, they will remain a quiet mixture of gases so long as they are kept in the dark, but as soon as they are brought into a bright light they explode with violence. Similarly, mixed in about equal proportions in the reports of municipal plants remain quiet as long as the report is kept in the dark, but as soon as the light of investigation is turned upon it—well, there isn't much left of the report.

New Light in Seattle.

Municipal ownership theories and socialistic doctrines are having their effect on Seattle's finances. Whereas two years ago Seattle securities were the quickest to be found in the west and the most sought, today eastern financiers seem to have been completely scared out.—Seattle Times.

Stories of the Intrepid Confederate Commander.WHEN HE ELUSHED AND FLED

His Retreat in Dismay From an Army of Admiring Women—The Only Man Who Could Put the General to Sleep. His Heroic Reply to Lee.

Among many other incidents in the career of General Stonewall Jackson, a writer in the Sunday Magazine tells of an occasion when the intrepid commander was entirely routed by the enemy—an army of admiring women who clamored about him to secure buttons from his coat, locks of hair or other souvenirs. As he backed, blushing, away he declared, "Really, ladies, this is the first time I was ever surrounded by the enemy." And in confusion and dismay he made good his retreat. Of the other stories told of the general we quote a few:

He was never an ornamental soldier, being roughly clad and so plain as to be frequently taken for far less than he was. He and his staff were once compelled to ride through a field of uncut oats. The owner rushed out in great indignation, demanding the name of the leader that he might report him. "My name is Jackson," replied the general.

"What Jackson?" asked the irate farmer.

"General Jackson,"

"You don't mean to tell me that you are the famous Stonewall Jackson?" the farmer stammered.

"That's what they call me."

The farmer took off his hat with great reverence and said: "General Jackson, ride over my whole field. Do what you like with it, sir."

He was a man of unusual religious devotion, but would always go to sleep in church. Perhaps it was because the church service was the only thing he could depend upon to go right along if he did not keep awake to watch it. His friends said that it was because of weakness resulting from his exertions in the Mexican war. When he was teaching at the institute he was ill, and all efforts failed to secure for him a night's rest. One of his friends in attendance suggested that the Rev. Dr. White be called in, as he was the only one who was ever able to put Jackson to sleep. In spite of this defection, however, Dr. White and his famous parishioner were fast friends to the end.

His men said of him that he always marched at daybreak, except when he started the night before. The celerity of his movements gave his division the name of "Jackson's foot cavalry." One of his men said:

"Mosco took forty years to get the Israelites through the wilderness, with manna furnished all the way, but Old Jack would have double quicked it through on half rations in three days at the most."

Military leaders have usually approved the policy of subsisting on the enemy's country, but it was left for Stonewall Jackson to make the enemy himself the purveyor of supplies. The federal General Banks became known as Jackson's commissary general, and when his column was sent to turn off into the valley the report would go out, "Lee is out of rations again and has sent Jackson to call on his commissary general."

Jackson was like flint—cold, impassive, still, in time of peace. But at the sharp, swift stroke of military necessity the spark of his genius flew out and burst into flame that swept away all obstacles. When General Ewell was asked what he thought of Jackson's generalship in the valley campaign he replied:

"When he began it I thought him crazy. Before he got through I thought him inspired."

Before the end of the campaign Jackson had his men brought into a spirit like his own. The division reached a deep stream where the bridge had been burned. He sent for an engineer corps and also for some carpenters among his own soldiers. The engineers at once set to work to prepare plans, but two hours later the head carpenter appeared and reported, "The bridge is finished, general, and we can go on, but them air pictures ain't come yet."

The soldier may need religion as much as or more than any one else, but, as a rule, the tabernacles of the Lord are not spread on the tented field of the warrior. Stonewall Jackson, however, was an exception. He never failed to invoke the Prince of Peace to preside over his battle. Old Jim, his faithful servant, said:

"If 'gen'ral is de greatest' an' man fo' prayin' night an' mornin' an' all times. But when I sees him git up sev'ral times in de night besides an' start in prayin' I knows dar's gwine ter be sompin' up, an' I go straight an' pack his haversack, 'cause I know he'll be callin' fer it fo' daylight."

It was fitting that he who found his life on the battlefield should find there the entrance into immortal life, but in the agony of loss Lee exclaimed, "Any victory would be dear at such a price!" To his wounded general he wrote, "Could I have ordered events I would have chosen for the good of the country to have been disabled in your stead."

Jackson replied to the leader, who he had declared was the only man whom he would follow blindfold, "Better that ten Jacksons should fall than one Lee."

Some one has said that the Lord in his providence intended that the Confederacy should not win, and to prevent it he had to remove Jackson.

IN QUEST OF AN HEIR.

The Great Napoleon and What Might Have Been.

Had Josephine borne Napoleon an heir the history of France and indeed all Europe must have been very different. In the hours of triumph after Wagram Napoleon realized that had the young German fanatic who had come to attempt his life been successful in his mission one thrust from that vulgar kitchen knife which the had concealed would have shattered all the glories whose fashioning had caused such rivers of blood to flow. He resolved upon the divorce of Josephine. He would take as his wife a princess and found a dynasty. Whom should he marry? Should it be a princess of the Russian royal house or a princess of another? He slept in the palace of the man whom he had but newly conquered, the emperor of Austria, and slept, as fate would have it, in the very room in which the heir for whom he prayed was destined to die. Under the roof of the son of the Caesars he resolved to marry that man's daughter. A little while earlier she had heard that the tide of battle had turned against the French and had written to her father: "We have heard with great joy that Napoleon was present at the battle which was lost. If he would only lose his head as well!" The writer of the words became, ten months after the French troops entered Vienna as conquerors, the bride of the man whose death she now wished.

She was the granddaughter of Marie Antoinette, and by his marriage to her Napoleon believed it would be the salvation of France. A man wiser in the matter than himself had pointed to a Russian marriage, foreseeing renewed hostilities with either Austria or Russia. Napoleon, he said, knew his way to Vienna; he doubted whether he knew the road to St. Petersburg. Napoleon chose to find, as he afterward said, that the marriage was but an abyss strewn with flowers. The marriage led inevitably to the calamitous Russian campaign and to the breakup of his empire. His ruin began with his marriage to the princess who was to be the mother of his child. All France acclaimed the union with joy, which was eclipsed only by the birth of the heir.—St. James' Gazette.

BIRDS' EGGS.

Two infinitesimal white eggs tax the tiny nest of the lovely humming bird. The outbird in her scrupulously-like nest lays four to six blue-green eggs.

Four to six little white eggs are laid in the domestic pheasant bird's beautiful and finished nest.

Blue white eggs of the bobolink may actually be stumbled over as one walks along the high grass.

The mocking bird, of romantic fame, lays from four to six speckled green eggs in her loosely done nest.

Two white eggs occupy the morning dove's home, which stands for the poorest sort of bird housekeeping.

One of the best architects in the world is the oriole. Its graceful nest contains four to six whitish eggs marked with black and brown.

Olive gray eggs with brown spots (five of them) occupy the blue jay's bulky nest in a tree crotch high above the ground.—St. Louis Republic.

Their Strange Behavior Explained.

A real estate broker was one day walking down the street with a friend. After proceeding a short distance the friend fell back a step and closed in on the broker's right. They proceeded twenty feet, when the broker backed up, sidestepped and regained his former position.

"Excuse me," said the friend as they proceeded a little farther along and he retreated a step and again slipped around to the right side of the real estate agent.

They continued along together a few more paces when the broker, with an "I beg your pardon," executed the same maneuver and regained the right hand position.

"Say, what's the matter?" demanded the friend.

"Can't hear with my right ear," explained the broker.

"Same here," said the friend. "Shake."

Where to Find It.

Two sons of Erin shared the same bed as well as the same bottle of whisky. Pat waited till he found Mike slept, when he quietly arose and emptied the bottle. Soon after Mike, waking, stole out of bed and, groping about in the dark, was asked by his companion:

"Thwat are yez lookin' fer, Mike?"

"Oh, nothin'," says Mike.

"Well, Mike," says Pat, "ye'll find it over there in the corner in the bottle."—London Answers.

Seldom Wear Out

Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills relieve pain—not only once, but as many times as it is necessary to take them. Many persons who suffer from chronic ailments find in them a source of great relief from the suffering which they would otherwise be compelled to endure. Their soothing influence upon the nerves strengthen rather than weaken them. For this reason they seldom lose their effectiveness.

"I am 62 years old and have suffered for 12 years from nervous troubles, rheumatism and neuralgia, palpitation of the heart, shortness of breath, sleeplessness, and pain around the heart. The Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills have been a blessing to me. I don't know what I should do without them, and they are the only remedy I have ever used that either did not wear out or took less time than I have been using them, or else the injurious results were such that I would be obliged to cease their use."

MRS. S. C. ROBINSON,
27 Carter St., Chattanooga, Tenn.
Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills are sold by your druggist, who will guarantee that the first package will benefit you. If it fails, he will return your money. 25 doses, 25 cents. Never sold in bulk. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

Why the Waterfulness.

The present ill of municipal ownership is the extravagance of political management of industries. This is generally masked by putting part of the cost on the taxpayers by borrowing money on the credit of the city or spending it out of the general revenues. The ultimate and oppressive evil of municipal ownership as illustrated in the history of British provincial cities is the steady progress toward bankruptcy made by continually increasing the city's debt to render all kinds of service to the public at a constant loss, continually made up by taxation and borrowing till the city's credit is gone.—From an Editorial in Minneapolis Tribune.

A correspondent of the Woburn Journal truthfully says: "As my mind's eye sweeps over this town I seem forced to the conclusion that a much greater number of our people are now absent on vacation pleasures bent than in any other summer within the memory of man or woman. Why this is thus cannot be readily explained to my satisfaction. It is an undeniable fact that Winchester offers more and stronger inducements for its citizens to remain at home, and for outsiders to come here for vacation comforts and pleasures, than any other inland place, not excepting the popular spots in Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont, to which so many people flock during the hot weather. Winchester is a beautiful town at all seasons of the year, and especially attractive in the sweet summertime. It is picturesque—a show town, delightful from every point of view. Just think of our wooded hills, the valleys between them, the green meadows, and beautiful sheets of water, tree margined, that lie in and around its borders, and try to imagine why anyone should leave these fine land and waterscapes for others vastly less charming and more remote. It is beyond my ken to explain it."

People who are cautious about having inexperienced dentists extract and fill their teeth may feel reassured by the fact that out of 90 applicants who were examined by the state board recently only 41 were successful. This would seem to prove that the dental school graduate who has not absorbed the elements of his chosen profession pretty thoroughly will not get a chance to "hang out his shingle" until the state board pronounces him capable. Winchester is fortunate in having experienced dentists who do good work. They are not in that bargain class who do cheap work at low prices as is frequently the case in Boston. A good job on the teeth is worth at least a fair price, and this is what the Winchester dentists charge.

GREAT INDIGNATION

Residents of Highlands Incensed Over Liquor Sign.

Property Owners Consider it an Injury to their Neighborhood.

Monday painters started in painting a liquor sign on the high billboard on Washington street at the foot of Prince avenue. This sign had been first used by a Boston department store and at the time of its erection there was much indignation. This advertisement of the Boston store has now been painted out, and this firm having a lease of the board has disposed of it to this liquor concern. The new sign is most gaudily painted and with a picture of a yacht attracts the attention of all passing. The entire neighborhood is up in arms as the people not only consider it an injury to surrounding property, but a direct menace to the future of their children who are obliged to pass it daily. When the schools open next month scores of these young people from more distant points will pass the sign, and mothers and fathers regret very much the temptation thrown in the way of the future of their children in creating a desire for liquor.

The indignation is not entirely among the people living in the neighborhood, but extends to all parts of the Highlands. The question is, what can the citizens do about it? The land on which the sign rests belongs, it is said, to a party living out of town and who has no interest in the neighborhood other than to get revenue for the land.

Public opinion, however, should be aroused to the extent of using every effort to have the objectionable sign removed in the interests of the young people and the protection of the home and private property. There is also danger that other signs of a similar nature will be erected in the town.

Should public opinion fail to accomplish the desired result, then the persons who will represent Winchester in the Massachusetts Senate and House should be instructed to use their influence to have a law enacted to prohibit these signs, or failing this to give the Selectmen of towns power to regulate or license them. This regulation should be the same as is vested in the Metropolitan Park Commission. The Village Improvement Association should take the matter up as it is believed it can accomplish the end desired.

After the above had been placed in type it was ascertained that when Chief of Police McIntosh saw the sign he called up Mr. Donnelly, the proprietor of the bill posting firm who has charge of this sign. The Chief told him of the great objection by the people to this liquor advertisement, the injury to the neighborhood, the influence it would have on the minds of young children, its close proximity to one of the main thoroughfares of the town, and asked him if he could not remove it. Mr. Donnelly talked very pleasantly to the Chief and informed him that he was ignorant of the location of the sign and that he would have the objectionable advertisement removed from the board as soon as he could get his men to work on it. He said that he had no desire to take a hostile attitude regarding signs and was always pleased to conform to the desires of the people in particular cases.

Chief McIntosh is to be commended for the action taken by him in this matter and for so clearly and concisely stating the objections to Mr. Donnelly, for it must be remembered that there is no law that could compel the removal of the advertisement if he had declined to do so.

A QUIET DAY.

Wednesday was one of the quietest days that Winchester has experienced for a long time, because of its being Trade Day. From 9 a. m. to 4 p. m. there was not an open store in town, every one being closed as tight as a drum, so that there was a stillness not even seen on the Sabbath, when many of the stores are open. Many of the business men and their clerks and wives, daughters and sweethearts went to Bass Point for their outing, others to the country, while those particularly pressed for time did much work about the grounds of their homes.

The largest number, however, went to Bass Point where the chief attraction was a game of base ball by two nines composed of those on the east and west sides of Main street. Later many went to Revere Beach to spend the evening and take in the sights.

The ball game was full of interest and was replete with many ludicrous scenes. The East Sides won by the narrow margin of 15 to 12. The players were:

NEARING 87 YEARS.

Col. N. A. Richardson will be 87 years of age on Aug. 29. His condition remains practically the same, he being confined to the house and the greater portion of the time in bed. He continues to take much interest in town, state and national affairs and when not able to read the papers he has that service performed by his housekeeper, Miss Richardson.

PUBLIC INVITED.

The public is invited to the exhibition of the work of the vacation school to be held at the Chapin schoolhouse next Thursday forenoon at 10 o'clock. This exhibition will be well worth visiting, not only because of the excellent work that will be displayed, but as showing the good this school is doing for young children.

PRIZES AWARDED.

In June, the Edison Electric Illuminating Company announced a prize contest open to the school children of Winchester for the four best essays on the uses and advantages of the electric flat irons so generally used in Winchester. The announcement of the contest created no little interest among the children and the result was that the company received essays from many contestants. The subject was one that could be easily grasped by the children as these flat irons could easily be studied in their homes, so that there was no guess work or drawing on the imagination to ascertain the actual benefits of this labor saving and freedom from heat device which has proved such a benefit to all who have occasion to do the ironing of the family clothes, especially during the warm weather.

The prizes announced to be given by the company for the best essays were: $10 for the best essay, $5 for the second, $3 for the third and $3 for the fourth, the essays not to exceed 1000 words. No marks of identification were to be put on the essays, and the writers were obliged to write their names on a card and enclose it in a sealed envelope, accompanied by the essay, and sent to the publicity division of the Edison company, 39 Boylston street, Boston.

The essays were examined this week by a committee of Winchester citizens, composed of Fred S. Scates, Walter W. Rowe and Theo. P. Wilson and prizes were awarded to the following school children:

First prize, $10, to Edith G. Donaghev, 14 Glenwood avenue.
Second prize, $5, to Celina Cox, 205 Washington street.
Third prize, $3, to Derby Weston, 48 Fletcher street.
Fourth prize, $3, to Mildred Shaw, 1 Eaton court.

AN OLD TIME MODERATOR.

Here is a sample vote passed in Woburn town meeting, March 4, 1850 on Article 22 of the warrant which read: "to see if the town will do anything in relation to lighting Main street to Bedford street," it was "Voted, that any individual have the privilege of taking a lantern in a dark night, if he pleases."

At the close of that meeting a vote of thanks was passed to the moderator for the able, faithful and impartial manner in which he has discharged the duties of this day.

The moderator that day was Nathaniel A. Richardson who is still living in or near the same place he then lived in Winchester had not then been incorporated as a town, although action looking toward that event had been taken and reconsidered at the meeting held the previous month of February, which was presided over by our fellow citizen, Col. William T. Grammer.

At the town election the following April 1, the collection of taxes was let out at auction to N. A. Richardson at 2 per cent, though Frederick Flint the father of our present F. A. Flint, bid 1 3/4 percent.—[Woburn News.]

A BAD ACCIDENT.

Mrs. Charles D. Folsom of 668 Main street, mother to Mr. Hiram W. Folsom, met with a serious accident last week Thursday late in the afternoon by falling from an electric car of the Elevated at Arlington Centre. As near as can be ascertained the car started before she had a chance to get off at the crossing when she was thrown to the street fracturing her hip and badly straining the ligaments of her leg. She was helped to a near by drug store and later brought to Winchester in one of Mr. Reuben Hawes' carriages. She has suffered considerable pain, and is confined to her bed, resting comfortably, but considering her advanced age, 77 years, the injury is considered quite serious.

MYSTIC VALLEY TROLLEY CLUB

Goes to Worcester where they Enjoy a Pleasant Outing.

Thursday, August 8th, the start was made on 7:25 car for Arlington, thence a Subway-Arlington car to Boylston Street station and through the subway to the out ward tracks, where an Ipswich street car was taken passing the Fenway and in sight of the new Harvard Medical school and Mrs. Gardner's palace, and through Brookline Village and to Chestnut Hill. This was a ride of an hour and fifteen minutes for five cents. A Worcester car was waiting and started promptly and passed over the B. & W. line, arriving at Lake Station in one hour and fifty-five minutes, for forty-five cents.

The scenery along this line is most beautiful and varied and certainly this railroad takes the prize on electric roads. The towns passed are Newton, Wellesley, Natick, Framingham, Southboro, Westboro and Shrewsbury. Another nickel brought the party into Worcester. An hour was spent, visiting the City Hall, the Court House and the stores along Main street. At 12 lunch was eaten in dining rooms in the State Mutual Building. This is one of the most attractive spots in the city, situated on the ninth floor, commanding a fine view and light and airy. The 50 cent table d'hôte lunch is without exception the best to be found in New England.

The start for the return trip was at 1 o'clock in a Fitchburg car, passing through Shrewsbury and Boylston into Clinton by the Wachusett Reservoir. At 2:20 took the Hudson car passing Bolton, arriving at 3 o'clock. Here took the Concord car by way of Stow, Maynard, Acton and Concord Junction, and stepped directly on the car for Arlington Heights by way of Bedford and Lexington. Here took Boston Elevated car to Arlington Centre and at 5:15 embarked on Winchester Highlands special, which landed the party at their homes by 5:45. Number of miles travelled, 99; fares, $1.40. Present: George S. Littlefield, George W. Payne, George F. Parker, James H. Winn, Henry C. Miller and Albert F. Blaisdell.

Sixth and final trip of the season will be Boston to Gloucester by boat. Dinner in Gloucester, around Cape Ann by trolley and return all the way by trolley to Winchester, to take place on Thursday, Aug. 15.

LOST THUMB AND FINGER.

Oscar Lundblad, aged 26 years, an operator of an embossing machine at the Beggs & Cobb tannery, lost a thumb and forefinger of his right hand Monday by getting it caught in the machine when the pressure was applied.

Lundblad in some way got his hand caught in the mechanism so that the terrific pressure of the machine was applied with full force to his hand. Shopmates hastened to his assistance and he was released from the machine but not until his hand was crushed in a frightful manner. Chas. Johnson the foreman happened to be nearby and he with Supt. Harry Cox, Chas. Benson, John Foley and Warren Cox cared for the injured man until Dr. Shepherd arrived who dressed the hand and Lundblad was then taken to the Homeopathic Hospital, Boston. The injured man resides on Loring avenue.

A MEMORABLE STORM.

Its Destructive Effect as Viewed by a Resident of Winchester.

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

The fact of a recent severe tempest in West Medford, and serious freaks of a thunder storm in your town, have reminded me of the severest and most destructive cyclone or tornado which ever swept New England and which struck West Medford on the 22nd of August, 1851, fifty six years ago this month. The writer at the time was at work in the southwestern end of Harrison Parker's factory, and saw, at about 3:15 o'clock of Wednesday, I think, a heavy, angry, black, ominous cloud, rolling in a southeasterly direction from the vicinity of West Cambridge now Arlington. There was not a general tempest in Winchester and the neighboring region at the time of the movement of this dense, packed, and ill-omened cloud. The sky was darkened with threatenings of storm, but there was nothing more than an ordinary disturbance of the elements in your town. Upon hearing of the dreadful sweep and tragic fierceness of the storm only four miles from us, we on the following day, visited the scene of disaster, and the wreck and damage, and assertions of the tempest. The violent wonder of the storm struck West Cambridge, Main street, directly down from the sky, and began its rude rule at once. The tornado was about five rods wide, and no trees, buildings, barns, houses, cars, or fences, were able to stand its absolutely terrific progress. The line of its fury came to the tracks of the Boston and Lowell Railroad, just south, and clear of the depot, at an angle on the south border of the storm of about one hundred and thirty degrees and of course about fifty degrees on the northern edge. Not far from ten rods west of the tracks, a two-story dwelling was in process of construction, perhaps two-thirds completed. In the attic of this house was a workman lathing. Into the frenzied arms of the fearful tempest this large building was taken, tossed very carelessly and madly about, its walls bursting outward, its roof and windows and rafters, falling and flying above and upon the ground, filling the cellar with wreckage and debris, and yet, with a kind of gentle haste and sweep placing the surprised and frightened carpenter upon the ground unhurt. As the eye was turned towards West Cambridge every apple tree with its green foliage was humbly flat, the bodies of the trees, with their roots, pointing to the northwest. A short box-freight car standing upon a siding, below the depot, was with careless rudeness, blown from the rails to the fence, and left, with wheels and trucks, on the sky side of the scene. Next were some elm trees, with their tough and wiry branches wrenched off and their stout and stubborn stumps, standing and bristling with their strong fibres torn out of the limbs which the storm had taken off. Next from the carriage road, was a large house, of a dull yellow shade of color, which had been lifted and moved from its foundation, but not shattered. In some room of this home was the owner, named Huffman—spelling uncertain—who unfortunately, had been fatally injured in the jostling of his dwelling, and was said to be dying, as the writer and scores of people were with interest viewing the awful havoc and wrath of the whirling winds, and their swift mischief to everything in their path. Quite a distance from the street, upon a higher point, was a second new house large and commodious, nearly finished. This building was broken and torn literally to atoms, and lay a deep and indistinguishable mass of plastering, glass, sash, beams, boards, shingles, bricks, scantlings and doors, in the cellar. Strange to say the whole structure was divided, disintegrated and doomed to a sad and unglorious desolation, by the mighty and inexorable tempest. From this point on towards Malden the tornado moved, with less and less violence, until it rose in the northwestern part of the last named town, now a city. There were cultured and thoughtful and scientific gentlemen on the scene of elemental rage and ruin, studying the facts and forces which were active in such startling results. As above stated, the houses demolished seemed to have been forced from within outward. This fact, with some sensations felt from windage and whirling currents of air, just with the principle of water spouts upon the ocean, and the familiar occurrence of a chip or leaf rising in a whirl of wind in the street, led to the conclusion that the great and vigorous whirl of wind, four or five rods wide, produced a vacuum, and upon enveloping the houses named, the air within the building pressing the walls against a vacuum without, against nothing, produced the striking phenomenon witnessed in the remorseless tread of the tempest. The published account of cyclones, tornados and storms in the world's history, with probable accuracy and truth, states that the above hurricane and mighty rumbling roar of the elements in West Medford, on the 22nd of August, fifty-six years ago, was the heaviest and most fearful storm which ever visited New England.

THEIR ONE PURPOSE

Aim of the Drapers to Master Practical Side of Every Undertaking

Lieut.-Gov. Draper a Man with a Practical Training for a Successful Business Career.

Milford Journal Series

A notable characteristic of American life is the adaptability of its citizens to share not only the responsibilities in our business development, but the responsibilities of government as well. Some of the strongest men in public life have been men whose lives have been devoted, for the most part, to purely business pursuits, and frequently the most successful men in public affairs is the successful man of business. Lieut. Gov. Draper is of that type of men that often attracts public attention. Emerson, in describing the achievement of a distinguished international character, referred to him as a "modern man," meaning a practical man. This could be applied with equal force to the Lieutenant Governor.

Eben S. Draper is a man of practical ideas. He started out in life with one purpose in view, and that was to master the practical side of every undertaking. He was born in the village of Hopdale (then a part of Milford) in June, 1858, twenty-eight years before Hopdale became a town. There he attended the public schools. At the age of fourteen, he attended Allen's school at West Newton to prepare himself to enter the Institute of Technology. After finishing his preparatory course, he spent a year in his father's factory before entering the Institute of Technology. He entered the latter at the age of sixteen. After a two years' course he became satisfied that the technical training of the last part of the course would be of no special benefit in the particular line of business that was to be his life work and at the age of eighteen, he entered the works at Hopdale as any workman to thoroughly master the mechanical part of the business. He also spent much time with the Lonsdale Company at Lonsdale, R. I., Appleton Mills at Lowell and the Ameskeag Manufacturing Company at Manchester, N. H., to acquaint himself with the different processes of cotton manufacture as well as the different processes of machinery required to make a very wide variety of fabrics. Thus he laid the foundation for the practical work that was necessary for the expansion and development of cotton mill machinery which has made the Draper Company and the town of Hopdale famous the world over.

At the age of twenty-one he started out as a salesman for the firm of George Draper & Sons, who were then the selling agents of the different Hopdale concerns. During his first fifteen years as selling agent he became familiar by personal contact and experience with more than ninety per cent of all the cotton mills in the United States, both north and south.

In 1896 the Draper Company was organized by the absorption of the Hopdale Machine Company, Dutcher Temple Co., Hopdale Machine Screw Co., and George Draper & Sons, and while the Lieutenant Governor is a principal stockholder and director of the company, he remains the selling agent of the company and is as actively employed as ever in that important department of the business. When Mr. Draper started on the road for the various companies at Hopdale they were employing some three to five hundred men, while today they employ some three thousand men in the largest plant of the kind in the United States.

While Mr. Draper has been actively interested in the development of the Draper Company, he has been interested as a director or an officer of some fifteen to twenty different cotton manufacturing concerns, and at the present time is a director in banks and trust companies, in boot and shoe manufacturing concerns and in railroads, all of which has given him a wide practical experience in the business world.

ROAD RULES FOR AUTOS.

At the request of several owners of automobiles we print a portion of the circular recently sent out by the Safe Roads Automobile Association containing a summary of the laws regarding speed and manner of operating motor and other vehicles on our highways. The following are excerpts:

In the absence of special speed regulations in cities, towns, parks, etc., the law provides that at no time shall the person operating an automobile run it at a greater speed than is reasonable and proper, having regard to traffic and the use of the way and the safety of the public.

Exceeding the speed of twenty miles an hour for the distance on one quarter of a mile on any highway anywhere in Massachusetts is prima facie evidence of excessive speed.

Exceeding the speed of twelve miles an hour for an eighth of a mile upon any way inside the thickly settled (buildings averaging less than 200 feet apart for a quarter of a mile) or business part of any city or town is prima facie evidence of excessive speed.

Exceeding the speed of eight miles an hour approaching or traversing a crossing or intersection of ways, or in going around a corner or curve, or where the operator's view is obstructed, is prima facie evidence of excessive speed.

Any person convicted of operating an automobile recklessly, or while under the influence of liquor, or so as to endanger the safety of the public, is liable to a fine of not exceeding $100 or imprisonment for not exceeding six months.

The law requires an operator to have his license with him always when operating, and the certificate of registration to be always in the car and easily accessible. The law requires every person operating or in charge of any motor vehicle to stop when signaled by an officer, to give his name and address, the name and address of the owner, to produce his license and the certificate of the registration of the car.

The Association hopes to prevent any operator, at any place, from going so fast that he cannot stop after he sees any person or thing obstructing his passage, before he hits it.

To prevent any operator from going around any corner or curve upon the left-hand side of the road. He should keep always upon his own right hand side of the road.

To prevent any operator from going around corners or curves or across intersecting streets or by blind entrances too fast or without blowing his horn.

To prevent any automobile from passing another vehicle going in the same direction around or near a corner or curve, or where from any cause the operator cannot be sure he has an unobstructed passage. He should stay behind until he can see.

To prevent operators from operating their cars in such a manner that they cannot avoid injuring other people using the highways, provided they are using them properly and with due care. The careful operator must anticipate the carelessness of others. He must expect that people will step off street cars unexpectedly, will stop and turn back; children will run out and fall; that vehicles will be left around corners and in dangerous places. He knows that such carelessness will occur; it does many times every day, and he must use every possible precaution to be prepared.

The Massachusetts Highway Commission has stated that it commends the Association for its effort to secure a better observance of the laws and the proprieties in the operation of motor vehicles.

The Commission has power, for any cause which it deems sufficient, to revoke or suspend any operator's license or the registration of any car, and it has stated that the Commission will consider it a sufficient reason for the revocation or suspension of a license or the registration of a car if, after a hearing it is proved to the satisfaction of the Commission that the person complained of is guilty of any of the improprieties above mentioned. Specific evidence of reckless operation, with full details and the names and addresses of witnesses, should be sent to George McC. Sargent, Secretary, Equitable Building, Boston, in order to enable this Association to enter and prosecute complaints.

LOTTERIES OF EUROPE

The Way French and Italian State Drawings Are Handled.

PRIZES PICKED IN PUBLIC.

Officials Who Preside at the Selection of the Lucky Numbers—The Difference Between the French Bond Scheme and the Italian Lotto.

A year or two ago a Manchester publican, although he heard that a city of Paris bond which he possessed had won £2000, was so skeptical of the genuineness of French government lotteries that he refused to believe he could receive the money, even when a check for the amount came to hand. At last he was persuaded to cash the check. Accompanied by a few friends, who were going to get the money "or know why," he set out for Paris. They invaded the Hotel de Ville and came away graping with astonishment because the check was cashed the moment he handed it in.

The French state lotteries are worked on a system which, while putting fortunes into the pockets of lucky individuals, enables the country to raise loans when required. Each stock or bond, besides earning a small rate of interest, entitles the holder to participate in a series of drawings for prizes, ranging in value from a sovereign to several thousand pounds. The bonds range from 16 shillings to £50 and, being made payable to bearer, can be turned into ready money very easily.

The drawings for prizes must, according to law, take place in public, and no one, whether a bondholder or not, can be refused admittance to the Credit Foncier, where the drawing takes place. At every drawing the governor of the bank and other high officers are present, whose duty it is to superintend the whole proceedings. At the commencement one of them reads out a list of big prizes to be drawn for, and also states the number of bonds which are to be redeemed at par.

Each number is drawn by a boy from a revolving wheel or drum, varying in height from four to eight feet, according to the number of persons participating in the lottery. This boy is usually obtained from a neighboring orphanage or similar institution, and the sum of 10 francs is placed to his credit in his savings bank book as payment for his services. Before inserting his hand in the aperture the boy faces the audience with his hand in the air, fingers outspread, and his arm bare to the elbow, to show that he is concealing nothing before making the draw.

As he draws each little scroll from the wheel of fortune the presiding officer takes off the copper covering and reads out the lucky number, afterward passing it round to members of the press for verification. And so the drawing goes on until the whole of the prize winning numbers have been drawn. After this the drawing of those bonds which are to be repaid at par takes place, the boy drawing them from the wheel in handfuls and emptying them into a crystal bowl. From the latter they are taken, sorted out, counted and entered by clerks.

The Italian state lottery, or lotto, as it is called, is conducted on somewhat different lines. Each week, at eight of the principal cities in Italy, five numbers are publicly drawn from the numbers one to ninety. People have in the meantime been busy taking tickets for the lotto, on which are specified the numbers on which they are playing. If any two numbers selected by a player appear among the five drawn, he receives fifty-two and a half times his stake; if three numbers appear, 4,250 times his stake, and if four numbers, 60,000 times his stake. The lowest stake is 12 centesimi, equal to about 1 penny of our coinage.

Seeing, however, that there are 4,005 combinations of two in ninety numbers, 117,480 combinations of three and no fewer than 2,555,190 combinations of four, it is obvious that the odds are very heavy against winning. In spite of this, however, the lottery is very popular, as may be judged from the fact that on an average the Italian government draws £2,500,000 every year from this source.

In their selection of numbers the Italian gamblers are guided to a very great extent by dreams and events, for no people are more superstitious. Dream books are largely published and bought, while any untoward event is looked upon as furnishing a clue to lucky numbers.

Some time ago, for instance, a serious accident occurred at Genoa. Two horses bolted, fell headlong from an elevated piazza into a street below and were killed, a lamp post being upset in their fall. Immediately those who witnessed the tragedy decided to play the following numbers: Two (number of the horses), five (equivalent of horses, ninety meaning accident) and sixteen and forty (the number pointed on the lamp post which was upset). By a curious fluke every one of the numbers came out, and over 6,000,000 lire—£252,000—was won.

In Austria and Germany, too, government lotteries are flourishing institutions. What is known as the Royal Prussian lottery has monthly drawings, and the number of tickets disposed of for each event is close on 250,000. Owing to their high price, however, these are seldom held in their integrity, and tickets for small fractions of each are issued. Never during a whole century has the holder of an undivided ticket won the great stake, though thousands have won fortunes by being possessors of shares of winning numbers.—London Tit-Bits.

THESE CITIES AGAINST IT.

Municipal Ownership Turned Down In Various Places.

The voters of Colorado City have refused to sanction a bond issue for a municipal lighting plant.

The proposition to bond Willisville, Ill., for an electric light plant was defeated at a recent election.

The city council of South Sharon, Pa., has decided not to issue bonds for an electric light plant.

Lake Forest, Ill., voted down the proposition to buy the works of the Lake Forest Water company. The vote stood 292 to 68.

The Pittsburg (Kan.) Headlight states that at a recent election the proposition to bond the city for the purchase of the waterworks was defeated by 836 to 363.

The Waterloo (Ia.) Reporter states that Strawberry Point, in that state, after employing experts to investigate the matter has decided against a municipal light plant and in favor of a franchise.

The final abandonment of municipal ownership by Muncie, Ind., is an assured fact. The machinery of the electric light plant, which broke down a year ago after being in operation fourteen years, has been sold at a fraction of its cost. The city had invested $30,000 in the plant.

Apparently the voters of Bryan, O., do not regard municipal ownership as so much of a success that they want more of it, for they have defeated an ordinance providing for a bond issue of $40,000 for the improvement of the lighting and water plants. This illustrates one of the evil results of the system, for the money was needed to equip the plants with new and more economical machinery.

Van W. Welsh, village clerk of Beverly, O., writes as follows in response to a request for the reasons for the sale by that village of its electric light plant: "Will say the greatest reason for selling the plant was that the village could get no satisfactory service from plant in the manner it was being handled. The plant has been sold to local parties with the hope of getting better service in the future."

Rutherford, N. J., has decided not to go into the lighting business. This decision was reached at a public meeting called by the mayor to act upon the report of a committee of citizens which had been for a year making a thorough investigation of the subject. The report was unfavorable to the establishment of either a gas or an electric light plant and stated that a study of the subject showed that "there have been more failures than successes." There was no hostility to municipal ownership as a theory, but a grave doubt as to its practicability.

HOT WEATHER ADVICE.

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

Please give the enclosed space in the STAR.

WHITFIELD TUCK.

Bear it patiently, uncomplainingly, even cheerfully, for it is the only weather we have at this season of the year, and it is good for the corn. Don't get excited, not be in a hurry. The other fellow cannot get it all, and cold storage has its limitations. Don't get the big head. It is heavy to carry. Don't get mad. You might hit the wrong fellow. Be good. It is creditable and exceedingly economical.

If you cannot take a vacation, nor own a camp or an automobile, never mind. Take it easy, observe the restlessness even of those poor mortals, and resolve that all weather is good weather, and be jolly and patient under all conditions. Don't forget to be grateful for the privilege of being permitted to live in such a beautiful town as Winchester.

GOLDSMITH'S FORTY.

Wretched Misery of the Amiable but Imprudent Author.

In 1758, two years after Goldsmith returned from his wanderings on the continent, he presented himself at Surgeons' hall for examination as a hospital mate, with the view of entering the army or navy; but he suffered the mortification of being rejected as unqualified. That he might appear before the examining surgeon suitably dressed Goldsmith obtained a new suit of clothes, for which Griffiths, the publisher of the Monthly Review, became security. The clothes were to be returned immediately when the purpose was served, or the debt was to be discharged. Poor Goldsmith, having failed in his object and probably distressed by urgent want, pawned the clothes. The publisher threatened, and Goldsmith replied:

"I know of no misery but a jail, to which my own imprudence and your letter seem to point. I have seen it inevitable these three or four weeks and, by heavens, request it as a favor—a favor that may prevent something more fatal. I have been some years struggling with a wretched being, with all that contempt and indignance bring with it, with all those strong passions which make contempt insupportable. What, then, has a jail that is formidable?"

Such was the hopelessness, the deep despair of this imprudent but amiable author who has added to the delight of millions and to the glory of English literature.

CURIOUS DECEPTIONS.

The Way Our Senses Are Liable to Play Us False.

Our senses deceive us curiously at times. A flash of lightning lights up the ground for only one-millionth of a second, yet it seems to us to last ever so much longer. What happens is that the impression remains in the eye or the retina for about one-eighth of a second, or 124,000 times as long as the flash lasts. If on a dark night a train speeding along at sixty miles an hour is lit up by a lightning flash it appears stationary, yet in the eighth of a second during which we seem to see it the train travels eleven feet. But we really only see it during one-millionth of a second, and in that time it travels only one-hundredth of an inch.

When a man's leg is cut off, if the stump be irritated he feels the pain in his toes. This curious deception is the same as any one can practice on himself by striking his elbow on the table, when he feels the pain in his fingers. Of course in both cases the pain is felt in the brain.

We do not actually perceive different distances with the eye, but judge them from various indications. When our judgment is at fault we are deceived. If you see a person in a fog, for instance, he seems to be much bigger than usual. The same thing happens when you see men or cattle on the top of a hill against the horizon in twilight. In both cases you judge them to be farther away than they really are, and consequently they appear uncommonly large.

A STUBBORN LOVER.

He Lay Firm and Conquered the Bride's Close Fisted Father.

I remember, says a writer on Irish Life, the marriage of the daughter of a well to do shopkeeper in the town of Galway. The father of the bride was considered to be decidedly close fisted. The bridegroom, as well as I remember, was of a station somewhat superior to that of the family he proposed to ally himself with. The wedding day came, but when the bridal party assembled at the chapel the bridegroom failed to appear. After waiting long and vainly for the lagard the emissaries were dispatched to his abode to hasten his coming. They found him snugly ensconced in bed.

"Sorra foot do I stir out of this," said the prospective benedict, "unless the fortune's doubled."

For an hour and more intermediaries ran backward and forward between the chapel and the bridegroom's dwelling, striving to make terms, while the bride waited at the altar with such patience as she could muster. The bridegroom, however, stood, or rather lay, firm, and at last the father, unwilling that his daughter should be put to shame in the sight of all Galway by returning to her father's house unwed, gave way and promised to double the fortune as demanded, whereupon the bridegroom got up, dressed himself and went to church to be married.

Strange Antiquity of Egypt.

Many tourists who have crossed the Mediterranean to Alexandria and have made the three hour journey thence by express to Cairo establish themselves in one of the fashionable hotels, do a little shopping in the native quarter, see a mosque or two, a native wedding, ride a camel the quarter mile distance from the Mena House to the sphinx, and perhaps go as far as to visit Saqqara—a day's excursion from Cairo—then turn homeward fancying, and also declaring, that they have seen Egypt. So they have, in a sense, but Cairo is no more representative of Egypt as a country than New York is of the entire United States. To see upper Egypt, with its fellah life, its mud cities and its quaint scenery, is like turning the leaves of an old history and studying the engravings, for neither the country nor the people have changed to any appreciable degree since the days of Mohammed unless it be in the accomplishment in which all seem to be equally well trained—that of begging backwards. Egypt is spoken of as becoming modernized, but

BOSTON LETTER

Democratic Candidates Doing Much Speaking and Touring

THEY PUSH TARIFF ISSUE

Governor Guild's Splendid Administration Has Given General Satisfaction Regardless of Political Affiliations

This is the season of political dinners at seashore resorts. The air is full of political gossip concerning the two leading candidates for governor and strenuous claims are made for both Bartlett and Whitney.

Mr. Whitney is presenting his political case to the Democracy through the medium of speeches on what he declares to be a non-political subject—reciprocity with Canada. Democrats never play politics. Their only purpose and aim in asking for elevation to high office is the good of the people. Truly this is an unselfish world and the Democratic candidates for governor appear, from their own account, to be the high priests of unselfishness. These Democratic campaigners are altogether too modest, too shrinking, too self-effacing.

According to their claims, there must be a prize in every package and those who fail to secure one of these valuable parcels are doubtless doomed to lifelong regret and disappointment. However, the ordinary citizen will continue to worry along, even though he neglect to cast a ballot for either Whitney or Bartlett. It may be a tremendous loss, but just how much of a loss it is nobody will know, even though one of these candidates may secure the nomination and then suffer defeat at the polls.

But while Mr. Whitney is covering the state, making speeches at various functions on his pet subject, General Bartlett is shooting around the course in a swift automobile, shaking hands with the Democracy of the commonwealth, and sizing up the situation as it affects his candidacy. It is certainly true that his friends appear to believe he has a show of securing the nomination. They make startling claims which are certainly interesting, if taken at their face value.

Large Claims Discounted

The seasoned politician takes the claims of both sides with a grain of salt. It is safer thus. It is morally certain that one side or the other, or perhaps both, may be mistaken in its diagnosis of the situation. The majority of the Democratic politicians appear to be for Whitney. As for the Democratic masses, if they follow the usual course in Democratic crises, they will for the most part follow the leaders, and in that case Whitney would win the nomination.

But the winning of the nomination is only the beginning of a strenuous battle. The Republican party is certainly in as good shape this year as it was last, and probably better than it was two years ago. Governor Guild has given an extremely satisfactory administration, and there is no apparent reason for changing to Henry M. Whitney, or any other Democrat. The state has been well administered, not only during this year, but during the entire term of Governor Guild, and were it not that a Democrat desires to sit in the gubernatorial chair, there would be no voice raised against the re-election of the splendid chief magistrate of Massachusetts. A man who is ambitious to hold an office filled by another is never at a loss to discover reasons why he should be selected and the incumbent displaced. These reasons are not always convincing, and are sometimes ridiculous when examined carefully.

The allegation that Mr. Whitney or Mr. Bartlett should be elected governor of Massachusetts because they believe in reciprocity with Canada is an extremely weak and illogical thing. Nobody would use an argument like that anywhere outside of a political forum where mere assertion sometimes does duty for substantial fact.

Governor Guild has done his work so well during his tenure of office that there should be no doubt whatever as to his re-election. His work has won for him the cordial approval of a great majority of the members of the Republican party and of many Democrats, and this has been evidenced in many ways in the last few months. He has safeguarded the interests of the commonwealth, and of the people of the state so thoroughly, that he holds the general confidence of the multitude, wholly regardless of party affiliations.

Guild Is For Reciprocity

In addition to all this it is well known to everybody that Governor Guild is a reciprocity man. That he is in favor of a reciprocity with Canada which will be for the mutual interest of both countries and which shall give some advantage to the United States as well as to Canada. The governor is as much of a patriot as either Whitney or Bartlett. There is nothing he would not do to advance the interests of the commonwealth, even if it required a personal self-sacrifice of considerable magnitude. In this matter he is certainly unselfish, and devoted to the state as well as to the country.

On the other hand, at least one of the Democratic candidates appears to have selfish interests which might influence his position in regard to reciprocity. He is an owner of very extensive

BARBED WIRE.

A Lucky Device That Brought Millions to Its Inventor.

"The luckiest invention in history," said a patent official, "was that of barbed wire. It came about by accident."

"Isaac L. Ellwood was the inventor of barbed wire. In his youth he lived in De Kalb, Ill., and, having a neighbor whose pigs trespassed on his garden, he put up one day a wire fence of his own make. This fence had barbs and points on it. It was queer and ugly, but it kept out the pigs."

"It was a real barbed wire fence, the first in the world, and there were millions of money in it, but young Ellwood and his friends laughed at its freak appearance."

"One day two strangers saw this fence, perceived how well it kept out the pigs, realized how cheap it was—realized, in a word, its value—and ordered several tons of it from Ellwood. Furthermore, they contracted to sell for a term of years all the barbed wire he could produce."

"Ellwood borrowed $1,000 and set up a little factory. A few years later on he had paid back that loan and was worth a small matter of $15,000,000 besides."—New York Press.

An Interesting Table.

The Assessors' table printed on page one is worthy of close study. It shows where the money raised by taxation goes, gives the amount appropriated for each department and its percentage of the total tax, the valuation, the various assessments, number of houses, etc. It is a very interesting table, the compiler of which, Mr. George H. Carter, secretary of the Board of Assessors, is deserving of praise. No other town in the State, so far as known, gives its citizens such detailed and important information.

That Settee at the Station.

The lady who complained in last week's STAR because the settee close to the women's entrance at the station was being monopolized by men was fairly justified in the stand that she took. If this settee was not intended solely for the use of the women patrons of the railroad, then it should be moved to the other end of the station at the men's entrance. Ladies will not occupy the settee in its present location when it is being used by men lounging and smoking. Why not have two resting places, one for men and the other for women; then there will be no occasion for faultfinding.

A Blighting Influence.

Winchester has its first bill board liquor advertisement. It was hoped this class of advertising would not enter this town, disfiguring neighborhoods and injuring real estate. Not alone this, but these glaring and enticingly painted and worded signs cannot but make drunkards and have a bad and demoralizing effect on the future of young boys. This whiskey advertisement in its bright array of paint was placed on the high billboard on Washington street near the foot of Prince avenue.

If the Selectmen, the Board of Health or the Assessors cannot avert this evil, then the Village Improvement Association should take the matter up, and if they can do nothing, then public opinion should be made so pronounced as to compel the owner of the land to request the removal of the obnoxious sign. Whoever represents Winchester in the next Legislature should work assiduously to have a law enacted prohibiting these signs being placed within the sight of public travel. The sentiment throughout the state is strongly against them, and it is believed they can be eliminated, or their use made prohibitive.

It is supposed that other similar signs will be placed about the town, greatly to the injury of Winchester and the future of many of its young boys. Scores of children living in the vicinity of Harvard and Irving streets daily pass this sign on their way to and from school. What will be the effect in the years to come on these children? and what will be the injury to property in the neighborhood?

SELECTMEN'S MEETING.

August 5th, 1907.

Board met at 7:30 p. m.
Present Messrs. Richards, Beggs, Barnard and Winn.

Records of last meeting read and approved.

W. L. Tuck appeared before the Board asking that the grade crossing abolition be hurried as fast as possible.

Same party asked for repairs to gutter on Winthrop street near Hillside avenue; was told that the work had already been ordered.

J. Winslow Richardson, postmaster, presented a petition asking for permission to place a pole for a letter box about six feet west of the present box on Pleasant street in front of the Town Hall building, present box being broken; permission was granted, location to be approved by the Supt. of Streets.

Received petition from the New England Telephone & Telegraph Company asking for location of two poles on Clematis street. Voted to hold a hearing on said petition on Monday evening, August 12th, at 8 o'clock in the Selectmen's room.

Voted that the contract for making proper repairs to the boiler in the basement of the Town Hall building, be awarded to Albert A. Franklin, 62 High street, Boston, as per specifications dated July 29th, 1907.

Letter received from Henry C. Miller calling attention to condition of the fence on the right of way to the town yard off Pleasant street; referred to the Supt. of Streets to report.

Received and placed on file report of the Chief of Police for the month of July, together with record of lights ordered on.

Received from Chief of Police certificate saying that all dogs in the town had been licensed.

Received and placed on file, certificate from the Board of Assessors saying that the tax levy for the year, was $200,219.57.

Warrants drawn for $2270.55 and $1931.01.

OBSERVATIONS.

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

The following letter appeared in the STAR, July 7, 1905, and when I saw the canoes being pushed through the mud and weeds last Saturday I wondered if in the dim future there was a time limit within which the contemplated work on this river and field was to be completed. I believe we have a special committee struggling with this problem but no results have been reported yet. The letter reads:

THE RIVER IN THE PARKWAY.

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

One of the prettiest sights in Winchester on the evening of July 4th was the canoes with their gay occupants coming up the river from Mystic Lake and assembling along the river bank, next to Manchester Field, as a good place from which to witness the fireworks. Medford people wonder if Winchester appreciates her boating privileges. We should say not, considering the condition of the river, which is foul and dirty from weeds and sediment, which should be cleaned out. If the State Park Commissioners could have seen the natural, unpremeditated river display of July 4th, there is not much doubt but what they would do a little something to clean out the river running through their reservation, as they are doing much more expensively in Medford. If Winchester would move in the matter, Medford would help out all she could. NEW MEDFORD.

Well, if the fire department has got to taking its orders from outsiders it is about time for a shakeup. Two years ago the salary of the chief engineer was increased by the town meeting and it was supposed that he would give more time and attention to matters, but apparently there has been no change. Discipline is what has been lacking for several years; and while if the insurance companies don't care, the citizens need not as far as fire damage is concerned, but when it comes to personal injuries to the men and danger to others it should interest them. Boston's "Old Home Week" was very good entertainment for her citizens and suburbanites, but as for carrying out the idea of an O. H. W. it was a flat failure. The next interesting thing will be the accounting of the Committee in charge.

As I have been asked several times by citizens what became of my free pass bill, the following letter will answer it, with the addition that I drew an investigation order and found a member who said it was all right and he would introduce it, but he was persuaded not to and it died with prorogation.

THE FREE PASS ISSUE.

To the Editor of The Republican:—

In the free pass bill and your editorial of 24th ult., I would say that while free passes and tickets have been withdrawn from a large number of people lately, there are still too many issued, but before I get through with it there will not be any issued excepting to officials and employees for their own personal use. The first thing to do is to get an order passed by the Legislature instructing the railroad commission to investigate and report, and as soon as I find a member who will put in such an order it will go in and then we will see if the General Court dares to kill it. There were four dissenters from the report of the joint committee's "leave to withdraw," three senators, Grimes, Macleod and Williams, and Representative Abbott, all of the street railway committee. This report was made to the House, and accepted without a word. The bill was substituted by the Senate, amended and returned to the House, where it was smothered in the interests of those who "get the pork." The committee did not want evidence, and would not request it of the railroad commission, as I asked it to do. Two members of the House on the railroad committee are newspaper publishers, and one of them said to me before another member "that he believed the railroads should be allowed to issue all the free passes they wanted to." I expect to be a delegate to the next democratic convention, and I will make a fight for an anti-free pass, free ticket and free transportation plank in the platform, and let the republicans adopt the opposite. No Boston paper gives us such a report of legislative doings as we should have, and even yourself do not print as much as you did a few years ago. There is a great field for you in Boston in the morning if you pushed for it, although it might be necessary to call it your Boston edition. I thank you for interest shown on the pass bill. JOHN H. CARTER.

Winchester, May 1, 1907.

Free telephones, electric lights, gas and telegraph franks are just as much against the public interest.

Why not try some common five cent tin cups at the Lebanon street fountain without any chains and see how it will work? If they only last a week at a time it will not be very expensive. The Selectmen have finally had the space about the fountain paved and it is a great improvement in looks and comfort.

The Fells roads sadly need signs and it is surprising the Park board does not attend to it as its attention has been called to it many time and the expense would be very small.

ELECTRICITY.

The electric flatiron is reliable, safe and economical and saves coal. It requires no hot range to heat up the kitchen or laundry. It lessens discomfort and labor. The electric flatiron is available wherever the clean, safe and efficient electric light has been introduced.

The Edison Electric Illuminating Company, 33-39 Boylston street, Boston.

A canoe and boat landing is being built on the Aberjona a short distance below Walnut street which will be much appreciated and used if the water is deepened so that the river can be used, which will be done when the people have sense enough to demand it.

There is an article on Chas. S. Mellen in the Review of Reviews for August that is well worth reading.

Again there was a well played game on Manchester Field last Saturday of which no previous announcement was made. Why is there so much mystery about these games? Perhaps the players prefer a small crowd.

Collier's last issue has a full and excellent article upon the advertising of fake cures and medicines in the religious papers which hits some of them hard and hurts. It is about time the national and state governments got after these swindlers and murderers, for they are nothing else.

Does anybody know how the grade crossing abolition stands? I have not seen a word in the STAR for many weeks. Where is that sketch we were to be favored with some time ago? Have any of the property owners affected agreed to any settlement yet? I guess another fatal accident is needed to wake up the sleepy citizens.

I understand that Highland avenue macadamizing will not be done this year either. Although the Selectmen have advocated it for the past five years, there never seems to be money enough in the account, and probably the only way is to make a specific appropriation.

LOVELY MONTPELIER.

Vermont Capital Yearly Growing in Favor as a Summer Resort.

Montpelier, in Vermont, familiar to the tourist as the half way place between Lake Champlain and the White Mountains, is also widely known as a delightful summer resort. Lying in the valleys of the Winooski and Worcester rivers, the city is surrounded by wooded hills, green lawns and pleasant groves, and is in every essential a natural park. As a summer home, Montpelier offers superior attractions to city residents and yearly in increasing numbers Boston and New York people are learning that it is a most excellent place for a family outing of several weeks or the summer. Within easy riding distance is Mirror Lake, a lovely little sheet of water two and a half miles long by one mile in width, with fine farms lying back from its shores and with numerous cottages scattered along its banks. Cedar groves and pleasure grounds are conveniently near, affording excellent facilities for tent life and bivouac. There are skiffs, sailboats and a small steam yacht and launches on the lake and visitors find it a most delightful and restful retreat.

GREAT BARGAINS.

Hammond & Son Co., of Lyceum Building, Woburn, announce on page five of this issue of the STAR a markdown sale of children's, men's and youth's suits, also boys' knee pants. This is a clearing out of the goods left over from the previous sale, and the bargains are genuine. This affords an excellent opportunity to purchase clothing which should not be missed.

BAND STAND AT WONDERLAND.

WONDERLAND.

It is generally accepted that if one wishes to pass a few delightful hours on a hot afternoon or evening, that Wonderland, New England's greatest park, down by the sea at Revere Beach, offers all the essential factors and abundantly. Within the gates of this immense recreation ground can be found attractions of the best class, all at popular prices, to suit the tastes of old and young, the most courageous, as well as the timid and cautious, but all arranged and safeguarded so as to get the most possible entertainment at the least possible expenditure.

No better standard attraction can be found anywhere than are popularly established at Wonderland. Among the best of them are "Fighting the Flames," sensationally realistic and constantly interesting; the chutes, the scenic railway, the descent to Hell Gate, the incubators, the little railway, the cute Shetland ponies, the Japanese village, the alligator and crocodile farm, the fascinating "Under the Sea" exhibition, Blake's hippodrome, the airships, the Hindoo mysticism in "Battle Abbey," the third degree, the velvet coaster and many more usually concomitant with big outdoor amusement resorts, all combining to make up a list of attractions at popular prices without superior anywhere and among which one can easily find at least several from which the greatest pleasure and satisfaction can be obtained.

W. C. T. U. NOTES.

Anyone who entered the Mechanics Building Old Home Week might have seen in the center of the main hall a booth presided over by the Massachusetts Woman's Christian Temperance Union. A rest room for the weary, and a cup of tea served each day at 4 o'clock to any one who called, and a liberal supply of literature was distributed.

Our National Superintendent of Work for Soldiers and Sailors, Mrs. Ella H. Thatcher, tells us through the Union Signal of the splendid work of Georgia State W. C. T. U. in providing comfort bags "completely filled" she says, for the eight hundred and fifty men of the battleship Georgia. The ladies went on board of the ship, were greeted by Chaplain Charlton (whose mother by the way was superintendent of this department for several years) and invited to the upper deck where the crew was "lined up" and the bags formally presented by Miss Davis, Georgia State Superintendent of Soldiers and Sailors' work. Short speeches and a prayer, then three hearty cheers for Miss Davis and Mrs. Amor, state president of the W. C. T. U. of Georgia, and one more cheer for our "Grandmother" as the boys call Mrs. Thatcher.

Then the crew, white and black, cooks, stokers, engineers and all (except those in the sick bay, who were remembered) passed by us, and as fast as we could hand them out eight hundred and fifty bags were gratefully received, not a man forgetting to lift his little cap with a "Thank you."

Mrs. Thatcher adds "we have promised to follow Chaplain Charlton with our sympathy and prayers." It is her purpose to raise money for a reflectoscope for him as a substantial proof that we are his white ribbon sisters.

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

The close of the season of the opera company at the Castle Square Theatre is near, and only two weeks remain in which to hear this favorite organization. For the week of August 12th which precedes the farewell week of the company, the popular opera of "The Bohemian Girl" will be given.

Miss Clara Lane, one of the best representatives of the part of Arline now on the stage will alternate with Miss Lois Ewell, who has already made a success of the character; Mr. J. K. Murray, who has often been heard as Count Anheim, will again sing the part. The music is admirably suited to his voice, and his singing of "The Heart Bowed Down" is always one of the pleasing features of the "Bohemian Girl" when he is in the cast. Mr. Harry Davies will alternate with Mr. George Tallman in the part of Thaddeus. Mr. George Shields will sing Devilshoof, Mr. Otis B. B. Thayer will be the Florestin and Miss Louise Le Baron and Miss Hattie Belle Ladd will alternate in the part of the Queen of the Gypsies. Especial attention has been paid to scenery and costumes.

CAVE-IN BROKE COLLAR BONE

What might have been a serious accident occurred on Thursday morning at the rear of E. C. Sanderson's store when Jerry Ficociello who was digging a trench for a new water pipe was imprisoned by a cave-in of the walls. Ficociello was working for J. A. Laraway & Co., digging a trench to replace the water pipe of the building. The walls of the trench suddenly caved in without warning and the man was imprisoned in dirt and stone up to his shoulders. His cries brought several persons to the scene, who dug him out. A physician attended him and found him suffering from a broken collar bone. He was taken to the Mass. Gen. Hospital where the bone was reset.

WINCHESTER BOYS TO GO CAMPING.

The following Winchester boys leave Saturday morning on the 10 o'clock boat for Linar's Neck, Gloucester, for a three weeks' outing: Philip B. Browning, Charles W. King, Jack Ward, Frank F. Crowe, Lucius J. Hoban and S. C. E. Richardson of Beverly.

The boys are going down with the intention of roughing it and to have a good time and are also planning to see the points of interest.

These are only a few articles that can be mentioned which are very important ones in a household.

Mr. Whitney was defeated two years ago for Lieutenant Governor by less than 2000 votes. Since then the people are feeling the heavy burden of high duties so keenly that it is believed with Mr. Whitney as the Democratic candidate for Governor he would be elected.

Let every Democrat in town go to the caucus and see to it that Whitney delegates are sent to the convention. When nominated, the voters will elect him and you will have done your plain duty and will be gratified for so doing. A united party will make Mr. Whitney Governor. WHITEFIELD TUCK.

EARLY ARITHMETICS.

Struggles of the Pilgrim Children With One of the "R's."

Next to penmanship the colonial school and schoolmaster took firm stand on "ciphering." "The Bible and figures is what I want my boys to know," said the old farmer. I have examined with care a Wingate's Arithmetic which was used for over a century in the Winslow family in Massachusetts. The first edition was printed in 1620. It is certainly bewildering to a modern reader. "Pythagoras—His Table" is of course our multiplication table. Then come "The Rule of Three," "The Double Golden Rule," "The Rule of Fellowship," "The Rule of False," etc., ending with "a collection of pleasant and polite questions to exercise all the parts of vulgar arithmetic."

Wingate's Arithmetic and Hodder's Arithmetic were succeeded by Pike's Arithmetic. This had 363 rules to be committed to memory, and not an explanation was given of one of them. It is the most barren schoolbook I have ever read. These printed arithmetics were not in common use. Nearly all teachers had manuscript "sum books," from which the scholars copied page after page of "sums," too often without any explanation of the process, though there were also many and long rules, which helped the penmanship if they did not the mathematics.—Exchange.

Breaking a Deadlock.

By JANE ELLIS JOY.

Copyright, 1907, by Jane Ellis Joy.

SERVICES had not begun in the little white painted wooden church, and the congregation was gossiping in the sunshine under the budding trees and along a line of posts where the horses were hitched. "Barney Brill is sprucing up considerable. Wonder if it ain't for the benefit of his pretty new neighbor?" observed Jim Stover, shutting one eye to give importance to the observation. Jim's audience of three men looked at him unbelievably. It was well known that Barney Brill had passed through several unsuccessful love affairs. "I tell you he's gettin' ready to do it again," asserted Jim. "It ain't only that he's got a new suit of clothes, but he's taken lately to combing his hair in a scallap across his forehead. Mind what I say—Barney ain't makin' that scallap for nothin'."

Jim Stover's partiality for Miss Sally Brill, which dated back to Sally's school days, quite explained to those who heard Jim's talk this morning the young man's almost womanish interest in finding a wife for Barney Brill. As long as Barney remained a bachelor he wanted his only sister to oversee his house and would not hear of Sally leaving home to marry Jim or any one else.

The Brill property—a fine farm and homestead—had been left to Barney absolutely, with an unwritten understanding that he would provide for Sally, or, in the event of her marriage, give her a dowry, provided she married with Barney's approval.

Of course Sally might have married in spite of Barney and sued for a portion of the estate. There were sympathetic people in Jersey township who advised her to do this very thing.

But Sally Brill would listen to no counsel to quarrel with her brother. She would delay her marriage, she said, until Barney's consent should be given freely.

"I've been thinking, Sally," said Jim as the two walked home from church, lagging behind the crowd as lovers will, "that Barney's got more than half a notion of making up to Miss Woodward."

"Miss Woodward! Why, Jim, it's quite impossible!" said Sally. "I don't believe the acquaintance between them has gone further than bowing and perhaps saying 'Good day.'"

"Corinne Woodward is a mighty handsome girl," said Jim, "of course not as pretty as present company," he added, with a chuckle of gallantry.

Sally rewarded the last remark with a smile. Then her thoughts seemed to revert to her new neighbor. "I'm afraid Miss Corinne Woodward isn't the kind Barney would like," she said. "She was raised in town and was a schoolteacher, but she thinks she knows more about farming than half the country people. And to think of her living there with only her aunt and a hired man!"

They had come to the parting place. The large Brill house with its broad front porch and old style dormer windows loomed forth behind a film of green leafage. Sally's hand was on the latch of the gate. "It's awfully good of you, Jim, to wait for me so good naturedly," she went on. "Just to think, we've been engaged for nine years! Now, if you're tired waiting—and could get to like some one else—don't mind me. Speak your mind right out—and you can be free!"

Jim caught Sally's other hand. "Shucks! What you talking about, Sally? I don't want to be free that way! I want most eternal bad to get Barney off our hands, and then we'll both be free to marry!"

Jim's optimism reassured Sally, and she tripped along the path toward the house light hearted. Across the fence to the left lay the Woodward acre. For years this ground had been neglected. Tenants had left it without paying rent. Its fences had tumbled down, and the buildings were falling to pieces.

The preceding February, however, a businesslike young woman had appeared on the scene, taking possession and beginning improvements. The improvements had gone on until now the place looked very different. The property had come to Corinne Woodward through the death of an uncle, who had never taken any interest in it.

Glancing to the left, Sally Brill saw the straight, graceful figure of her neighbor on the other side of the new wire fence. Miss Woodward was looking at a freshly plowed field on the Brill side.

Daintily Sally picked her steps across a strip of the plowed field, intending to have a friendly little chat. "Ain't it a lovely day, Miss Woodward?" she began, with a beaming smile.

"Splendid! You can most bear things growing," answered Corinne Woodward. Then she asked a little abruptly, "What are you going to plant in this field?"

"I think Barney said he was going to plant rye or perhaps barley."

"Why not plant clover? Rye, you know, or barley, either, will injure my peach orchard."

"Injure your peach orchard?" repeated Sally, bewildered and a little hurt. It seemed to her that Miss Woodward was dictating in an unwarrantable way. "I don't understand what you mean," she faltered. "You will have to talk to my brother about it. That's he up on the porch."

"Well, I'll speak to him," said Corinne. She put her strong white hand on the top of the fence post and vaulted over like an athlete.

Barney must have seen the approach of the visitor. He was a little flushed and curious looking. But there were a composure and an air of preparedness about him which, with his new suit and fresh Sunday shave, went in his favor. The scallap on his hair was in evidence, too, and altogether Barney was looking his best.

"Glad to see you, Miss Woodward," he said, extending his hand. "I was just remarking to myself that your peach trees look first rate since you've had 'em cleaned out. Have a seat?"

Three or four rush chairs stood about on the porch, and Corinne appropriated one of them. "I was just telling your sister," she began, "that I hoped you wouldn't plant either rye or barley in that field on account of my peach trees, and Miss Sally kindly invited me to come up and talk to you about it."

"Miss Woodward thinks our rye will spoil her peach orchard," put in Sally tremulously.

"You don't say! How's that?" asked Barney complacently, as if he expected a joke was about to be sprung upon him.

"The matter is not very easily explained, Mr. Brill, nor perfectly understood," said the visitor, with a straight, serious glance into the open, questioning eyes. "But, all the same, it is known to scientific agriculturists that peach trees are injured by proximity to rye or barley. And, you see, you have other fields in the far end of your farm that would be just as good for rye as that one, while I can't move my peach trees."

"Not very well," said Barney. "What you say is mighty interestin'. I always supposed peach trees was tolerable contented and happy when they had good soil to grow on and got their yearly pruning and was kept clear of weeds and insects." He suppressed a sarcastic smile. "Didn't know they was so choicy about their company. Bad as some folks."

When the visitor had gone Barney broke out into a rollicking laugh that might have been heard halfway across the Woodward fields.

"Oh, Barney! What if she should hear?" protested Sally.

"Let her hear!" laughed Barney, with a note of combative determination. "All she wants is to make a fool of me."

"Oh, Barney, no! She isn't trying to make sport of you!" pleaded Sally. "She's an awful pretty girl, isn't she?" "She ain't bad lookin'. I guess she knows it too."

True to his word, Barney put in his rye. Sally prepared a little supper party as an offset; but, to her dismay, Corinne's aunt sent a polite note of regret. It was all that Jim Stover could do to comfort Sally now.

"Don't you believe it's all over yet, Sally," said Jim. "Long's Barney keeps that scallap across his forehead there's hope. Just wait. 'Pears to me the scallap is gettin' a little slicker."

Corinne Woodward kept bees. Barney Brill raised the finest cantaloupes in Jersey county. His cantaloupes were celebrated and brought fancy prices when shipped to New York and Philadelphia.

Miss Woodward planted a common variety of pumpkins close to her neighbor's melon patch.

In August the melons were ripe. They were large and looked well, but Sally fancied the favor of them was not what it had been in former years.

"Seems to me they taste like pumpkins," she said to Barney. "Maybe I think so because I've looked so often over to Miss Woodward's pumpkin patch alongside the fence."

Barney could not hide his vexation. He would not acknowledge that there was anything the matter with his melons. He told Sally she "imagined" the pumpkin flavor and scouted the idea that there was any truth in it.

But when he sent his melons to the produce men in the city, who usually were glad to get all that he could ship, complaint followed complaint. "Don't send us any more cantaloupes," wrote the commission merchant who took the largest lots. "They're not up to the standard in flavor, and our customers won't have them."

Disgusted, Barney stopped sending his cantaloupes to market. Rather than take the low rates he could get he preferred to let the melons rot on the ground. It was provoking and humiliating. One day, tramping disconsolately through the patch, he saw Corinne Woodward across the fence among her pumpkins. Their eyes met. "Why don't you send your cantaloupes to market, Mr. Brill?" the girl asked, with a mischievous candor to her voice. Her eyes were twinkling. It was the first time since the talk on the porch about the peach trees that she had said so much to him.

Barney looked half ashamed. "To tell the truth, Miss Woodward, there's somethin' the matter with them, and they won't sell," he blurted out. "Folks fancy they taste of pumpkins. It beats me! Maybe," he went on, looking the girl straight in the eyes, "bein' as you're so well read up in scientific farmin', you can tell me how it is?"

All at once Corinne Woodward looked a little guilty and regretful. She came closer to the fence. "Yes, Mr. Brill," she said, "I can tell you why it is and who is to blame for it."

"You don't say?" Barney thought himself wise in the ways of women, but he didn't understand this one. "Well, I wish I knew who was to blame. Do you mind tellin'?"

"No, I think I ought to tell you," she answered without hesitation. "I did it."

"Je-r-r-dy!" exclaimed Barney, forgetting that such expletives were not considered refined. "You don't mean to tell me that you gave the pumpkin taste to my melons! These ain't the days of witches?"

"IT WASN'T WITCHES; IT WAS BEES," SAID CORINNE.

"It wasn't witches; it was bees," said Corinne.

"Bees?" repeated Barney helplessly.

"Flitting from flower to flower, quite regardless of the fence, they carried the pollen of the pumpkin blossoms to the melon blossoms," explained Miss Woodward. "I knew that this would happen when I planted my pumpkins so close to your melons."

Barney Brill pushed back his straw hat as if he needed the cool air on his forehead to help him to think.

"So it was you?" he said accusingly. "Yes."

"And you did it because I planted rye close to your peach trees?"

"Yes, Mr. Brill; but if it was all to do over again—"

"I guess we are about even now, ain't we?"

"Oh, no. I'm the worst," regretfully. "Well, anyhow, you've hit me hard. Miss Woodward—harder than you know. I was prouder of my cantaloupes than of anything I raised."

"I am very sorry," said Corinne. "I wish I could make amends. Suppose I give you my next year's crop of peaches by way of compensation."

"Well, that's fair enough. I'll think about it," said Barney.

What Barney thought of the proposition he prudently kept to himself, being averse to having his affairs talked about in the neighborhood. Occasionally he met Miss Woodward at an evening company or a church social.

On the evening of the first Tuesday of November there was a benefit lecture in one of the churches, the subject being "The Habits of Bees." Of course Corinne Woodward was there. Barney Brill was there, too, and they met coming out of the church door.

"Mighty fine lecture—wasn't it, Miss Woodward?—and instructin'," remarked Barney.

Corinne agreed, and they proceeded homeward together. Jim Stover was walking with Sally.

"This talk tonight about bees kinder reminds me of the trick bees played with my cantaloupes this summer," said Barney to the girl by his side. It was the first reference to the matter.

"I was hoping you had forgotten that," said Corinne, with a little laugh. "I believe you promised to make it good?" said Barney, with a peep under the brim of the velvet hat.

"Yes, I know I did. You shall have my peaches next year if you want them."

"I'd like to have them on one condition," said Barney, "and that is provided I can have yourself to sweeten them."

It was shortly after the lecture on bees that Barney said to Sally apologetically: "Well, I guess you and Jim think I've deadlocked your marriage for a considerable while. Go ahead now and get married as soon as you please."

"And how about you, Barney?" inquired happy Sally. "Can you get along alone?"

"I'm not goin' to be alone," smiled Barney. "I'm goin' to marry Miss Woodward. It's about the only way to get even with her."

Man's Precious Rib.

A young lady having asked a surgeon why woman was made from the rib of man in preference to another bone, he gave her the following gallant answer: "She was not taken from the head lest she should rule over him, nor from his feet lest he should trample upon her; but she was taken from his side, that she might be his equal; from under his arm, that he might protect her; from near his heart, that he might cherish and love her."—Houston Chronicle.

WINCHESTER SAVINGS BANK,
By Eben Caldwell, Treasurer.

Perfect Womanhood

The greatest menace to woman's permanent happiness in life is the suffering that comes from some derangement of the feminine organs. Many thousands of women have realized this too late to save their health, barely in time to save their lives.

To be a successful wife, to retain the love and admiration of her husband, should be a woman's constant study.

If a woman finds that her energies are flagging, that she gets easily tired, dark shadows appear under her eyes, she has backache, headache, bearing-down sensations, nervousness, irregularities or the "blues" she should start at once to build up her system by a tonic with specific powers, such as the great woman's remedy for woman's ills, made only of roots and herbs. It cures Female Complaints, such as Dragging Sensations, Weak Back, Falling and Displacements, Inflammation and Ulceration, and all Organic Diseases, and is invaluable in the Change of Life. It dissolves and Expels Tumors at an early stage. Subdues Faintness, Nervous Prostration, Exhaustion, and strengthens and tones the Stomach. Cures Headache, General Debility, Indigestion, and invigorates the whole female system. It is an excellent remedy for derangements of the Kidneys in either sex.

THE WINCHESTER CO-OPERATIVE BANK.

ROOM 2, LYCEUM BUILDING,

Loans money to those who wish to own a home. Monthly payments practically what one would pay for rent. If you do not understand the system please call and have it explained.

During the months of June, July and August the Treasurer will be at the Bank on Wednesday evenings instead of Saturday.

It is to be understood, however, that the Bank will be open on Saturday evenings, June 29th and August 3rd and 1st, for the reception of deposits.

Within Her Rights.

A very black woman in a silver gray automobile coat was seen a few mornings ago hauling an unwilling and disreputable looking yellow dog by a leather thong.

A friendly disposed policeman asked casually, "Why don't you turn the dog loose? He don't look able to run off, and nobody'll want to steal him?"

"Ain't I a woman?" was the tart query.

There was no disputing the fact.

"Ain't dis heah a dog?"

"Patent fact."

"Ain't dis heah New York?"

Obviously true.

"Well, ain't I got a good right to walk on dese heah streets and put on all the style I choose?"

No disputing a self evident proposition.—New York Times.

THE SPEAKER'S MACE.

Origin of the Emblem of Authority Used in Congress.

At the right of the speaker's desk in the hall of the house of representatives in the capitol at Washington stands a large cylindrical pedestal made of highly polished green marble.

When the house is called to order each day, the sergeant at arms or one of his deputies places upon the pedestal the mace, which is the symbol of authority in the house. When the body adjourns he removes it and keeps it in safety until the house meets again.

This mace is of very ancient and honorable origin. Under the old Roman republic the magistrates passed on foot from one place to another administering justice, trying public offenders and imposing penalties.

Each of these magistrates was attended by a small body of men known as lictors, whose duty it was to make way for the officers of the law, preserve order, make arrests and inflict punishment on condemned citizens.

Each of these lictors carried with him a bunch of rods tied together with thongs and having an ax bound to the outside of it. The thongs were used for scourging and the ax for beheading. Sentences imposed by the magistrates were at once carried out. These bundles of rods were known as fasces. When the Romans conquered Britain the use of the fasces as a symbol was brought with them and many other Roman customs remained with the British people.

While it was no longer used for inflicting punishment, it continued to be used as a symbol by the early English magistrates, and when an officer appeared carrying the fasces his authority was immediately accepted by all. It was, in effect, his badge of office.

The English form of the fasces was slightly changed in that the ax was placed inside of the bundle of rods, with the blade protruding from the top.

The great councils of the early Saxons gradually developed into one general body, which in the fourteenth century became known as the house of commons. In all these earlier councils the use of the fasces was continued, but it then came to be known as the mace, which has remained as the emblem of legislative authority in that body down to the present day.

The house of representatives of the United States was modeled closely after the house of commons by the framers of our constitution, and the usage of the mace was borrowed from the English custom.

The first mace adopted by the house was destroyed by fire when the British burned the capitol in 1814. From 1814 until 1842 a mace of painted wood did service, but in the latter year the present mace was made after the model of the original one—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Water Lily.

Almost everybody has observed the strange characteristic of the water lily bud opening its petals at sunrise and closing them again at sunset. It was for this reason mainly that the ancients held the water lily sacred to the sun. Pliny says: "It is reported that in the Euphrates the flower of the lotus plunges into the water at night, remaining there till morning and to such a depth that it cannot be reached with the hand. After midnight it begins gradually to rise, and as the sun rises above the horizon the flower also rises above the water, expands and raises itself some distance above the element in which it grows." It was also through this peculiarity that Hancarville proved that the Egyptians considered the lily an emblem of the world as it rose from the waters of the deep.

Scot Free.

The expression "scot free," which is in use every day, harks back to the times of Scottish romance and tragedy so luminously described by Sir Walter Scott in "The Antiquary" and "Rob Roy." In these stirring tales we are told of one form of Scottish trials given certain offenders of justice. He who had broken the law was divested of all of his clothing and placed at a certain distance from archers who had bows and arrows ready, waiting the command, "Fire." When the command was given, the man under indictment would begin running and the archers firing, and if in running this gaudy none of the arrows hit him he was allowed to go scot free.—Exchange.

A Real Genius.

From the composers of all time Beethoven stands out by himself like some gigantic tree towering up above the rest of the forest. He was the greatest genius of all, not for any one thing that he did, but because he was equally great in every style of music that he essayed. The first test of real genius is the ability to excel in all directions, and for this reason I have always looked upon Beethoven, Shakespeare and Turner as the three greatest geniuses who have ever existed.—Emil Sauer in Strand Magazine.

Ad He Could Think Of.

While driving along a country road a man saw the roof of a farmer's house ablaze. He gesticulated and called to the farmer's wife, who was calmly standing in the doorway:

"Hey, your house is afire!"

"What?" she bawled out.

"I say, your house is afire!"

"What did y' say? I'm a little deaf!"

"Your house is afire!" again yelled the man at the top of his lungs.

"Oh, is that all?" calmly replied the woman.

"It's all I can think of just now," responded the man in a rather weak voice as he drove on.—Exchange.

AN EXPERT'S ANSWER

Why Cities Cannot Get Good Men to Run Their Plants.

The Superintendent of a Municipally Owned Electric Light Works Tells How He Was Overruled by "The Board" on Many Points—M. O. "Practically Wrong, and Results Prove It."

The question is often asked by defenders of municipal ownership why cities cannot secure and retain to operate their plants as good men as private concerns have in their employ. An answer is suggested by the following letter from the superintendent of a municipal plant, which was printed in a recent issue of the Engineer:

"Some time ago I bumped into what I call 'peanut legislation.' I took charge of a lighting and pumping plant owned by a city. The plant consisted of two very good water tube boilers, 125 horsepower each; a 14 by 18 inch semi-Corliss engine, a 100 kilowatt generator, two pumps 8 and 12 by 8 1/2 inches with a twelve inch stroke, a 6 and 1 by 6 inch feed pump, a 600 gallon steam fire engine and a board of public works. I was supposed to have charge of the entire plant, but not of the board, but it was necessary to take charge of it at first.

"The plant was less than a year old and after the fashion of municipal plants had already obtained a good start on the road to rack and ruin. The engine pounded and had in less than a year's time lubed ten barrels of oil, in spite of an oil filter's efforts. Probably the waste oil made fires a bit hotter. The boilers were scandalously dirty both inside and outside, and the grate surface was one-third larger than was necessary to carry the peak load. An open feed water heater did business to the tune of 100 degrees Fahrenheit. The pumps had been denied proper lubrication and loudly proclaimed the fact. Fully one-fifth of the electric service meters were out of business and customers paying a minimum rate as a result. Water services were not metered at all, and customers used water as they pleased, at such times as they found most convenient, regardless of sprinkling hours, and in some cases paid what they pleased or not at all.

"After these things had been several and collectively attended to the coal heating was cut squarely in two, the oil pouring divided by 19 and the receipts almost doubled. In fact, a plant which had been losing money on a winter load was more than running even in April. The next year the rate per kilowatt hour was cut from 10 cents to 8 1/2 cents, with the character of the service much improved. Mark me not, I pray you, for conceit, but rather as a narrator of plain, unvarnished truth. During all this time the board was 'skiddo' 23. What happened just about that time? Very little, I assure you.

"I was advised that hereafter all orders for supplies, repairs, etc., must pass through the board and be duly acted upon and forwarded to the city clerk or executed. I needed a half inch hose nipple very badly that day, and I couldn't get it for a week. Then along comes a bunch of 'No Loading' signs, big and red enough to make the place look like a pesthouse. Wiring which was condemned by the inspector was approved by the board after 'due deliberation.'

"Then the men at the plant were advised that the board expected each of them to work a twelve hour shift and after or before that do such things as trim lamps, repair lines, connect services, read meters, etc. Other little bits of advice too numerous to mention came in regularly.

"We managed to keep up our work after a fashion, but things are steadily getting worse. Explain things to them? Just like butting your head against a stone wall. Grocers and millers and doctors and lawyers make good consulting engineers, but when a saving of $2 can be made by spending $1 they can't find the $1. In the meantime my salary had been raised by the appalling sum of $5 per month. Still every little bit helps.

"Municipal ownership, like the hows and whys in textbooks, is theoretically the correct thing, but in the big majority of cases is practically wrong, and results prove it. I'm not looking for another position, but will take a good job if I can get it. T. B. G."

Illogical Municipal Ownership Talk.

Loose thinking and careless writing are responsible for a lot of the trouble that we mortals bring upon ourselves. Take, for instance, the following editorial paragraph, which appeared in the Buffalo Times:

"The doctrine of municipal ownership rests upon the broad principle of republican self government. To say that a community is incompetent to own and operate the means of transportation of its citizens, for instance, is about as sensible as to assert that a nation is unfit to fight its own battles or that it should farm out its armies and navies to private individuals or trusts to wage war with."

If for "transportation" in the above paragraph we substitute "housing, clothing and feeding," it would be quite as logical. Self government has nothing to do with the providing by state or city of the necessities or luxuries of life.

M. O. Official Charged With Graft.

On the confession of his accomplice, William Wilcox, former superintendent of the municipal electric light plant of Columbus, O., has been arrested on a charge of putting through seven bogus vouchers which are said to have netted the conspirators $4,000.

Don't Neglect It

It is a serious mistake to neglect a weak heart. It is such a short step to chronic heart disease. When you notice irregularity of action, occasional short breath, palpitation, fluttering, pain in chest or difficulty in lying on left side, your heart needs help—a strengthening tonic. There is no better remedy than Dr. Miles' Heart Cure. Its strengthening influence is felt almost at once.

"I have used 10 bottles of Dr. Miles' Heart Cure and can truthfully say it has done me more good than anything I have ever used, and I have tried nearly everything that I know of. The doctor who attended me asked me what I was taking and I told him Dr. Miles' Heart Cure, he said it was not going to do me any good, but it did. I have not taken any for a year now, and while there is occasionally a slight symptom of the old trouble, it is not enough for me to continue the use of the medicine. If I should get worse I would know what to do. Take Dr. Miles' Heart Cure as I did before. I consider myself practically cured of my heart trouble. S. H. DUNNAN, Livingston, Texas.

Dr. Miles' Heart Cure is sold by your druggist, who will guarantee that the first bottle will benefit. If it fails he will refund your money. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

VERMONT IN . . . SUMMER TIME

Central Vermont Railway Has Issued Handsome Book Telling About It.

Always early in the field with its warm weather literature, the passenger department of the Central Vermont Railway has just issued its 1907 edition of "Summer Homes," which is sent for 6c stamp on application to T. H. HANLEY, N. E. P. O., 360 Washington St., Boston. The book describes the beautiful scenes among the green hills of Vermont and around the shores of Lake Champlain, is handsomely illustrated and includes lists of hotels and of family homes which are recommended to pleasure and health seekers, excursion fares, maps, and such concise information as will enable the "don't know" tourist to arrive at a decision.

Largest Crater on the Earth.

The volcano Aso-san, in southern Japan, on the island of Kinshu, possesses the largest crater known on the earth. It is about fourteen miles across in one direction, by ten or eleven in the other, and is surrounded by walls of an average height of 200 feet. Although the volcano is still active, its eruptions consist only of ashes and dust. Indeed, a range of volcanic mountains, evidently of subsequent formation, extends directly across the old crater. In these particulars Aso-san resembles some of the craters of the moon, where a long history of successive and gradually emboldened outbreaks of volcanic force is graphically represented.

Mr. Edward B. Horne of Prospect street, has been granted a license to run his Maxwell-Briscoe runabout.

At a recent census of old people in Stoughton and Winchester, rising 80 years, were Mrs. Abby Robinson and Mrs. Eliza Pierce of the former town. Mrs. Pierce being 97 years of age. In that town were found 53 over 80 years of age. Mrs. Robinson was for many years a resident of Woburn, her home being on Warren avenue. In Winchester there were found 34 over 80 years. Mrs. Joanna Buckley, the oldest at 92 years.—(Lynn Item).

J. F. Kelley, the contractor of Woburn, began operations on the ditch for water on High street, in front of Mr. O. C. Sanborn's new residence this week. The trench will be cut through a ledge and will be 200 feet long and 13 feet deep. It will be used for the water main to the large tank which supplies the house with proper water pressure. The first part of the ditch was finished by Mr. Kelley last year and was 700 feet long, and like the present one, every foot of it was blown from a solid ledge.

Automobilists are finding out that they must protect themselves from the reckless driving of those of their fraternity who have no regard for others' lives or property and the Safe Roads Automobile Association has been doing good work in helping the courts bring these offenders to justice. Nearly 100 accidents last month is not a creditable showing for the state, and in almost every instance these are the result of sheer carelessness they should be easily prevented. The efforts of the Safe Roads Association will be directed against the careless speeder, and substantial rewards are offered for the conviction of violators of state or local laws.

WOODS MORTGAGES

MOTH ASSESSMENTS.

Cause of Considerable Dissatisfaction to Many People.

There is probably no tax assessed by the town that causes so much feeling as that for cleaning trees by the moth department. When a citizen is called upon to settle his real estate tax he knows what he is called upon to pay for. The same regarding sewer, sidewalk or water, but when it comes to moth work he does not know whether he is paying for one hour or six hours of actual work. He gets his bill, and no matter whether it is large or small, he is not entirely satisfied. Again people cannot understand why they are called upon to pay the town for going over their trees after they have had them cleaned by private tree experts. Others whose places have been left for the town men to clean, complain of the charges, and honestly believe that they are excessive. Many protests have been made and abatements asked for but so far as known every request has been turned down, thus leaving behind a feeling of paying for something for which no value was received. The men employed by the Tree Warden are no doubt correct in the time turned in by them for work on private property, and while he has no absolute knowledge of the length of time his men are employed on any estate, he attending to his business in Boston throughout the day, yet he takes their word for it and makes his charges accordingly; there appears to be no appeal. This is absolutely wrong, and causes a feeling of dissatisfaction that prevails to a large extent among those people whose trees have been cleaned, and who have been denied any satisfaction.

There is a remedy for this, and that is when the tree men enter upon an estate, the man in charge of the squad should notify some person in the house of that fact so that they may be enabled to see for themselves just how long the men are at work. This it is believed would remove the principal cause for the dissatisfaction now prevailing. Furthermore the owners of estates or their agents, if they can be easily found, have a right to know this and should demand it of the Tree Warden. As it is now the men start in cleaning the trees without notifying anybody. This is hardly fair to those persons who pay the bills, they should know for themselves just what they are paying for same, as in all other lines of work.

This moth work has now become so important that it calls for the employment of a large number of men and the expenditure of a big sum of money yearly, and many citizens now believe that the time has now arrived when the Tree Warden should be required to give his entire time, and that it should not be supplementary to his regular private business. If this is done it is believed the work could be more satisfactorily performed than now and more accomplished where he is constantly with and in touch with what his men are doing. At the present time the work is left in the hands of a superintendent, and as a consequence there is dissatisfaction among a number of citizens and this feeling is made plain at times at town meetings.

HOUSE ENTERED.

When the family of Edward S. Kennerson of 14 Brooks street arrived home from their outing last Thursday night they found that their house had been entered during their absence and thoroughly ransacked, but so far as could be ascertained, nothing of value had been taken, the silverware and valuables having been stored for safe keeping before they went away.

Entrance to the house was gained by forcing the front window with a jimmy. Mr. Kennerson visited the house Tuesday and found everything all right. The break was probably made Wednesday or Thursday night.

FOLLOWED ROUTE OF PAUL REVERE.

Monday the members of the Massachusetts Press Association had a most pleasant and instructive outing in going over the route of Paul Revere's historical ride to Lexington. The party numbering seventy took special cars of the Boston Elevated in front of the United States Hotel and proceeded to Arlington Heights where one of the large and commodious cars of the Lexington & Boston street railroad was then taken. Editor Parker of the Arlington Advocate acted as guide and lecturer for the party and on Lexington Common graphically retold the exciting incidents of the fight on April 19, 1775. The museum in the Hancock house was visited and the many articles of historical interest inspected, after which the car was taken for Concord where two hours were pleasantly passed at dinner and in visiting the old cemetery, the bridge where the Concord fight took place and other points of interest. On return trip a stop was made at pretty Lexington Park, where the menagerie was visited, the open air theatre looked upon and a few brief minutes enjoyed in watching the excellent vaudeville entertainment.

On invitation of Mr. A. G. Benson, proprietor of the well managed restaurant, the party was regaled with ice cream, cake, etc., on the broad veranda in the shade of the towering pines, for which this park is famous. The ladies' orchestra also complimented the visitors with selections during the lunch. Lexington Park is a most delightful place to spend a day. There is a ladies' orchestra that gives concerts during the afternoon and evening, a well stocked menagerie of much interest to both old and young, flying horses, toboggan slide, swings, etc., also a building for rest and recreation, while the grounds are handsomely laid out. The performances at the theatre afternoon and evening are first class, and altogether a very pleasant day is in store for all who go to this place. The ride from Winchester to Lexington is most restful and the time on the journey is just about right.

From Lexington Park the editors went in their special trolley to Norumbega Park, Auburndale, where a delightful evening was spent viewing the handsome electrical illuminations and in a visit to the open air theatre.

This entire trip is one that can be taken with much pleasure and profit and it will be found a most enjoyable outing. For description of interesting trolley trips send for publications issued by the Lexington & Boston Street Railway Co., Newtonville, Mass.

BAD RUNAWAY.

Fire Horses Dash Through Centre.

A serious runaway, causing great excitement and many narrow escapes, occurred in the centre of the town yesterday afternoon, when two of the fire horses attached to a watering cart became unmanageable through the unhooking of a rein, and dashed through the numerous vehicles in the square and down Thompson street, being finally stopped on the playground. The driver, Jack Flaherty, after realizing that he had no control over the animals, jumped from the wagon. In doing so his legs became entangled in the reins and he was dragged a distance of some thirty feet. Louis Smith caught one of the animals by the head, but was unable to hold the team and was also dragged with it until forced to let go, later catching it again on the playground, when he succeeded in stopping the horses.

The trouble was caused by one of the horses throwing his head over the neck of his mate and causing the hook on one of the reins to become unfastened. Driver Flaherty stuck to his seat and succeeded in turning the team down Thompson street, but when the horses headed directly for a telegraph pole in front of Dr. McCarthy's office, he jumped. In doing so his feet became entangled in the reins and he was dragged with the team. Fortunately he escaped with only a dislocated thumb and numerous bad body bruises and burns caused by being dragged over the street. The many people who witnessed the accident thought that he had been killed.

Louis Smith performed a remarkable nifty stunt when he caught one of the horses by the head, but the powerful animal was too strong for him and dragged him along, at times lifting him clear of the ground. He pluckily persisted however, and finally stopped the team after it had dashed across the sidewalk and into the shrubbery on the playground.

The cart was not hurt beyond the wheels being somewhat dished. That it was filled with water helped to retard the runaway horses.

SIGN REMOVED.

The liquor sign on the billboard on Washington street at the foot of Prince Avenue was removed yesterday.

THOMAS S. HOYT.

Mr. Thomas S. Hoyt passed away Tuesday afternoon at his home on Forest street, Highlands, after an illness extending over nearly six months. The cause of his death was cancer of the stomach, and he had been confined to his bed the past four months. Mr. Hoyt was in his 67th year and was born in the west end of Boston, his father being David K. Hoyt and his mother Sarah Conant. In his early manhood he took up his residence in Chelsea where he made his home for over 25 years, being long engaged in the real estate business there. Previous to taking up this business he had a dry goods store on Court street, Boston, and also was connected with the wholesale dry goods firm of E. S. Messenger & Co. on Summer street. At one time he was also a selling agent for Senator Proctor of Vermont, the well-known dealer in marble, and travelled all over the New England states. He came to Winchester fourteen years ago residing in a house erected by him on Forest street and in which he died.

Shortly after coming here he opened a grocery store on Main street, but not meeting with success, he soon gave it up. He was the owner of an extensive tract of land in Cuba and acquiring an option on another large tract, organized a company for the purpose of raising fruit and vegetables. Lack of capital prevented the proper development of the land, and beyond improving it and setting out many orange trees, nothing further was accomplished.

Mr. Hoyt was one of the charter members of Waterfield Lodge of Odd Fellows, and for 25 years was connected with the order in Chelsea. In 1863 he married Mary Jane Hackett, they having four children, all of whom passed away in early life. His wife survives him, also a step-daughter, Mrs. Mary L. Weatherbee.

Funeral services were held this afternoon at 1:30 o'clock, Rev. D. A. Newton officiating, after which the remains were taken to Woodlawn cemetery, Chelsea.

MRS. SAMUEL J. ELDER.

Mrs. Samuel J. Elder passed away at her home on Myopia Hall early Tuesday morning, and the announcement of her death was received with expressions of sorrow by hosts of friends. Mrs. Elder had not enjoyed good health for many years, although able to be out daily until within a recent period. She was a remarkably brilliant and most affable and lovable woman, respected for her many good qualities of mind and heart, and in her death her husband, Samuel J. Elder, Esq., has the sympathy of the entire town.

Mrs. Elder was the daughter of Cornelius W. and Margaret (Wyckoff) Thomas, and was born Nov. 28, 1853, in New York City. At the breaking out of the Civil war her father was a leading New York merchant, with large interests in the southwest, which suffered heavily by the war. Her girlhood home was at Hastings-upon-Hudson, where Admiral Farragut was the nearest neighbor of the family.

Mrs. Elder graduated at Vassar in 1873 and was married to Samuel J. Elder in 1876. Their home for the past 30 years has been in Winchester. Years of invalidism and absence from home at various baths did not extinguish the brightness of her enjoyment of home and friends. For many years she was a frequent contributor of children's verse and prose to Little Folks, the Youth's Companion, the Congregationalist and other periodicals.

A husband and four children survive her, Margaret Munro, Frances Adele, Ruth Dunbar and Samuel James, Jr., also a sister, Mrs. Irving T. Boyd, Essex Falls, N. J.

Funeral services were held Thursday, the Rev. Mr. Bushnell officiating. The interment was in Wildwood.

WELL KNOWN

TEACHER MARRIED.

In the marriage of Miss Josephine Elizabeth Connors of Swanton street to William J. Thompson of Somerville on Monday evening, Winchester loses the services of one of its most efficient school teachers. Miss Connors was of the Chapin school staff and very popular, having been at the school in the capacity of teacher for the past 12 years.

The wedding was performed by Fr. Walter Roach of St. Mary's church at 7:30. The bride was gowned in white point d'esprit, trimmed with lace and carried bride roses. Miss Catherine Hayes of Fitchburg was maid of honor and wore white net over white silk and carried roses. Mr. William Douner of Somerville was the best man. The bride wore a very handsome diamond brooch the gift of the groom.

Following the ceremony the couple left on a wedding journey. They will reside in Somerville.

Dr. Olmstead has moved into the apartment at 31 Church street.

MYSTIC VALLEY TROLLEY CLUB

Visits Gloucester and Take a Trip Around Cape Ann.

The last trip of the season was on August 15. Leaving Winchester Centre at 8:20 on car No. 1190 of B. & N., the trip to Sullivan Square was uneventful. The Atlantic avenue circuit train landed the party at State street about half past nine. The steamer Cape Ann was waiting at the foot of the stairs, the open sesame being fifty cents transformed into a ticket reading "Boston to Gloucester." This is the passenger boat of the Boston & Gloucester Steamship Co., one of the enterprises of Henry M. Whitney. The boat started at 10 with a fairly good freight. One of the party known as "Grandpa," thought it advisable to make sure of the health and comfort of those members present and secured a large stateroom in which headquarters were opened. The roll was called and those present were found to be George S. Littlefield, George W. Payne, George F. Parker, Henry C. Miller, Theodore P. Wilson, Albert F. Blaisdell and F. E. H. Heath.

After the president had assumed the chair, much discussion of the scenery was in order while the harbor islands, Nahant, Swampscott, Marblehead, Manchester and Magnolia were passed.

When Gloucester was sighted with its decorations in honor of Old Home Day, the club went into executive session on the subjects of nominating a candidate for the next General Court and the abolition of the grade crossing. The first subject was satisfactorily settled by the nomination of Dr. Blaisdell on the second ballot, the same being made unanimous without objection. The second subject was still under consideration when the wharf was reached and the question of land damage seemed to be the rock on which all ideas split, so that pending report from Ex-Selectman Woods, who is said to be on his vacation, the matter was laid under the table, on arrival at the Surfside Hotel about 12:45. Dinner was carefully considered and proved acceptable with the aid of a prescription which the Doctor called upon the head waiter to fill. During the meal the loss of the hirsute covering of the eldest member caused considerable discussion and for a time the president feared a mutiny in the ranks.

At 2 o'clock the start was made for a trip around the Cape. Gloucester was certainly having a good time. The streets were full of people. Everybody seemed in a hurry to get out to the rocks across the bay toward West Gloucester. Numerous trolley cars passed, loaded to overflowing. Barges and automobiles flashed by and a majority on foot trudged along. In the midst of it came along the car for Lanesville and the club found seats and about 2:30 the car turned away from the throng and passed along by the railroad station through Riverdale, Annisquam, Bay View, Pigeon Hill, Lanesville, Pigeon Cove, Rockport, making the circuit by the Granite Shore House, formerly kept by our late townsman, William Adams, and arriving in Gloucester at 4 o'clock.

This town of over an hour and half around Cape Ann is one of the trips that everyone should take. Here one gets a view of rocks, hills, dunes, ocean, river, bays, creeks, woods, pastures and cultivated fields, while there are no high mountains, almost everything else which is admirable in nature, can be seen.

Arriving in Gloucester a short wait was had while out of the throng of cars bound for Rocky Neck and bringing back some of the pilgrims of the day from the rocks, at last a Beverly and Essex car was selected and the party again embarked, starting on the homeward trip at 4:12.

The route was through West Gloucester, South Essex, Essex, Essex Falls, Ipswich Junction, Centerville, Montserrat and into Beverly which was reached at ten minutes of six. Another short wait and Peabody car was taken for Salem. This car seated about 40 and had about 80 passengers hanging on, covering all available space except the roof. Salem was reached at 6:20 and at 6:30, car for Malden was boarded. This run was by South Salem, past the Normal School, Upper Swampscott, through Central Square in Lynn, past West Lynn, East Saugus, Cliftondale, Franklin Park, Linden, Maplewood, Faulkner into Malden Square. It had now grown quite dark and in the distance the lights of Wonderland were seen, sometimes apparently ahead of the car and again falling behind only to catch up and get in front again. The Editor became much excited at last over this wonderful performance and searched his pockets to find his pass, good for himself and friends, being fully convinced that we should shortly arrive at Wonderland. But the pass was in his other coat and the car kept on and didn't get there but landed in Malden according to schedule.

In Malden Square a wait had to be kept for the West Medford car, but it came at last and brought us to Winthrop Square, where the North Woburn car shortly arrived and brought the party home.

The new members of the club found themselves unhesitatingly submitting to the only rule which governs, which is to accept all delays with good cheer and to follow where the Judge leads without a murmur.

A very interesting event of this trip was the original masonic poem repeated by the first officer of the Bay State to the members in the privacy of the executive session. He was voted a good fellow and made an honorary member of the club. "What do you think of that?"

HOPEDALE'S ACTIVE WORKERS.

The Drapers Have Figured Prominently on All Great Public Questions.

After Several Defeats Republican Party Reorganized under Leadership of Lieut.-Gov. Draper

Milford Journal Series

The standard of our government is determined in a great measure by the character of the representatives who administer its affairs. The character and standing of public officials oftentimes reflect the character of the people who select them. This view of political ethics is oftentimes overlooked. Lack of interest and seeming neglect of duty on the part of citizens is harmful to state and nation as well as the community in which they live. The best results in municipal governments always obtain when every citizen shares the responsibilities of government. This is particularly notable in town government. The town of Hopedale is a conspicuous illustration of an ideal condition where public spirit is not confined to a particular set of individuals.

The town has been particularly fortunate in the close relationship that has always existed between the town's people. It was so in the days of George Draper, and the good influence that he exerted in the earlier history of the town was not confined merely to the members of his immediate family. No citizen has more religiously adhered to the precepts that have had a predominating influence in the growth of the town than Lieutenant Governor Draper.

Eben S. Draper in his earlier manhood was taught that duty required something more than meeting the demand of self interest and personal convenience. He was taught that every citizen was indebted to his country and his state as well as to the community of which he was a part. With such a training in early life no business has been regarded so important as to prevent his attendance at the caucuses of the political party with which he has always been affiliated, or the town meeting which is not the least in importance in its demands upon citizenship. At the age of twenty-one he became a member of the republican town committee in Milford of which the village of Hopedale was a part. Here he served for a series of years, rendering important service to his party.

In 1886, when Hopedale became a town, he continued the same service on the republican town committee with unabated interest in his party's welfare. Mr. Draper also served upon the Congressional Committee of the Brookline district, and with Ex-Congressman Lewis D. Apsley of Hudson practically had charge of the memorable campaign of 1888 in which the Honorable John W. Candler was elected to the Fifty First Congress.

From the beginning Mr. Draper has always taken a most active part in every hard fought campaign of his party. In the year 1892 he became active in trying to bring about a change of methods in conducting campaigns by the Republican State Committee.

The democratic party for the two previous years had been successful in electing William E. Russell governor. Mr. Draper was not a member of the Republican State Committee but had been active in bringing about the change of method that he believed was necessary to make success of his party possible. At that time Joseph H. Wood of Milford was the member of the Republican State Committee from his district, and was actively working with Mr. Draper to bring about the desired reorganization. In the midst of the work Mr. Wood was taken violently ill with pneumonia and died. Soon after his death Mr. Draper succeeded him as a member of the State Committee, and carried on his work of reorganization. He was urged to be a candidate for the Chairmanship of the Committee, and finally assented, and after a hard, but friendly contest was elected by a close vote. Thus Hopedale was honored with having the leader of the dominant party in the state selected from among her citizens.

EDIBLE COFFINS.

Pastry Making in the Early Stages of English Cookery.

At a very early period the orientals were familiar with a kind of pastry, a mixture of flour, oil and honey, and for centuries pastry making went no further, even among the nations in the south of Europe. But in the beginning of the middle ages a change began to take place in the method of mixing the ingredients, and some other substances were brought into use. Butter, eggs and salt found their way into pastry making, and the result was a manifest improvement. Paste next came to be used as an inclosure for meat, seasoned with spices, etc. Afterward it went a step further, the next use being for the inclosure of creams, fruit, preserves, etc., and later still it began to take the many fanciful shapes in which it has since been commonly found. In the early stages of English cookery the pastry cases were called coffins or "coffins" and were made in various sizes from "great coffins with low ladders" for the "tortes of flosche" to the "smallest coffins" for "tartolettes" of "flosche or flosche," mixed with "stuf of boiled figs ground and good powder and spices."

Petruchio in "The Taming of the Shrew," it may here be noted, calls a little cup "a custard coffin." These coffins correspond with the "vol-au-vent" of today.—London Saturday Review.

THE LOST SOVEREIGN.

A Trick That Is Sometimes Played on the London Cabbies.

Have you ever tried to play on a cabman that old joke of the "lost sovereign?" It's very funny. A friend tried it last summer in London and succeeded too. He took a "growler" after midnight at Piccadilly Circus to go to his lodgings at Baywater. Remembering the staleness of the "lost sovereign" dodge, he thought it would hardly "go down" with a bright, cunning cabbie, but resolved to try for the fun of it.

Just as he came in front of a public house a few doors from his home the "cab" struck his head out of the cab window and ordered the driver to halt. "I say, cabbie, I've dropped a 'sovereign.' It must be on the bottom of the cab. Just pull up at that 'pub' till I run in and get a match, so that I can find the coin."

"All right, sir," said the cabbie and pulled up opposite the door of the tavern. The fare alighted and had taken scarcely three steps in the direction of the "pub" when, lo, Mr. Cabbie whipped up his horse and flew away into the darkness of the night, carrying with him, as he supposed, that sovereign coin snugly concealed in the cushions of the cab.—London Tit-Bits.

Sharp Boy.

"Now," asked a music teacher, "what is the note above F?" "F sharp," "Yes, and the note below F?" "F blunt!"

Live, laugh and love. There'll come a time when you can't.—Success.

THE BEAUTIFUL FELS.

Prospects of an electric line into the wooded depths of the Middlesex Fells are brightening. This is shown by the filing of a petition by the West End street railway with the railroad commissioners for the approval of a double-track location on Mystic Avenue, from the dividing line between Boston and Somerville. As a portion of the layout is on metropolitan park lands it was necessary to obtain the approval of the park commission before coming to the railroad board. The building of a street railway into the Fells has been agitated for a number of years by those who believe its beautiful acres should be known by the poorest and the humblest. Since its establishment the park has been practically unknown except to those who own private turnouts, automobiles or bicycles, and yet it is largely the property of the common people. There is no doubt whatever of the approval of the petition. The early history of this movement to invade the Fells by trolley cars is fraught with much that is of interest. The first step taken in reply to the demand for an electric line was the filing of a petition for a location by the West End, which was followed by similar action by the Boston & Northern, the latter to enter the park from the north and the former from the south and to connect in the centre. Hearings were given before the metropolitan park commission and finally the petition of each company was granted, the understanding being it was the work of construction was not begun at a certain date the locations would become void. The conditions imposed were not to the liking of the Boston & Northern and it permitted a forfeiture of its rights. Under the plea that a through line was necessary the West End also failed to take action within the allotted time. It was generally believed at the time that neither road desired to build, as there was doubt of getting anything back on the investment. However new hope was evidenced when the Boston & Northern renewed its application for a location which was followed by a similar petition from the West End. These were ultimately granted by the commission, with such changes in the general layout as made the second granting acceptable to both railway companies. With these lines in operation the very heart of the park may be reached by all classes.

There is one point in connection with the progress of the "campaigning" to date which is rather interesting. It pertains to the republican lieutenant governor of the state, and the reaction in the sentiment which was stirred up against him during the campaigns of the past two years. It may be due to the fact that Eben Draper is today working through representatives in different parts of the state to build up his own candidacy, but there is no denying the fact that he is stronger in every section of Massachusetts at the present time than he ever has been since he became a candidate for public office. The general public has come to know the man better during the past few months than ever before; the "horrible conditions existing in Hopedale" have been shown to be nothing more than myths created in the fertile minds of political marauders whose only ambition appears to be to extinguish every spark of confidence which the people have in the men who have been so prominent in the business and official life of the state, in order that they themselves might gain some notoriety and prestige.—[Practical Politics.]

The Labor Bureau report on strikes and lockouts shows 222 in Massachusetts last year—a few more than the average for the past five years. More than one-half of the strikes failed. They involved a loss of wages for 420,753 days' labor—probably nearly a million dollars, to say nothing of other heavy losses. One of the peculiar features of the strikes was that the action of the strikers threw out of employment thousands who had no grievance.

DRAPER'S STRENGTH INCREASING.

There is one point in connection with the progress of the "campaigning" to date which is rather interesting. It pertains to the republican lieutenant governor of the state, and the reaction in the sentiment which was stirred up against him during the campaigns of the past two years. It may be due to the fact that Eben Draper is today working through representatives in different parts of the state to build up his own candidacy, but there is no denying the fact that he is stronger in every section of Massachusetts at the present time than he ever has been since he became a candidate for public office. The general public has come to know the man better during the past few months than ever before; the "horrible conditions existing in Hopedale" have been shown to be nothing more than myths created in the fertile minds of political marauders whose only ambition appears to be to extinguish every spark of confidence which the people have in the men who have been so prominent in the business and official life of the state, in order that they themselves might gain some notoriety and prestige.—[Practical Politics.]

The fact that during the week of August 12, sixteen organizations, large and small, representing an issue of 19,800 tickets, were excursionists to Wonderland, speaks volumes for the attractions of this fairyland by the sea Revere Beach, this greatest of New England's recreation parks. There is no uncertainty about the character of the shows or the popularity of the prices asked for these highest class attractions.

"Fighting the Flames" seems to be the favorite of the standard attractions. Among the other strong "shows" are the Alligator farm, the chutes, the scenic railway, the velvet coaster, Hell Gate, the hippodrome, the pony driving park, the little railway, the Rocky Mountain Hold-Up and Mexican Bull Fight, the Japanese village, Love's Journey, "Under the Sea," prince Tiny Mite, the "Mysterious Miss Jones" and the third degree.

One of the big features of Wonderland is the free circus, the acts of which are changed every week. They are always the best possible to obtain, such, for instance, the past week, as the Jessie Keller troupe, refined cyclists; Henry and Herbert Daily, head balancers; De Velde and Zeida, equilibrists; Lurvey's Lynn cadet Band; Helen Doherty, the phenomenal vocalist, who sings with the band, and the picturesque board walk parades.

MUNICIPAL UNACY.

By JOHN LENDRICK BANGS.

Has anybody yet thought of the desirability of municipal ownership of the barber shops? If not it is respectfully suggested that the matter be looked into, for under private control it is undeniable that many abuses have grown up. No misplaced respect for alleged private rights should be permitted to take the matter out of the mouths of the public.

The Brooklyn Eagle says that "you simply can't marry business and politics." Ah, but you can. Misalliances are always possible. The real trouble will come when you try to divorce them, even for cause.

Only a fool would suggest managing gas companies, street car companies and so on regardless of cost.—Hearst's New York Evening Journal.

Now, William, stop calling yourself names. Leave that to your enemies.

One thing is very certain. If capitalists refuse to take the municipal bonds that are being offered on the markets, it won't take more than fifteen minutes for an alert common council to pass an ordinance requiring them to take them. Better be warned in time, ye money sharks. When that ordinance is passed, who knows but that one of its provisions will set the price of a hundred dollar bond at $125?

Too much credit has ruined many a man. Wherefore the city that cannot sell its mortgages for over $80 is just that much further from ruin as $80 is from par. Q. E. D.

There seems to be a general suspicion in New York city that the more flourishing of its pool rooms and other gambling institutions are controlled by a committee of municipal officials acting ex officio. This is one of the few varieties of municipal control which can be said to realize enormous profits.

Northfield, Vt., before starting in upon municipal ownership owed $2082. At the close of the experiment it owed $47,319, a nice little profit of $45,237.

Opera Note of the Future.—Now that New York city has assumed charge of the Metropolitan Opera House and opera has been thoroughly municipalized the music lovers of the city are looking forward with much curiosity to what promises to be an interesting season. The appointment of Mr. Fassett, the well known plumber, to its management by the common council will infuse new spirit into the institution, though there are still timid souls who doubt whether the artists he has engaged, notably Mr. O'Brien, the livery stable keeper, and Miss Maggie Dugan of Lacey's ribbon counter, to sing Romeo and Juliet are vocally equal to the roles assigned them. Those who have heard Miss Dugan summon a cash boy are perfectly familiar with the wonderful quality of her voice, especially in its higher altitudes, and her enunciation of the word "cash" is bell-like in the clarity of its tone. Mr. O'Brien, however, is more of an experiment; but, while we must confess we have only heard him address his horses in the past, there is no denying that there is a superb quality to the notes of his middle register. Signor Cospetto di Napoli, the popular dealer in confetti in Mulberry street, who will lead the orchestra on Italian nights, comes of a musical family, his parents having toured the country with a barrel organ for many prosperous seasons.

"The People Must Foot the Bills."

A city of some 40,000 inhabitants not long ago decided to change its street lighting from gas to electric and proposed building a municipal plant. The local electric company offered to pay $500 toward the expense of getting an estimate by a first class expert, with the proviso that it would supply lights at a substantial reduction from the expert's estimate of what it would cost the city to furnish its own lights. The offer was rejected, one member of the council voicing the general sentiment of that body in these words:

"It doesn't make any difference what the cost will be, the people want the plant, and the people will have to foot the bills."

Which of the parties to this offer was working for the best interests of the city? When you answer don't blink the fact that the self interest of the company that wanted the contract was fully balanced by the shortsighted self interest of the councilmen who desired re-election.

M. O. Employees Badly Paid in Vienna.

The Chicago Daily News states that the wages of a first class motorman on the municipal street railways of Vienna is 72 cents for a twelve hour day and that a large number of the employees of the municipal gas works earn barely 50 cents a day. These low wages are paid to enable the city to make a profit on its undertakings. A special cable says that a general revolt against the miserable wages of city employees is threatened.

Profit in Baiting Corporations. The celebrated Edward W. Bemis, whose efforts to extirpate gas monopolies have brought fame and fees, is suing the city of Peoria, Ill., for $1,000, which he asserts was earned in the service of Peoria when the authorities of that alcoholic spot were endeavoring to put the Peoria Gas company out of business.—American Gas Light Journal.

THE CHILD MIND.

Results of an Investigation Into Infant Mental Processes.

Of forty-eight children, says Stanley Hall, twenty believed the sun, moon and stars to live, sixteen thought flowers could feel and fifteen that dolls would feel pain if burned. The sky was found the chief field in which the children exercised their philosophic minds. About three-quarters of them thought the world a plane with the sky like a bowl turned over it, sometimes believing that it was of such thin texture that one could easily break through, though so large that much floor sweeping was necessary in heaven. The sun may enter the ground when it sets, but half the children thought that at night it rolls or flies away or is blown or walks or God pulls it up higher out of sight, taking it up into heaven, according to some putting it to bed and even taking off its clothes and putting them on again in the morning, or, again, it is believed to lie under the trees at night and the angels mind it. God, of whom children always hear so much, plays a very large part in these conceptions and is made directly responsible for all cosmic phenomena. Thus thunder to these American children was God growling or kicking, or rolling barrels about, or turning a big handle, or grinding snow, or breaking something, or rattling a big hammer, while the lightning was due to God putting his finger out, or turning the gas on quick, or striking matches, or setting paper on fire. According to Boston children, God is a big, perhaps a blue, man, to be seen in the sky, on the clouds, in church or even in the streets. They declare that God comes to see them sometimes and they have seen him enter the gate. He makes lamps, babies, dogs, trees, money, etc., and the angels work for him. He looks like a priest or a teacher or papa, and the children like to look at him. A few would themselves like to be God. His house in the sky may be made of stone or brick. Birds, children and Santa Claus live with God.

Birds and beasts, their food and their furniture, as Burnham points out, all talk to children. When the dew is on the grass "the grass is crying," the stars are candles or lamps, perhaps cinders from God's stove; butterflies are flying pantries; icicles are Christmas candy. Children have imaginary play brothers and sisters and friends with whom they talk. Sometimes God talks with them. Even the prosiest things are vivified. The tracks of dirty feet on the floor are flowers; a creaking chair talks; the shoemaker's nails are children whom he is driving to school. —Nineteenth Century.

A Camping Party.

In getting up a camping party find enough congenial companions to make the party up to four or five, rarely more, never less. Two is too few in case of accident or the inevitable camp squabbles; three permits the association of two as chums, leaving the third one to himself; four, two pairs, is the most satisfactory number, although five can travel very comfortably. Get as well acquainted as possible with all members of the party before starting. An uncongenial member may spoil the pleasure of the whole party. If possible, let one man know well how to do camp cooking. Try him on a short outing before you trust him on the real trip. The comfort of the whole party depends most on the ability of the cook. Fancy cooking or chafing dish adeptness amounts to but little when it comes to frying bacon, making flapjacks and building fires with green wood when the rain is pouring down and the others of the party are begging for "something hot, and mighty quick about it too." —Travel Magazine.

THE BAY HORSE.

An Old Arab Legend That Tells of His Unmatched Speed.

The bay colored horse is said to be the swiftest of all the horses. A story to illustrate this is told of a certain Arab sheik who, having been engaged in a fight with another tribe, was taking his flight with his little son.

They were both mounted on a magnificent white mare which belonged to the sheik and which had always been highly valued on account of the great speed at which it could go. After having ridden some little distance the sheik asked his son to look around and see if they were being followed. The boy replied that there was some one riding after them on a black horse. The sheik seemed satisfied on hearing this report, but presently repeated his question. The boy answered that they were still being pursued, but that this time the horse was white. "Never mind," said the father; "mine is faster."

In a few minutes he asked for a further report, and the reply was the same, with the difference that the horse was a chestnut. The sheik, however, put his question a fourth time, but upon being told by his son that the pursuer was mounted on a bay he cried out, "Then we are lost, for there is no horse which it cannot overtake." His words proved to be true, for in a short time they were caught up with and captured.

Too Much Information.

"I should think," said the inquisitive layman in the small town, "that you preachers would get mighty tired of going around with your long tailed coats and white ties all the time on week days, proclaiming your office to the world in season and out of season."

"We do," calmly admitted the minister. "We get enormously tired of these Sunday garments. But the reason we wear them is a very practical one. We are expected to have ministerial clothes for Sunday. The fact that a whole lot of people, you among the number, since you seem specially concerned, don't pay what they agree to toward our salaries, renders us unable to afford everyday business suits like other people. So we have to wear our Sunday clothes all week. If there is any more information you wish I shall be glad to supply it or direct you to where it may be obtained." But the inquisitive man had seen another man across the street with whom he had business. —Chicago News.

An Old, Old Question.

A writer in a Boston paper says: "There are many people who believe that the servant question, a solution for which the whole world is now making efforts to discover, is a product of the present time. This is not the case, however, and were the wise Akiba still alive he might with right use his truism, 'It has all been here before,' in connection with the problem. This may be demonstrated by no less an authority than Goethe. In his 'Wilhelm Meister,' written in the latter days of the eighteenth century, there is a scene where the hero comes to the home of Therese, sent there by Lothario and Jarro. Receiving Wilhelm, Therese asks to be excused because of her scant board: 'My cook,' she says, 'just ran away at a most inopportune time, and our man mangled his hand. I had to prepare all myself. Nothing bothers me more nowadays than servants; no one will serve, not even themselves.'"

A Comparison.

"I admit I have the fault you mention," said the conceited man, self-complacently, "but it's the only fault I have, and it's a small one."

"Yes," replied Knox, "just like the small hole that makes a plugged nickel no good." —Philadelphia Press.

STATE POLITICS

The Summer Season Develops Many Political Fairy Tales

WHITNEY HAS THE MACHINE

Bartlett Represents the Opposition
Sentiment—The Indications Point
Strongly to Whitney's Nomination

The summer season has developed more political fakes this year than in any previous year in the recollection of the oldest politician. Washington writers seem to be more prolific of this class of literature than those of any other section, though a good many of the fakes having Washington date-lines in the Boston newspapers bear strong outward evidences of having been manufactured here on the spot rather than at the national capital.

One of the latest of these fishy stories appearing in a Boston paper under a Washington date line pictures Postmaster General George von L. Meyer in the role of dictating appointments in the state and planning to inaugurate a Wild West campaign for election to the United States senate from Massachusetts. The story sought to convey the impression that there was bitter feeling between Mr. Meyer and the present senators, and especially Senator Lodge.

Nothing could be farther from the truth. Ever since he started in politics Mr. Meyer has had the staunch support and assistance of the senior senator and but for his aid Mr. Meyer might never have had an opportunity to achieve a career so broad and notable.

Far from there being any misunderstanding or disagreement between Senator Lodge and Postmaster General Meyer, there is a complete understanding and the warmest friendship. Both men are admirers of President Roosevelt and his firm supporters in all his administrative policies.

It is safe, during this summer season, when actual news appears to be wanting, to take not only with a grain but with a handful of salt the political stories appearing in some of the Boston newspapers once known as reliable and conservative, but now become the leaders of the sensational press.

Two Democratic Candidates

The political situation today shows only two actual candidates for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination in sight, namely: General Charles W. Bartlett of Boston and Henry M. Whitney of Brookline. There are others on the outskirts, but from all appearances they do not count in this campaign. James B. Carroll of Springfield has been mentioned as a possible candidate and John R. Thayer of Worcester has also been suggested as a compromise in the present situation. There is nothing to indicate that either of these has any support worth mentioning. It looks as if it were now too late for any other candidate to enter the field and make a respectable showing.

It is true a good many Democrats are not favorable to either Bartlett or Whitney, but in the Democratic party the leaders and not the masses make the nominations. Usually the nomination is decided upon months before the convention meets, by a handful of men who gather in Boston from various parts of the commonwealth and name the state ticket for the remainder of the party. This has already been done this year by a handful of men who control the votes of the masses and are able to deliver the goods at the convention. Henry M. Whitney is the man selected for first place by this contingent of leaders, and there is nothing to indicate that he will not be nominated in accordance with the cut and dried program prepared in advance.

There is a considerable number of Democrats who do not coincide with the selections which they make and these are now attempting to work up the masses to the point of making their own nominations, but everything points to the failure of this effort. General Bartlett is the beneficiary of this movement in opposition to the nomination of Mr. Whitney in advance of the caucuses, and his friends are doing their best in the effort to secure delegates favoring his nomination. They are playing with loaded dice and while the game is exciting the result seems certain to be unfavorable to General Bartlett.

Power of Initiative Lost

The Democratic masses seem to have lost the power of initiative and to be capable only of a blind following of men who have constituted themselves their leaders, and whose leading is always in the interests of the corporations and corporation candidates. There is sometimes an effort on the part of some sincere friend of the people to show these Democratic masses the folly of following such leadership, but in this commonwealth such efforts have usually failed.

It is this fact more than any other which is responsible for the existence of the Independence League (so called) and its following at the present time. The league is recruited largely from the element in the Democratic party which has seen this nimble game played year after year to the profit of the politicians and to the loss of the masses of the party. As a conspicuous instance of this method of deluding the people the campaign which resulted in the nomination and election of John F. Fitzgerald as mayor of Boston stands out preeminently. Fitzgerald made his cam-

FUNCTIONS OF THE STATE.

Interesting Analysis Made by Bishop Stang of Fall River.

In a recent address in St. Mary's cathedral Bishop Stang of Fall River thus analyzed the functions of the state:

"The state should not absorb the rights of individuals, but should keep them inviolate unless they clash with the common good and the interests of others. The proper office of the government is to foster public well being and private prosperity by maintaining peace and good order, safeguarding family life, respecting religion and punishing evil doers."

"Civil authority may step in to interfere if through strikes there is imminent danger of disturbance to the public peace. If in workshops and factories there is danger to morals through the mixing of sexes or from any occasion of evil, if the health of laborers is endangered by excessive work or the want of sanitary arrangements or if labor is unsuited to sex or age, but the state should not intervene in or meddle with private concerns any further than is required for the remedy of the evil or the removal of the danger. The state should not only protect private ownership as something sacred and inviolable, but its policy should be to induce as many people as possible to become owners. The possessor of the poorest cabin will not change it for the dreams of a socialistic paradise."

That Extra Fare.

Not much is heard about that extra fare on the electric at Medford these days. The people have adjusted themselves to the new condition, and hence all complaints have apparently subsided.

Tree Warden Should Give His Entire Time.

The STAR to a great extent voices public opinion when it announces that the Tree Warden should give his entire time to moth work. There are too many men employed and too much money being expended to trust this important work to subordinates, as is now being done. Better work could be accomplished if it is believed than is the case at present, with a Tree Warden on the spot, and furthermore it would remove to a great extent the present dissatisfaction that generally prevails. Winchester pays its Tree Warden $600 a year and this with what is now being paid for a superintendent would give the former more than would be required for a suitable salary. There is too much at stake to continue any longer trusting the actual work of this department to subordinates. Furthermore a Tree Warden should be within the reach of the inhabitants throughout the day for consultation and advice.

Who Will be the Representative.

This year and next the Republican party will have the privilege of naming the gentleman who will represent this town in the lower branch of the Legislature. For the past two years Medford has furnished the representative, according to the arrangement entered into by the Republicans of both ends of the district. There will be a contest for this position, and already several gentlemen have been mentioned. The STAR announced several weeks ago that Mr. F. M. Symmes would be a candidate. Charles N. Harris, Esq., also announces that he will be in the contest, while the friends of George C. Cote, Esq., state that they will present his name at the convention. There will probably be other candidates.

The caucus will be held next month, so it will be seen that those desiring to be candidates have not an abundance of time in which to make announcement of their intentions. Winchester has many able men to select from and the desire is that the town select only the best, as many important measures are to come before the next General Court.

DESTRUCTIVE THIEVERY.

Aroused by the wholesale thefts of copper wire and rail bondings that have taken place recently in the various parts of their systems, the management of the Boston & Northern and Old Colony St. Ry. Co's have taken steps of the most vigorous character to put a stop to it. Detectives and local police are busy everywhere that this has been going on.

Seven arrests have already been made and the men arraigned on larceny charges in the Brockton and Taunton District courts and their cases are now pending. It is expected that more will follow, and it is stated by the management that they will be prosecuted to the fullest possible extent.

In many instances the rail bondings have been torn right from the tracks which has caused a great impairment in the service, as well as financial loss. This is considered a crime, not only against the company but against the travelling public and calls for the most energetic action.

Over 2500 pounds of the valuable metal have already been unearthed in various junk shops and the detectives and local police who are busy on the cases believe that systematic gangs have been committing these depredations in various parts of the system. The entire thefts have been carried on in a wholesale manner and the amount of copper recovered is but a small part of what is missing.

GRADE CROSSING.

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

Please give the inclosed space. It shows your readers what the chairman of our railroad commission says about private interests and these are what Mr. Geo. Adams Woods has been appointed by the Selectmen to arrange with.

More than eight weeks ago he was appointed. Three large property owners tell me they have not yet been seen and that they have nothing to arrange about it. No case in the State has been "held up" as Winchester is now.

WHITEFIELD TUCK.

Part of the article which Mr. Tuck wishes printed relates to the plans of the abolition of a grade crossing at Dorchester, in which Chairman Jackson says: "The physical conditions in the neighborhood of the crossings which it is proposed to abolish make any plan for their elimination by depressing the railroad objectionable. Experience proves that while a railroad can be maintained at this low level with reference to tide water, it involves the possible serious interference at times with traffic, and this fact is a sufficient reason why the decision of the special commission to raise rather than lower the railroad is a wise conclusion."

"Obviously no plan ought to be adopted in dealing with these crossings that is not consistent with the best way of dealing with other crossings to be abolished in the future. Examined from that standpoint the plan submitted fully stands the test and is clearly consistent with the public interests."

"No plan for abolishing grade crossings can be devised that will not arouse opposition from private interests that are necessarily invaded. The plan which is presented in this instance is one which upon the whole accomplishes the largest possible benefit with the least interference with private property, and is, therefore, approved."

OBSERVATIONS.

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

Oh, no, "Harmony" I have not criticized the band stand, nor having concerts in the afternoon, nor the playing of the band, excepting favorably, and all I have said about the music is that I thought there should be more of a popular character. But "Harmony's" statement that the things he refers to suits everybody excepting myself is far from true. The great majority would prefer to have the concerts in the evening, and while the band stand looks well it should have a ceiling sounding board and be about two feet higher.

I introduced the following bill and it was referred by the committee to the next legislature, and no representative took interest enough in the measure to fight for it. It is not the merit of the bills but the fight made for them that counts. However, the bill poster league and counsel know about this measure and who introduced it, and undoubtedly when Mr. Donnelly's attention was called to it he was glad to remove the objectionable ad.

AN ACT

To prohibit the Advertising of Intoxicating Liquors in No-License Towns and Cities.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives in General Court assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Section 1. Intoxicating liquor, as defined in section two of chapter one hundred of the Revised Laws, shall not be advertised upon any fence, structure, pole, rock or other object within the limits of any city or town which at its last annual election voted against the granting of licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors within its limits.

Section 2. Whoever violates the provisions of this act shall be punished by a fine not exceeding ten dollars for each offence.

Section 3. The district police shall cause the provisions of this act to be enforced.

So the value of land in Winchester has increased only $16,200 in the last two years, which is less than one half of one per cent? I wonder if anyone excepting the Assessors believes this? No wonder the tax rate is high.

I have ridden on the B. & M. for forty years and never in that time has there been poorer cars run than some of those now on the suburban service. The springs are all gone and it is a continuous bump and in a collision they would shut up like an accordion. They should go to the scrap heap.

There are so many important improvements hanging upon the grade crossing abolition plan that it should have the best of attention to hasten its adoption and completion. There is Main street bridge, Walnut street bridge, fixing up of the ponds and river about the centre, location of new engine house and erection of several buildings. The legal fraternity has never been noted for its haste here or elsewhere, and always has to be pushed by its principals.

While no one should doubt that the laws can be enforced, it is a great mistake to attack the great interests of the country in the reckless way now prevailing, and unless it is stopped the common people, as always, will soon feel its disastrous effects. It should also be borne in mind that if public service corporations have been violating laws for some time, the public officials having the overseeing of them must have been remiss in their duties and are also to blame.

How is it that citizens are allowed to use the water freely to keep their lawns green, but the public common and plots are allowed to burn up? Here is another kick for the Park Board to consider.

One reason that I want the New Haven to merge the B. & M., is that the former is going ahead to establish an up-to-date suburban service with electric power and flat fares, and the B. & M. alone could not do this, in which case what would happen to the northern suburbs of Boston when the southern suburbs had such conditions?

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

The manager of the Opera Company at the Castle Square Theatre has arranged a series of gala performances for the week of August 19th. "Faust" will be sung on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings and at the Wednesday matinee, and on Thursday "Il Trovatore" will be given and will be continued for the remainder of the week. At all of these performances the principal members of the company will appear. Among those singers who have showed such ability are Clara Lane, Lois Ewell, Louise Le Baron, Hattie Belle Ladd, J. K. Murray, George Tallman, Harry Davies, George Shields, Otis B. Thayer and W. H. Pringle. Chorus and orchestra remain unchanged. They have done good work and their constant rehearsing and performing together throughout the summer has resulted in bringing them to a state of unusual excellence. For the last week of the summer season "Martha" will be sung, and then will begin the regular operatic season at the Castle Square.

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Meincke of Yale street returned this week from a two months' trip to Europe.

AUSABLE CHASM.

Central Vermont Railway the Direct Line to the Natural Wonder.

Ausable chasm, sometimes called the Yosemite of the east, ranks next to Niagara Falls among nature's masterpieces and should be visited by everyone in search of the extraordinary and beautiful in nature. The Ausable river in its passage from the Adirondacks to Lake Champlain has chiseled this vast fissure through the solid mountain. For ages this erosion continued until the rocky walls, now overgrown with trees and ferns, rise precipitously 100 feet high into the chasm forming the beautiful Rainbow Falls, its misty veil tangled amid the wildest scenery. Passage through the chasm is by means of long galleries, bridges and stone stairways, and by boat over the rapids. A trip through this marvel of nature is marked by novelty, adventure and many delightful surprises. The best way of reaching the chasm from Boston is by the Central Vermont railway, via White River Junction and Burlington, and Champlain steamers. This route takes the traveller through the heart of the Green Mountains and the Winoski Valley, concluding with a delightful sail across picturesque Lake Champlain. The Central Vermont Ry's Summer book, sent for 6c stamp enclosed to T. H. Hanley, 360 Washington street, Boston, tells the whole story of the chasm and the journey to it.

Mr. and Mrs. Darrow, who leased the Kneeland house on Fells road for the summer, suffered the death of their infant child Monday from meningitis. Services were held Tuesday after which the remains were taken to Holliston for interment.

Mr. E. D. Shaw leaves town today for a business trip to New York.

DO YOU GET UP

WITH A LAME BACK?

Kidney Trouble Makes You Miserable.

Almost everybody who reads the newspapers is sure to know of the wonderful cures made by Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy.

It is the great medical triumph of the nineteenth century; discovered after years of scientific research by Dr. Kilmer, the eminent kidney and bladder specialist, and is wonderfully successful in promptly curing lame back, uric acid, catarrh of the bladder and Bright's Disease, which is the worst form of kidney trouble.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is not recommended for everything but if you have kidney, liver or bladder trouble it will be found just the remedy you need. It has been tested in so many ways, in hospital work and in private practice, and has proved so successful in every case that a special arrangement has been made by which all readers of this paper, who have not already tried it, may have a sample bottle sent free by mail, also a book telling more about Swamp-Root, and how to find out if you have kidney or bladder trouble. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. The regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles are sold by all good druggists. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

Marjorie and I Keep House.

By FRANK H. MELOON.

Copyright, 1907, by Frank H. Meloon.

WHEN Marjorie and I were first married we decided to rent a house somewhere in Washington, my duties as clerk in the department of agriculture calling me to the Capital City of the United States. We had been wise enough to postpone house hunting until our honeymoon was over.

After visiting about forty real estate agents and looking over all sorts of obviously undesirable rentals, owing sometimes to location, sometimes to condition and sometimes to our limited means, the forty-first agent suggested that we buy.

"Don't be a tenant," he urged. "Don't have a landlord to boss you and tell you what you shall and what you shall not do. Be independent. Own the roof over your heads. Don't have to worry about the rent coming due. Don't allow yourself to be handicapped about making the repairs and innovations you want because of spending your money on some one else's property. Don't always walk in the shadow of the dread of moving. In a word, buy your house now and start right."

Marjorie quite agreed with the agent, as I could see by her looks. Besides, she kept nudging me, as if to say, "Pay attention to that now, will you?" "I am quite agreeable to buying," I admitted, "if I had the money, but our expenses have been quite heavy of late."

Marjorie blushed charmingly. "Yes, yes, I understand perfectly," agreed the agent, beaming over his gold boxed spectacles. "I was married once myself, and I've never begrudged the money I spent on the honeymoon, not a cent of it! No, sir! And there never was a real American yet who would, especially with such a charming lady as Mrs. — Townsick, you say? Eh, eh?"

And he chuckled me in the short ribs playfully, no doubt, but with such violence that I must have grunted like a hog fat for the killing.

"Oh, I don't begrudge it any," I answered as soon as I had recovered my breath, "but I thought that I'd have to wait until I had paid what I now owe before I buy a house."

"You'll rise, you'll rise!" chuckled the portly agent, his whole fat body shaking with genial mirth. "And I contend that you should own that home, and own it at the beginning. That's the magic word of success—now!"

"If you have any practical suggestion to make, I'll be glad to hear it," I ventured, looking at Marjorie, who was

THERE WAS A DRAFFING EXPLOSION, smiling delightedly and gazing with newly kindled enthusiasm at the amiable agent.

"Consider it settled, then," he went on. "You own your own home already. You live under your own roof."

Marjorie nodded sagely. "Here is a chart of the city of Washington—great prospects!" went on the agent. "Marvelous growth and all that! Now, all you have to do is look that map over and decide what house you'll own. The prices, which are put down at the lowest figure, are all written in in red ink, and I think you'd better keep the papers"—here he handed me another bundle—"until tomorrow. Be here at 10 o'clock, and I'll go with you to see whatever place or places you'd like to look at."

I gave a rather reluctant consent. The next day we were right on time. When the agent came in, he apologized profusely for having kept us waiting, so that Marjorie even ventured to thank him for condescending to notice us.

"With your pressure of business," she remarked, smiling sweetly, "it is really kind of you to bother with us and when you don't know that we will buy at all!"

I had an impression that he did know we would buy, but I refrained from offering any comment, and inside of five minutes I, too, was under the agent's magnetic spell. We had picked out a house which was neither in the central part of the city nor quite out of it, a pleasing medium between the busy section and the suburbs.

We all three seized vacant straps on the crowded trolley and set out for what was to be our new home. From the outside the house looked fine and well worth the $5,000 asked for it. The interior was, if anything, still better, and only $2,000 was asked as a first payment, the remainder going on a mortgage at the usual 5 per cent rate. The agent did not directly urge us to buy.

"You are a young couple," he said frankly, "and I want to see you added to my already large family of happy householders. I may further say that I have been quite taken with the appearance of both of you. This house, you observe, has all the modern conveniences—hot water heat, electric lights, hot and cold water, gas for cooking and everything, in fact, that is considered essential for housekeeping needs and luxury."

As I had the $2,000 and a little more than that tucked away in the bank for a nest egg and as the house pleased Marjorie quite as well as it did me, I agreed to Mr. Splittacre's terms, received my deed with only a day's delay and found that my troubles had begun.

In the first place, I had to buy my furniture on the installment plan, and it cost four times as much as I expected. The percentage I had to pay the dealer—for installments, I found, don't mean all trust—ate a large hole in what was left of my bank account, and it began to look as if, when I got through, only a broken shell would remain of my nest egg.

It was late in the fall when we moved in, and right then we began to learn our lesson about modern conveniences. Before I fairly learned to run the hot water heat the temperature in the rooms ranged anywhere from 32 degrees to 110. As a consequence both Marjorie and I had colds which necessitated the attendance of a physician. We agreed to pay his bill on the installment plan.

Then the water pipes in the second story froze, and the amount of damage done before the plumbers got around to do more was almost incredible. So was the bill that we received a little later. It was only by dint of persistent arguments that I made the plumbing firm agree to allow me to pay them a certain percentage of my salary each pay day. They said theirs was a cash business, but they would agree to make an exception in my case, provided I would promise solemnly that I would say nothing about it to the neighbors, as they did not care to be bothered with outstanding bills.

A leak in the gas pipes occurred in the middle of January. It was discovered in a rather odd manner. I located it, but felt no pride in the achievement. I was going down cellar to fix the fire for the night, and when I opened the door of the heater there was a deafening explosion. The force of it threw me down, nearly stunning me and horribly singeing a dress suit—I had been at a Masonic meeting that evening—and incinerating a Vandyke beard and a pair of the first eyebrows I ever had. Half the asbestos covering was knocked from the heater, and the very fire was blown up the chimney. The concrete floor was, I imagined, dented in places, and the far started another costly leak in the water pipes.

The gas men endeavored to repair the damage, but they somehow failed to fix things as good as they were before. In vain they tampered with this and tinkered with that. The awful odor of gas permeated the whole house, insinuating itself into every room, no matter how hard we tried to keep it out. It finally became so odious that we fairly dreaded the jingle of the electric gong, having become ashamed of repeating to constant callers the old excuse that we were "having it fixed."

"It's just too mortifying," sobbed Marjorie one evening, "to have Mrs. Banks call and sit there with her handkerchief held to her nose with one hand and her vinaigrette with the other and looking at me as if I were a segment of Limburger cheese or had been eating onions. If I have explained this unexplainable thing to one person, I have to a hundred, and I don't think either that half of them believe me!"

It was easy to see that the situation was wearing on my wife's nerves as well as on mine, though I took it out in a different way from sobbing, to the chagrin no doubt of the recording angel.

The first relief we had was during those days when the gas was shut off at the main in the street while an entire new set of pipes was being put in, and even these, as it turned out, were destined to give us trouble from time to time.

The April rains went through the slate roof in places much as if it were a sieve, and the labor of patching it meant more installments for the carpenter, while two of the ceilings were ruined, and, with installments for one thing or another coming due all the time, I found myself unable to raise the money to have them fixed.

In June an awful odor arose from the basement. I thought a cat must have died between some partitions, but Mrs. Banks, of the handkerchief and vinaigrette assured us it was the sewage. Investigation showed that this was backed up in an alarming manner. The cellar was again flooded, and this time with something that rubber boots alone were not sufficient to overcome. Potato peelings reposed on the cellar stairs, and a package of Mrs. Banks' printed calling cards in some way found a resting place in the floating coal bin. There were more lost articles than are advertised for in any one issue of the daily papers, and not the most unexpected of these was a set of dainty false teeth containing two gold crowns that were the identical match of those in the mouth of Miss Pretty Sphinx, a bachelor girl who lived with the family next door. When Marjorie and I saw them, we recalled that Miss Sphinx had had a three days' illness not long before, during which time she was confined to her room with a dreadful toothache and neuralgia and could see no callers except the dentist.

While I was at work days Marjorie was nearly distracted with installment collectors. The plumbers' man came twice a day, and the furniture dealers' man took the place of an alarm clock, a dinner bell and the curfew. There were others. The neighbors came to think they were all friends of ours, and we were out socially for associating with such disreputable looking people. The plumbers' man, you see, was a short, stocky built fellow who always wore a greasy red necktie, a slouch hat and a coat ripped at random. The furniture dealers' man never had his shoes blacked, wore no collar or necktie and was so tall that he would have attracted attention in a museum for freaks. The others varied regularly in size, like the strings of a harp, and all seemed to take an equal delight in pushing the button at our front door while clothed in the most abhorrent fashion.

When the electric light wires set fire to the house through imperfect insulation, driving us out of doors in dishabille in the middle of the night, I decided that the climax had been reached, and Marjorie agreed with me to a T. The insurance company paid for the damage, and a round sum it cost them. With the utmost duplicity, I next day began to sing the pleasures of owning one's own home, provided it had all the modern improvements, and kept at it constantly until one of my coworkers, named Tuttle, who was going to get married, approached me in a quiet, hesitating sort of way, asking if I would like to sell my house.

Without appearing too eager I told him I might dispose of it if I got the right price. You can imagine how my heart went to my throat as I made him this answer. From the height of my superior experience I saw that young man as he was, and I realized that, green as he might be, he was no greener than I had been when I bought a house with all the modern improvements. He hesitated, started to speak, appeared to think better of it and finally said he would see me the next day. The next day he came with Miss Angel. I presume that was her name. I heard him call her by it in a whisper. They consulted together after making a thorough and delightful rummage of every nook and corner. The house, now well furnished, looked even better than it did when Marjorie and I had seen it in the first place.

"I'll give you $7,500 for it and not a cent more," he said at last, with the air of one who has plunged into and crossed the Rubicon.

What did I do? Oh, I held out for eighty-five hundred and succeeded in getting eight thousand. By this lucky stroke we cleared our debts and had the money to buy and pay for a little place in the country, which we expressly stipulated should have no modern improvements.

There are no pipes in the house to burst. We draw water from a well with an old fashioned well sweep. We light our house as our forefathers used to do, and we have great fireplaces to heat it in the same way. The cellar is in practical disuse. I chop the wood and carry in from the shed what coal we burn. The roof, with old fashioned shingles, is as tight as a drum. Marjorie and I are satisfied.

"Just think," she was saying last night, "we have lived here a year and have had no trouble at all. The neighbors all talk about the perfect health we enjoy and refer to us as a model household. Baby has the fresh air he needs, and he gets the milk warm from the cow."

I am sure that the exercise I get is just what I have needed all along. The congressman from my district at home treats me with great gentleness as one of his agricultural constituents, since, though really residing in the District of Columbia, I manage to hold my voting privilege at the farm in Skowhegan, where my parents still make their abode.

"Nothing too good for Townsick!" said the congressman to the chief of my bureau the other day in such a tone that I knew it meant another raise for me.

A queer climax was reached last week when the Tuttles, who bought our house in town, moved into the farmhouse next to ours. They, too, have tired of modern improvements and have become exemplars of the old fashioned simple life.

Don't Try Uncertain Recipes

It is entirely unnecessary to experiment with this, that and the other recipe. Get from your grocer for 10 cents, a package of "OUR-PE" Preparation—Lemon, Chocolate or Custard—for making pies that are sure to be good.

A JUDICIAL WARNING.

Justice Brewer of United States Supreme Court on Public Ownership.

There is this important difference between public and private indebtedness: The individual may mortgage his home or other property, and if the purpose for which the mortgage is given proves a failure the property may be lost to him, and on his death his heirs simply receive so much less than they otherwise would, but the indebtedness casts no burden upon them. It may wipe out his entire property and they receive nothing. To that extent they may suffer if a failure to inherit property can be called suffering. But public indebtedness is of a different character. It does not wipe out property now existing, but it casts a burden upon the industries and toil of those who come after us. Interest and principal are met by taxes, and taxes continue from age to age until the debt is paid. They who come after us, who may receive little or no benefit from the debt, are called upon to contribute the proceeds of their labor to its payment. In other words, while private indebtedness does not mortgage or encumber future industry and labor, public indebtedness does. And in piling up public indebtedness we too often forget that the future will have its burdens—that there will be demands upon it for expenditures. Improvements and conveniences corresponding to the life of that day will be needed. So that there is injustice in creating a public indebtedness for improvements which will be mainly available in our day and only to a slight degree of benefit to those who come after us. Indeed, generally speaking, it is fair to leave each generation to determine what amount of public burdens it will assume, and each should take care of its own public indebtedness.—Leslie's Weekly.

A PUBLIC OWNERSHIP PERIL.

It Would Intrench Corrupt Political Bosses Permanently in Power.

Referring to the recent announcement that 51,146 persons are on the payroll of New York city, the Newark Advertiser declares that in the event of municipal ownership of street railways, electric light and gas plants, ferries and other public utilities the city employees would constitute a political army that would make a change of administration impossible.

It recalls the fact that 25,000 city employees in Philadelphia kept Philadelphia in the hands of the corrupt Durham machine for years and only a great popular uprising finally overthrew the grafters.

"If Durham had had control of the street railroads and other public utilities in Philadelphia through municipal ownership," it observes, "he could have laughed at popular uprisings. He would have been as absolute in his authority as the czar."

The point is well taken. In other cities the political situation under public ownership would be as it would in Philadelphia and New York.

Bosses may be overthrown and grafters turned out whenever the people will it at present. Public ownership of all public utilities would end this. It would bind the people hand and foot and deliver them into the hands of political grafters.—Long Branch (N. J.) Record.

When Tom's Tune Would Change.

Of course municipal ownership would be liked by any political boss who owns

A BUSINESS PARABLE.

You Cannot Fail to Appreciate the Point in This Story.

Once a farmer had 1,800 bushels of wheat, which he sold not to a single grain merchant, but to 1,800 different dealers, a bushel each. A few of them paid him in cash, but far the greater number said it was not convenient then; they would pay later. A few months passed and the man's bank account ran low. "How is this?" he said. "My 1,800 bushels of grain should have kept me in affluence until another crop is raised, but I have parted with the grain and have instead only a vast number of accounts, so small and scattered that I cannot get around and collect fast enough to pay expenses."

So he posted up a public notice and asked all those who owed him to pay quickly. But few came. The rest said, "Mine is only a small matter, and I will go and pay one of these days," forgetting that, though each account was very small, when all were put together they meant a large sum to the man. Things went on thus. The man got to feeling so bad that he fell out of bed and awoke and, running to his granary, found his 1,800 bushels of wheat still safe there. He had only been dreaming.

Moral.—The next day the man went to the publisher of his paper and said: "Here, sir, is the pay for your paper, and when next year's subscription is due you can depend on me to pay it promptly. I stood in the position of an editor last night, and I know how it feels to have one's honestly earned money scattered all over the country in small amounts."—Exchange.

Some Bulls.

Last year, in the north of Ireland, the following came under my observation. In a hotel the porter, for my information and dutifully in furtherance of the interests of his employers, remarked, "If you want a drive, sir, you needn't go out of the hotel," meaning, of course, that carriages formed part of the establishment.

Another bull was in a conversation overheard between two workmen. One put the question, "Were you acquainted with So-and-so?" to which the reply was, "No; he was dead before I knew him."

An Irish friend of mine was describing a dinner party he had been at. It was a great success, as two noted talkers were present, each of whom was talking so fast that neither could get in a word.—London Spectator.

IN NEW ZEALAND.

How Public Ownership Works on the World's Other Side.

Official Balance Sheets Generally Show Profits, but Analyses Thereof Indicate Real Deficits Almost Invariably. Conditions No Better in New South Wales, Where Fares Are Higher, on the Whole, Than Here—Inefficiency and Extravagance Due to Political Interference.

By C. ARTHUR WILLIAMS.

The New Zealand cities which own their tram lines are Dunedin, Christchurch and Wellington. The systems are comparatively new in all three, so it is difficult to say how the account between them and the people will stand eventually. In Christchurch the trams are controlled by a board elected by the people. Most of the lines have been operated, electrically for more than a year, but some extremely ancient steam equipment is still in use at this writing.

The cost of construction is about $42,000 per mile. The excess of revenue over working expenses for the ten and one-half months ending March 31, 1906, was $49,022. Leaving depreciation out of the question, interest on the capital at only 4 per cent would amount to $50,547, and at least one-half of 1 per cent would necessarily be charged off for sinking fund. The balance sheet on the date named showed a net profit, but it is plain that there was really a deficit of considerable proportions. In that balance sheet the only interest item is $22,132 "on capital charged to net revenue," and only $2,587 is shown to have been set aside for sinking fund.

Although the penny section plan prevails and one may ride short distances cheaper than in the United States, the average fare per passenger carried in this ten and one-half months was 4.18 cents, no transfers being allowed.

Dunedin's tramways loan is $1,440,000, and the rate of interest is 4 per cent on $778,080 and 4½ per cent on the remainder. The official returns for 1905 showed a deficit of $18,048, not including depreciation. Of the twenty-four two-cent sections into which the system is divided eleven are less than one mile in length, the longest is only one and a quarter miles, and the average length is .908 miles each. Crowded cars are relatively as numerous as in the United States, and the same may be said of every other publicly owned tram system in Australia. The municipal debt of Dunedin proper, less sinking fund available, was about $110 per capita on March 31, 1906, $3,054,081 of the total debt of $4,708,481 having been accumulated on account of the municipality's tram, abattoir and water and gas establishments.

In both Dunedin and Wellington responsible persons asserted that politics interfered with the management of the trams. A man connected with the Wellington system said that it was practically impossible for the head officials to dismiss one of his employees because of political influence. So noticeable has been the effect of politics in this and other matters that suggestions have been made looking to the designation of Wellington, which is the capital of New Zealand, as federal territory and to the disfranchisement of all its residents. The District of Columbia is cited as a precedent.

The revenues of the Wellington tramways exceeded the operating expenses by $43,507 in 1905-06, but the interest on the total tramways loan amounted to $81,048, and a charge of on account of sinking fund. Much dissatisfaction with the arrangement of fares and sections has been expressed by the public, but the council has decided to make no changes before the system is completed and until "circumstances and the general interest render any amendment expedient or imperative." A project to extend the system to one of the suburbs could not be carried out because the federal government stood in the way of the performance of a certain part of the work. The explanation of its attitude lay in the circumstance that a line of the government railways touched at the suburb in question, and the federal officials would not tolerate competition. The people were the losers, because the tram line was needed.

All the tram lines in New South Wales belong to the state government and are confined to the city of Sydney and its suburbs, the city of Newcastle and the town of Broken Hill. The total mileage in 1906 was only 126 miles (single track), although the Sydney district alone has a population of 500,000. The inadequate service of the Sydney tramways is evidenced by numerous lines of omnibuses drawn by horses, although their rates are higher than the tram rates. The omnibuses, which are privately owned, are well patronized. The average cost of construction and equipment of the tramways was $130,041 a mile. This indicates undue extravagance, as in Melbourne first class tram lines have been put down and equipped for about $40,000 per mile.

During the last fiscal year the lines showed a profit of $208,908 without, however, allowing for depreciation, which, on account of the high capitalization, would exceed $1,000,000 a year. Even with no allowance for depreciation, deficits have been a general rule, in one year running up to $66,808.

The tram lines are divided into sections, the average length of which is about two miles. The fare per section is 2 cents, no transfers being allowed. Between midnight and 4 a. m. the fare is increased to 6 cents per section, with a maximum of 12 cents for the complete trip over any one line.

LEATHER BOUND BOOKS.

A Little Vaseline Improves and Preserves the Binding.

An official of the Congressional library was talking with a friend who recently had purchased a handsome set of leather bound volumes and said: "You had better examine those volumes carefully to see if the leather needs feeding. If it is new stock they will be all right left alone for several years, but if they have been on the shelves for some time the leather will have lost most of its natural oil and become brittle. This applies especially to books kept in private houses, which are as a rule much hotter than the book stacks of a large library. There is nothing more attractive than a fresh, well preserved leather binding on a volume and scarcely anything less so than a dilapidated, cracked one."

"You can add years to the life of a leather binding and a hundred per cent to its appearance by rubbing in a little vaseline with a piece of raw cotton—not too much, just as much as the leather will thoroughly absorb. Where the binding bends is where it is most likely to crack. The leather will not be greasy, as the vaseline will be absorbed. One treatment every year or two is sufficient unless the books are unduly exposed to heat."—Washington Star.

Equal to the Occasion.

The Countess Waldegrave was married four times. One evening she appeared at the opera in Dublin during her fourth husband's occupancy of the post of chief secretary for Ireland. An audacious Celt, catching sight of her ladyship in one of the boxes, shouted out with real Irish tenacity, "Lady Waldegrave, which of the four did you like best?"

The countess was equal to the occasion. Without a moment's hesitation she rose from her seat and exclaimed enthusiastically, "Why, the Irishman, of course"—a remark which naturally "brought down the house."

Suggestive.

"Hang it!" growled young Lovett to the girl of his heart. "It makes me mad every time I think of that money I lost today. I certainly feel as if I'd like to have somebody kick me!"

"By the way, Jack," said the dear girl dreamily, "don't you think you'd better speak to father this evening?"—Illustrated Bits.

A LEARNED COOK.

The Way He Astonished an Eminent German Astronomer.

"How does it happen that the commanders of French vessels, with thirty-four schools of hydrography in the kingdom, do not know how to calculate longitude by lunar distances, while even the cooks and negroes of American vessels understand it?" So in 1817 asked Baron von Zach, one of the first astronomers in Germany. No wonder he was astonished and puzzled, for he had just come from a remarkable interview on board the first large American yacht, Cleopatra's Barge. The baron tells his own story, to be found in the historical collections of the Essex institute, Salem:

"I ventured on board of the American vessel, the Cleopatra's Barge, at Genoa. All the city crowded to see the magnificent palace of Neptune. I went among others. The owner was on board. He was a gentleman of fortune."

"The captain was a lively old gentleman, a cousin to the owner, and his son was on board also. In making some inquiries respecting my friends and correspondents I mentioned Dr. Bowditch. The captain answered:

"He is a friend of our family and our neighbor in Salem. My son was his pupil. It is properly my son and not I who navigates this vessel."

"I observed to the young man: 'You have had so excellent a teacher you cannot fail to be acquainted with the science. In making Gibraltar what was your error in longitude?'

"Six miles."

"Your calculations were very correct. How did you keep them?"

"By chronometer and by the lunar distances."

"You know how to calculate by lunar distances?" I exclaimed.

"The young man seemed a little offended by my question and replied with some warmth:

"How to calculate by lunar distances? Why, our cook can do that!"

"Your cook?" I cried.

"Here I was informed that the vessel's cook had a taste for navigation."

"That is he," said the young captain, pointing to a negro in the after part of the vessel, wearing a white apron, with a fowl in one hand and a carving knife in the other.

"Come here, John," called the old captain. "Answer this gentleman's questions."

"By what method do you calculate lunar distances?" I inquired. To my amazement he replied:

"It makes no difference. I use the methods of Maskelyne, Lyons or Bowditch, but I prefer those of Dunthorne."

"I could hardly express my surprise."

"Go," said the captain, "lay aside your fowl and bring your books and journal and show your calculations."

"He returned with an armful of books, showed his calculations, made with admirable precision, and answered my questions in correct nautical terms."

Equine Whims.

Race horses have curious likes and dislikes. They are very fond of a companion. In many of the old portraits of horses (Melbourne for one) you will see a cat lying contentedly on the horse's back or purring at his head. John Osborne once told a sporting journalist that a rat was the constant companion of one of his horses, and another horse used to let a lot of mice play for hours on his back when lying down and enjoyed the fun with them.

The following experiences are given by a racing man:

"I was once on a visit to the late Tom Castle at the Childwick stud, where there was staying a certain mare, and she took a fancy to one particular groom. From no one else would she accept her food, and when he used to take her oats in she would get at the door side of the box and not allow him to go out again for hours together. A plan had to be devised for him to do so, and a hole was made under the manger big enough for him to get through, and this he used to do daily. One day, however, the mare espied him doing it and caught him by the leg of his trousers. The man got away the worse for the loss of his trousers leg. He made a sorry sight as he walked home and was the laughingstock of his mates for a long time after. He would never enter the mare's box again, while the mare was disconsolate for weeks after."—London Tit-Bits.

Charged $5 For "Sass."

A story is told of Fanny Kemble, whose favorite summer resort was Lenox, that on her first season there she employed a self-respecting villager who had a comfortable turnout to drive her about. He, feeling it to be his duty to make the drive as entertaining as possible, began to call her attention to the beauty of the scenery—which she wished to enjoy undisturbed—and to tell her who lived in certain houses as they passed along, until finally Mrs. Kemble, being unable to stand it any longer, said in the high tragedy manner somewhat peculiar to her, "I have engaged you to drive for me, sir, and not to talk."

The driver ceased talking, pursed up his lips and in all their subsequent drives his only remarks were such as he found necessary to address to his horses. At the end of the season he handed in his bill for the summer services. Running her eye down its awkward columns she paused at an item that she didn't understand. "What is this, sir? I cannot comprehend it."

With equal gravity he replied: "Sass, $5. I don't often take it, but when I do I charge."

She paid the bill without comment and continued to employ the same driver during many summers she spent there.

Can't Miss It

So many ailments are purely nervous affections, that you can hardly miss it if you try Dr. Miles' Nerve. It restores nervous energy—and through its invigorating influence upon the nervous system, the organs are strengthened. The heart action is better; digestion improved, the sluggish condition overcome, and healthy activity re-established.

"Dr. Miles' Nerve is worth its weight in gold to me. I did not know what ailed me. I had a good physician but got no relief. I could not eat, sleep, work, sit or stand. I was nearly crazy. One day I picked up a paper and the first thing that met my eyes was an advertisement of Dr. Miles' Nerve. I concluded to try it and let the doctor go, and I did so. After taking two bottles I could dress myself. Then I began taking Dr. Miles' Heart Cure and now I can work and go out, and have told many the benefit I have received from these remedies and several of them have been cured by it since. I am fifty-nine years old and pretty good yet."

ANNA R. PALMER, Lewistown, Pa.

Dr. Miles' Nerve is sold by your druggist, who will guarantee that the first bottle will benefit you. If it fails, he will refund your money.

How Snake Poison Kills.

The action of poisons upon the system is and always has been one of the most interesting of subjects. Just how and why it kills have been determined through a series of experiments made by scientists. The following description is one of the best and most lucid of any that has been given to the public: "The venom may be roughly separated into two parts, one acting upon the blood and the other upon the nerves. When injected it immediately begins to create terrible destruction in the blood vessels. The walls of the veins are eaten away, and an internal hemorrhage takes place. While this is going on a portion of the venom is attacking the nerves. Particularly susceptible to its ravages is the 'vasomotor' system, a nerve center which controls the muscles of respiration. Paralysis takes place in these organs, and the victim generally dies from an inability to breathe."—Exchange.

Only three more concerts on Manchester Field for this summer. Those thus far given have been pretty good ones, too.

Who is your candidate for Representative to the General Court?

Fourteen miles of crimson rambler rose bushes were in bloom at one time at Mr. T. W. Lawson's Dreamworld farm at Scituate. It was probably the greatest rose show in the world.

That Arlington has no need of a steam fire engine was well illustrated at the Spy Pond House fire. The building is large, is located at almost the outer edge of the town, an unusual distance from hydrants, the fire had gained great headway, and yet our firemen were able to cope with it. The calling of the Cambridge steamer was simply a precautionary measure. All talk about Arlington needing a steamer is rank nonsense. [Arlington Advocate] The day may come when it will have need of a steamer.

Mrs. Folsom who was recently injured by falling from an electric car in Arlington is a descendant of the Pierce family of Arlington, and is the eldest daughter of Thaddeus Pierce. She is a member of the Pierce Family Ass'n.

Mr. William J. Daly who was admitted to the bar last week is well known in Winchester for his activity in town affairs. He is also a well-known business man and prominent in the ranks of the democracy. He has always been an active worker in the Knights of Columbus and has been honored by being selected as grand knight and district deputy. He has also served as president of the Boston retail clothing salesmen's benefit association.

Senator Riley of Woburn will represent this district in the next Legislature. He has been a pretty good senator, too.

The firemen are now being given more practice than has been the case for some years past. Actual fires, being so few, do not keep the men in trim.

Haven't had a stormy Saturday for two months or more. This attests to the popularity of the half holiday.

Supt. Myers has added an early car Sunday Morning for the convenience of those attending the early mass at St. Charles church, Woburn. The car is expressly for those living in the southern part of Woburn and will leave Winchester at 6:30 a. m., arriving in Woburn at 6:52. The car will leave Woburn at 6:27 a. m. and go as far as Winchester centre and return.

Judging from what has been printed in the daily papers, the hearings so far inquiring into the business methods of the New England Telephone & Telegraph company have shown the representatives of the company in very favorable light and that not much is being gained in the effort to throw discredit upon their methods of doing business. The whole scheme appears to be to open up the entire business of the company for the benefit of a rival concern.

The many friends of Mabel Hargrove daughter of patrolman Hargrove are pleased to hear of her favorable condition after an operation for appendicitis, performed at the Boston Homeopathic Hospital.

Mr. Charles F. Maxwell of Highland avenue left Wednesday for an extended business trip through the West.

In a foursome tourney at the Winchester Country Club Monday, H. T. Bond made a new record for the 18 hole course of 69, beating his previous mark of 73. The professional record for the course, made by Willie MacGuire, is 70.

Mrs. F. A. McGrath of Pleasant street has just returned from a two weeks trip to New York.

George Bigley (tailor) Tel. 1244.

The fire department was called to two brush fires on Wednesday, one near the freight yard, off Swanton street, and the other for a fence on Clark street. The extreme heat of the past two weeks has burned the grass to tinder in many places, and vegetation of all kinds shows its effects.

Miss Laura B. Tolman left Monday for Branchville, New Jersey, where she will be one of a house party until Monday when she will be joined by her mother and Miss Flora Richardson. The party will then make a week's trip up the Hudson and around home through the Berkshire's.

Mr. Arnold Lawson of this town had horses entered in all three of the trotting events at the Gentlemen's Driving Club races at Readville on Wednesday. With Mr. Lawson driving three seconds and a first were captured. Dreamold Tower Keeper, br. h., won the class C event in 2:23. The other horses entered were: Maid to Dreamold, Dreamold Priores, and Lady Dreamer.

Mr. Charles Ober, while mowing a lawn recently was poisoned so badly by arsenate of lead that he was obliged to take to his bed, and has been under the care of a physician ever since. The poison from the grass entered his arm while perspiring, and went through his entire system, in his back, shoulders, etc. He is doing well, is able to be out but is still under the doctor's care. [Stoneham Enterprise.]

The Woburn Journal in an article on the servant girl question in Winchester says: "The kitchen maid question keeps our good house matrons in a perpetual stew and worry of mind. The maids won't stay. They demand and get the highest wages; insist on privileges that, a few years ago, would have been outrageous; mad if they are not allowed to entertain their beaux in the parlor three evenings in a week; and then off they go and leave the mistresses in the lurch. I sometimes wonder if the mistresses themselves are wholly blameless, and are not, in part, at least, responsible for the unsatisfactory condition of the servant girl question. Human nature is pretty much the same in kitchen and parlor, and the absence of commonsense and due allowance for human frailties, upstairs and down, is often the cause of trouble that might easily be avoided."

THE WINCHESTER STAR.

VOL. XXVII. NO. 8.

WINCHESTER, MASS., FRIDAY, AUGUST 23, 1907.

PRICE, FIVE CENTS

THE PARKWAY RIVER.

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

I want to back up all that "Harmony" has written about the excellency of the music, the beauty of the scenery, etc., at the Winchester afternoon band concerts, but I side with "Observations" in his criticisms of the dirty appearance of the river which is the only feature in the gala like Saturday carnival. It seems too bad not to do the work when a very small part of the money now being spent deepening Mystic river in Medford would improve our little river one hundred percent. The stream naturally beautiful, is at present choked up with weeds and street washings which stop the flow of water and make the river look like a mud puddle. Why could not the appropriation last made by the legislature be used for this purpose, which was to improve the water and the banks and lands along the Aberjona river in Winchester. If it would cost too much to dig out the stream, why not flow up Mystic lake another foot thus making the river that much deeper. With the state owning all the land on each side of the stream from Walnut street to Mystic lake and the state holding the lake and controlling it completely, it does seem a great pity that something cannot be done to the stream, not only to beautify it, but to make it more healthy, for it does not seem possible that such stagnant, muddy water can be healthy to paddle upon. It would seem to be the part of wisdom to improve the stream so as to make it pleasant to boat upon before building such a substantial boat landing as is now being constructed near the playground. By the by, why should not the Board of Health examine the river by the playground and report on the healthfulness of the water before authorizing the use of the boat landing? The town has conferred great powers upon this board lately and it should have something to say about our dirty river water when it is used so much for boating from Mystic lake to Winchester center.

CANOEIST.

AN ABLE SUCCESSOR.

Manchester Vt., has happily solved its perplexing problem of finding a successor to Rev. J. Barstow in its call of Rev. Vincent Ravi who was pastor of the Methodist church in Winchester, Mass., for three years but refused the invitation to continue for a fourth term, his convictions leading him to enter the Congregational ministry. Mr. Ravi was received some months ago into membership of Suffolk South Association, after honorable discharge from the Methodist Conference and comes, therefore to his Vermont pastorate as a Congregationalist.

His interesting Italian, Methodist and Scotch Presbyterian ancestry—his father being Rev. Professor S. V. Ravi, recently come from Rome to take charge of Italian work in Boston under the Home Missionary Society, and his mother's relatives for many generations members of the Established Church of Scotland with preachers of distinction among them—together with his own abilities, social and pulpit, promises an eminently successfully pastorate in this intellectual and cultured community. Mrs. Ravi is the daughter of Dr. S. H. Virgin, for 29 years active pastor of Pilgrim Church, New York City. [Congregationalist and Christian World.] Last week Wednesday Mr. Ravi was given a "house warming" party at the parsonage, by a large number of people.

DELAY IN SENDING OUT MOTH BILLS.

Bills for the assessment of moth work done on private property have not yet been sent out, although this work ceased some four months ago. The reason for the delay is supposed to be because the Tree Warden has not found the time to make up the assessments and commit them to the Collector of Taxes, he having his regular business to attend to in Boston. The Collector hoped to be able to send the moth bills out at the same time as the regular tax bills, but he found that to hold them back would greatly delay the collection of the general taxes and discommode the treasurer who needs this money to meet the expenses of the town.

That the Collector was not able to send out the moth bills at the same time as the real estate and personal tax bills will necessitate an extra expenditure of $50 or more for stationery and postage, according to the number of bills.

BAND CONCERT

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

The band concert postponed from last Saturday afternoon on account of the rain, will be given on Manchester field next Wednesday at 8 p. m. Owing to the absence of the band the concert next Saturday will also have to be postponed. The last concert was scheduled for Saturday, Aug. 31, but the second postponed concert will be given after that time.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Vacation Ends Monday, Sept. 9, when Schools Will Open.

Some Information that Parents and Pupils Should Know.

As has already been announced, the fall term will not begin until Monday, September 9. The opening and closing of the sessions in the different schools vary somewhat and are as follows:

High, Wadleigh and Prince, 8:30 a. m. to 1:30 p. m.; Chapin, 8:30 to 11:30 a. m., 1:30 to 3:30 p. m.; Rumford, 9 to 11:45 a. m., 1:15 to 3:30 p. m.; Washington, Highland, Gifford, Mystic and Wyman, 9 a. m. to 12 m., 1:30 to 3:30 p. m.

ADMISSION OF PUPILS.

The following extracts from the Rules and Regulations should be of interest at this time.

"No child under 4 years of age shall be admitted to a kindergarten and no child under 5 years of age shall be admitted to a primary school.

"During the first three weeks of the school year, principals may admit pupils to the kindergarten or first primary grade upon application. After three weeks pupils shall not be admitted to these schools unless qualified to enter an existing class without detriment to its progress.

"During the first ten days of the school year, principals may admit pupils (1) to grades above first primary and below the high school upon presentation of a promotion card in form prescribed by the superintendent; (2) to the high school upon presentation of a grammar school diploma or written permit from the superintendent. After ten days holders of diplomas or promotion cards may be admitted subject to obtaining the approval of the superintendent at his next office hour."

SCHOOL ATTENDANCE.

This is a subject governed by State law, and not by local regulation; it is, therefore, a matter about which the school authorities can exercise no option whatever, but must see to it that the statutes are enforced. The most important sections of the law are these:

"Every child between seven and fourteen years of age shall attend some public day school in the city or town in which he resides during the entire time the public day schools are in session. The attendance of a child upon a public day school shall not be required if he has attended for a like period of time a private day school approved by the school committee of such city or town, or if he has been otherwise instructed for a like period of time in the branches of learning required by law to be taught in the public schools, or if he has already acquired such branches of learning, or if his physical or mental condition is such as to render such attendance inexpedient or impracticable. Every person having under his control a child as described in this section shall cause him to attend school as herein required and if he fails for five day sessions or ten half day sessions within any period of six months while under such control to cause such child, whose physical or mental condition is not such as to render his attendance at school harmful or impracticable, so to attend school, he shall, upon complaint by a truancy officer and conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than twenty dollars."

VACCINATION.

By an act of March 16, 1907, the Legislature amended the law on vaccination, so that it now reads:

"A child who has not been vaccinated shall not be admitted to a public school except upon presentation of a certificate granted for cause stated therein, signed by a regular practicing physician that he is not a fit subject for vaccination."

NO-SESSION SIGNAL.

In very stormy weather a no-session signal for all grades below grade six may be given (under such regulations as the committee may adopt) by the fire alarm whistle—22 three times—at 7:50 a. m. for no morning session, and at 12:50 p. m. for no afternoon session.

NIGHT ALARMS

AROUSED TOWN.

The quiet of the town was disturbed last Saturday night by two alarms of fire and the subsequent answering of these by the department kept the firemen engaged for the greater part of the night.

A fire in the squash house on the farm of William L. Thompson on Ridge street, in the Hill district, called the firemen out shortly after nine o'clock. Mr. Thompson and his men fought the fire alone for some time with wet blankets and had the flames well confined when the Arlington chemical, which had also been called, arrived. The Winchester department had nothing to do when it arrived, but the long run over and return prevented the all out signal from being sounded until eleven-thirty. The damage done was about $75 and the cause unknown.

The second alarm was rung in at 2:30 a. m., the blaze being in one of Dr. Church's houses on Clark street, occupied by Napoleon S. Ferland. This blaze caught in some drawers in a closet in the dining room, and occupied the attention of the firemen until nearly dawn. The house was badly smoked up.

The two alarms during the night broke the rest of more than one of the staid stay-at-homes, and inquiries concerning the fires were numerous on Sunday morning.

A STRAW.

While the members of Judge Littlefield's excursion of last week were comfortably seated in a deck stateroom of the Gloucester boat enjoying the scenery of the North Shore, one of the members suggested that the party take a vote as to who would represent Winchester next winter in the lower branch of the Legislature. The first ballot was as follows:

Dr. Blaisdell	3
F. M. Symmes	2
C. N. Harris	1
R. E. Joslin	1

There being no choice a second ballot was taken with the following result:

Dr. Blaisdell	6
F. M. Symmes	1

PHYSICAL CULTURE

IN THE SCHOOLS.

The School committee has appointed as supervisor of physical culture in the schools, Miss Virginia K. Chandler of Boston for the coming winter.

RUNAWAY INJURES THREE.

A serious runaway, resulting in the injury of two persons seriously and one other not so severely, took place on Main street at Cutter's Village on Tuesday afternoon. A horse attached to a light wagon loaded with produce became frightened by a train and the driver being unable to control it, ran away throwing the two occupants of the wagon out and then collided with a buggy, seriously injuring an elderly woman.

The wagon was driven by H. S. Montgomery of Mishawum road, Woburn, who had with him his nephew, Weldell McKean.

When the horse became unmanageable owing to the noise of the train McKean slid out over the back of the wagon, receiving a badly scraped knee and a sprained wrist. His uncle stuck to the seat until the wagon suddenly slewed in the car track, which threw him out. He was dragged some distance, nearly tearing off one of his ears and being badly bruised, internal injuries being feared. He is 62 years of age.

The team then collided with a buggy driven by Mr. A. A. Sampson of Woburn street, West Medford, who was with his wife. The force of the impact completely carried away both wheels on one side of the buggy, letting it down onto the street. Mr. Sampson was not hurt, but his wife was severely bruised and internal injuries were feared.

Fr. Francis E. Rogers of St. Mary's Church was on the street and witnessed the affair, rendering valuable aid to the injured people. Mr. Montgomery was taken into the home of Mrs. Fred Branch nearby, and people in the vicinity rendering aid to the others. The police were telephoned and doctors summoned, Mr. Montgomery being removed to Dr. Cumming's office where his head was sewed up. Later he was taken to his home. The other injured parties were treated on the spot and removed to their homes. Both teams were damaged badly, although the horses were not injured seriously.

HOOK AGAIN UNSNAPPED.

Another serious runaway by the fire horses while attached to a watering cart was narrowly averted on Wednesday noon. The cause was the same as the runaway of these horses last week, the unhooking of a rein. Driver McCarthy had just filled the wagon with water at Common street when the tossing of the horses heads unfastened the snap of one rein and they tried to bolt. He held them pluckily, but could not prevent their dragging the cart over the curb and onto the common. Luckily Chief Irving L. Symmes of the fire department and bystanders caught the bridle almost at the start and succeeded in stopping them.

The great strength of the horses was amply shown by the ease with which they pulled the heavy wagon full of water and with the brakes on up over the bank and curbstone onto the common. The usual group of weary citizens were sleeping under the trees and they had a lively scramble to reach a place of safety.

A RELIC OF THE OLD CANAL.

Mr. Henry C. Miller has an interesting relic of the old Middlesex Canal, a crowbar which was unearthed from the bed of the canal when the sewer was laid in the vicinity of Everett avenue some years ago, at the time Mr. Miller was a member of the Board of Sewer Commissioners. The old canal connected with Mystic Lake and Winter pond, and at the time it was being built this crowbar evidently got lost in the soft dirt, as it was found by one of the men working on the sewer under some crib work that had been used for some purpose. The implement was found in a good state of preservation and turned over to Mr. Miller. It was one of the old fashioned hand made crowbars, and as a relic of the old and famous canal is of considerable value. Mr. Miller intends to turn it over to the Historical Society to be placed among the many other interesting things to be found in the collection in the Town Hall.

SENCABAUGH—SHERIDAN.

Miss Mary A. Sheridan, proprietress of the restaurant at No. 7 Church street, and Harold Sencabaugh, also of this town, were united in marriage by Fr. F. E. Rogers of St. Mary's church, on Wednesday evening at eight o'clock. The best man was Michael Winn of Boston and Miss Mary Murphy of this town was maid of honor.

A wedding supper was served after the ceremony at the home of the bride, followed by a general reception in Waterfield hall from 9 until 2.

Mr. and Mrs. Sencabaugh will reside on Church street.

BASE BALL.

Winchester A. A. will play ball with Houghton & Dutton on Manchester Field, Saturday afternoon at 3:30.

CORNER STONE LAID.

Members of Second Baptist Church and Masons Place Stone.

Minister Not Present at the Exercises—Brief History of the Society.

The corner stone of the new Second Baptist Church (colored) on Winchester street was laid with Masonic services last Saturday afternoon. The hour for the commencement of the exercises was two o'clock but it was not until an hour later that the officers of Prince Hall Lodge of Boston marched down the street from the residence of Mr. Skanks on Harvard street where the lodge had been opened in due form. Rev. G. F. Coles, the pastor, was not present, so the committee in charge had asked Mr. Edward F. Maguire to make the introductory address, but through some misunderstanding he was not called upon although he was present, so that this part of the program was omitted. Aside from the Masonic Chaplain, Rev. Nathaniel Young, no other minister was present. Why Rev. Mr. Coles, the pastor was not in attendance at this important stage in the history of the Church was not stated. At the conclusion of the exercises several young girls and boys bearing flowers marched to the corner stone singing "Gathering the Sheaves" and deposited the flowers on the stone.

After the stone had been placed in position the Worshipful Master spoke as follows:

BRETHREN AND FRIENDS:—

In response to an invitation from the officials of the Second Baptist Church of Winchester, the Most Worshipful Prince Hall Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of Massachusetts, is present to lay in due and ancient form, the corner stone of this church. That duty has been performed, and our fraternity will regard with growing interest the erection, completion and occupancy of this new structure, whose purpose is for the worship of God.

The purpose for which this proposed building stands is in hearty accord with Masonic teachings. We lawful Masons are true and faithful to the laws of our country, and are engaged by solemn obligations to erect magnificent buildings, to be serviceable to the brethren, and to fear God and the Great Architect of the Universe. Religion and Masonry are closely related.

We lay this corner stone today because the structure will stand through the passing years as the Christian home and the place of worship for the people of this community, and we are glad to perform the important and interesting service of laying the corner stone of this building, which is going to stand for the good of the town of Winchester, erected by the efforts of this struggling membership. It is we believe destined to be a center of religious activity, in this beautiful town, one of the most beautiful in Massachusetts. Out of this activity will come the desire for a larger and nobler life, a higher citizenship.

Our ancient fraternity is in sympathy with all that makes for the public good, and is opposed to social disorder and industrial tumult. Whatever is for the universal good, that helps to better the condition of mankind, that brings different classes of men to a common ground, that makes for the betterment of our race and our country, the Most Worshipful Prince Hall Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of Massachusetts, gives to it its cordial support. It stands for progress and peace. These ceremonies performed this afternoon, come down to us hallowed, and by tradition, so today we lay this stone, firmly believing that this church building will serve holy purposes, and bring joy and peace as well as pleasure to the people of this town.

In the consecration of this stone, the Masonic elements, corn, wine and oil have been used, their service is of the highest antiquity. We bring these elements into this consecration service as symbolizing the strength, satisfaction and delight which shall mark the completion of this work. As freely as we pour our symbols upon this stone, may the blessings of Heaven descend upon the enterprises this day so auspiciously begun. May this corner stone safely rest a symbol of the permanence of truth and justice. May the edifice which shall stand upon and over it pass through the several stages of construction until the cornerstone of its completion shall be brought forth with joy and gladness. May its grandest purpose be fully achieved in the continued blessings bestowed upon the present and future generations which shall seek its benefits.

The Masons then marched back to Mr. Skanks' house where the lodge was closed, after which a collation was served.

The building will be 43x27 feet, and in addition to the auditorium will have library, kitchen and pantry. The society has now a membership of about 30 and for some time has been holding services in Waterfield hall, Rev. G. S. Coles is the pastor, the other church officers being William S. Richardson, clerk, Moses D. Glenn and Joseph Whitlock deacons, William Jones and Chesley Fitzgerald, church committee, Joseph Whitlock treas.

The beginning of the Second Baptist church was in Waterfield Hall Building March 11, 1902, by Joseph Whitlock, Matilda Whitlock, Gertrude Guy, who were members of the First Baptist Church of Winchester. These three persons received their letters from the church, Feb. 28, 1902, and the church was organized March 15, 1902, and was recognized in the month of Oct. 1902, by the Boston Eastern Association. Joseph Whitlock, Mrs. Matilda Whitlock and Gertrude Guy were the founders of the Second Baptist Church.

Following is a list of the contents of the box: Wm. S. Richardson, C. B. Richardson coin, 1854, 1857, Joseph Whitlock coin no date, Ethel Richardson coin 1903, Mary M. Chapman coins 1882 and 1871, Bettie Powell coins, one silver spoon and pin, B. F. Gerald coin 1817, 1 pin, Alfred Richardson coin 1902.

The attendance of Church members was not very large, and did not represent the entire colored population of the town which is divided because of dissensions, the other faction being known as the New Hope Baptist Church who hold service in the old school building on Cross street. This latter society has purchased a lot of land on Washington street near Cross, and has made part payment for the same, with the intention of erecting a house of worship when their funds will permit. When that time arrives, Winchester will then have two Churches for its colored population, when there is but room for one.

SOME QUESTIONS.

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

As you in your last issue, named three aspirants for the Republican nomination to the General Court in our 27th district I wish to ask these men through you their position on important questions to come before the Legislature. In this issue I ask Mr. Coit to tell the people in the district his stand on the merger. Will he if elected vote to merge the B. & M. and N. Y. & N. H. R. R.

Pres. Tuttle is in favor of the merger and Mr. William B. Lawrence of Medford, a large stock holder of the B. & M. and an active Republican at the primaries in our district, opposes the merger. Which do you favor? In the interest of the district I await your answer; other candidates will be questioned next week.

WHITEFIELD TUCK.

The locomotive of a special north bound excursion train burst a cylinder on Tuesday evening at eight o'clock when passing the Swanton street bridge. The train narrowly escaped being derailed. Traffic over the main line was held up for more than an hour, all the trains being despatched north by way of the Woburn loop.

Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Tilley are stopping at Newport, R. I.

WINCHESTER WON.

Wilmington gave Winchester a hard rub for victory Saturday on Manchester Field, the latter winning in the 12th inning by a score of 9 to 8. The winning run was scored by Sears on a pretty squeeze play. A home run drive by Sears was a feature, the ball going to the river by the band stand. The score:

Innings 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12
Win. A. 3 0 1 1 0 0 2 0 1 0 0 9
Wilmington 1 0 0 4 0 3 0 0 0 0 0 8
Runs made by Newman, Kenney 2
O'Connor 2, Sears 2, Twombly, Caulfield 2
Doucette, T. Hoban 2, Strong, Farley 2,
J. Hoban, Neilson (Wilmington). Two base hits: Foley and T. Hoban; three base hit Newman; home run, Sears. Base on balls off Strong 2, off Caulfield 2. Struck out Strong 7, by Caulfield 11. Sacrifice hit, Doherty. Umpires Donahue and Doyle. Time 2h 10m.

MENTIONED FOR REPRESENTATIVE.

The following gentlemen have been mentioned for the office of Representative to the General Court, in addition to those printed last week: J. H. Dwinell, Edgar J. Rich, S. W. Twombly, Fred V. Wooster.

ALWAYS TO THE FORE.

Hopedale Conspicuous in the Political as well as the Business World.

Gen. William F. Draper Elected to Congress while Lieut. Gov. Draper Managed the Memorable Campaign of 1892.

Millford Journal Series.

The Town of Hopedale has not only occupied a conspicuous place in the business world, but has been equally conspicuous in the political world. There has hardly been a time since she became a town but what her citizens have occupied a prominent place in politics as well as business.

In 1892, the Republican party had become demoralized throughout the State. They not only suffered defeat by the election of a Democratic governor for the two previous years, but in 1890, the Democratic party had captured seven out of the twelve congressmen. Surrounded by such disheartening conditions, the party leaders began to prepare themselves for a campaign to regain their lost power. The Hopedale district was represented in Congress by the Hon. Geo. Fred Williams and this was not altogether pleasing to the Republicans of the district. The Republicans made an urgent appeal to Gen. William F. Draper to become their candidate for Congress and the Draper-Williams contest attracted wide-spread interest. Congressman Williams had served one term in Congress, and, as a matter of course, was eager for a re-election, and everyone familiar with political campaigns will admit that he is no mean adversary in a political encounter. Gen. Draper, however, with his usual pluck and energy began a most vigorous campaign, following his opponent night after night in a thorough canvass of the district. When the campaign came to an end, Gen. Draper won a victory that placed him in the front ranks as an able and versatile campaigner.

Lieut. Gov. Draper had been elected to the chairmanship of the Republican State Committee and had charge of the campaign throughout the State. The Republicans drafted their strongest men to lead in the congressional contests and had selected the Hon. W. H. Haile of Springfield as their candidate for governor and had nominated an exceptionally strong state ticket. The Democratic party renominated their Democratic congressman and renominated Gov. William E. Russell to head their state ticket.

The Democratic party were thoroughly united as this was a presidential election. The Republicans had re-nominated President Harrison and the Democrats had nominated former President Cleveland and put up an aggressive campaign. The question dividing the two parties was whether or not we should adopt the policy of tariff for revenue only or retain the protective features of the McKinley law which had been enacted only a few months before.

It is to be remembered that in the country at large the Republican party was overwhelmingly defeated, the Democrats not only electing their president but the national House of Representatives, by a tremendous majority, and carried enough state legislatures to secure the control of the United States Senate.

The Republicans of Massachusetts, however, gave President Harrison a majority of 26,000, and while the Democrats re-elected Gov. Russell by a plurality of 3,600 they elected the entire Republican state ticket by handsome majorities and defeated four prominent Democratic congressmen, giving the Republicans nine out of thirteen congressmen, the State having gained an extra congressman since the congressional election of two years before. The results of that campaign were brought about by the hard and systematic work of Eben S. Draper, who applied the same straightforward methods that have always characterized his business career. The citizens of Hopedale, irrespective of party, were highly pleased with the nomination and election of Gen. William F. Draper to represent their district in Congress, and they showed an unusual interest in the success that attended the arduous labors of Eben S. Draper who had the management of that memorable campaign.

LIQUOR SIGNS.

Winchester people are up in arms at the prominently displayed liquor advertisement on one of Donnelly's bill boards on Washington street, in that town, and as a result of the vigorous objections registered by prominent residents, Mr. Donnelly has promised to have the objectionable advertisement removed at once. Stoneham has a similar grievance. The bill board on the Chauncey lot, corner of Main and Marble streets, displays a similar sign extolling the virtues of a certain brand of liquor. Our good citizens should lose no time in following the example of Winchester, and demanding the immediate erasure of the glaring advertisement.

In discussing the matter, the Winchester STAR pertinently remarks that such signs should be removed in the interests of the young people and for the protection of the home. These advertisements are not only an injury to surrounding property, but a direct menace to the future of children who are obliged to pass it daily. Unfortunately there is no law that can compel the removal of objectionable signs of this nature. The legislature should enact a law prohibiting this abuse, or take some action toward their regulation and licensing by local authorities. [Stoneham Independent.]

The people of the Highlands are experiencing the same kind of trouble with obnoxious billboards that Woburn has been having for some years past. It is a shame that the fair scenery of the Highlands, or any other part of the town, should be marred by these ugly and demoralizing rum signs. [Woburn Journal.]

If the people put up a vigorous kick they can force the removal of these liquor signs, as was done in the case of the Winchester sign. The bill introduced in the last Legislature by Mr. J. H. Carter and which was smothered, prohibiting these signs in no licensed towns, was a perfectly proper one and should again be pushed.

ASSESSING REAL ESTATE.

In 1842 the assessors of Boston stopped assessing property at 50 per cent of its estimated value, and for a number of years it was generally understood that Cambridge property was assessed for about 60 per cent, but judging from the present day figures of assessed values, compared with the actual selling prices, it would seem that there is no hard and fast rule, unless it be to assess everything for its full value, and in the residential section the city extracts more than it should from the man who holds the equity and is trying hard to keep his interest charges paid, as is evidenced almost daily by the sales that are made for the assessed value or less. [Cambridge Times.]

High valuations are more objectionable than a high tax rate, as in the former the State and County are much benefited, while in the latter case a city or town receive a larger percentage of the taxes.

HAVE DONE THIS IN WINCHESTER FOR MANY YEARS

An innovation which many townspeople hope will establish a precedent for future boards took place Tuesday evening, when the selectmen held a business meeting that was open to the public. Announcement was made that the meetings of this board—the head of local government—will in the future be wide open to spectators between the hours of 7:30 and 9 o'clock. This is just what many citizens have wanted for years. The arrangement will provide an opportune time for citizens to suggest, present, or discuss matters of local betterment or otherwise that will be brought up from time to time. The hour of 9:30 will give the board plenty of time to go into executive session, if necessary, to dispose of routine or other matters. Whoever is responsible for the innovation deserved the hearty thanks of every citizen. It has long been a matter of considerable speculation to many why business meetings held by boards of selectmen should be any more private than meetings of boards of aldermen. To residents of a town the proceedings of its chief board are as important and of as great interest as are those of a board of aldermen of any city. Often more so. [Wellesley Townsman.]

The meetings of the Winchester selectmen have always been open to the citizens and hardly a meeting night passes but one or more appear and present matters in which they are interested.

A MEMORY OF THE WAR

An Old Soldier's Story of the Battle of Yellow Tavern.

JEB STUART'S LAST FIGHT.

The Wounded General's Heroic Bravery in the Face of Death—Custer's Brilliant Charge as Seen by a Confederate Cavalryman.

"The most brilliant charge I ever witnessed was made by Custer at the battle of Yellow Tavern," said an old Confederate cavalryman. "It was near the beginning of what historians now call the Wilderness campaign."

"I was with Jeb Stuart, General Fitz Lee's division, Wickham's brigade and Phil Sheridan's troops were hanging on us like a pack of hungry wolves, nipping us at every turn."

"We left Hanover Junction about 1 o'clock one night and reached Yellow Tavern before 10 o'clock the next morning. We hadn't more than halted at the Tavern when up comes Sheridan and tries to drive us out. It was a pretty tough struggle, a hand to hand fight, and we fell back from the Tavern, but held our position on the telegraph road leading to Richmond. I was with the battery on the extreme left wing, and it was about 2 o'clock in the afternoon when orders came for the whole division, except the First gins, to dismount."

"It did seem good, I can tell you, after so many hours in the saddle, to stretch out on the ground and take a smoke—that is, all who had anything to smoke. There was just one pipeful among that whole battery, and the boy who owned it passed it down the line, and each man took his turn puffing at it. When it was gone we all began to speculate on what deviltry Sheridan would be up to next and how Jeb Stuart would head him off. It wasn't long before some fellow wished for a drink of water."

"You know how it is. When one man wishes for water the whole company begins to swear they are dying of thirst. Jack Saunders and I took a bunch of canteens and started over the hill to a spring that he had seen that morning. I was on my hands and knees over the spring when I heard Saunders' grunt of surprise."

"There, only a few hundred yards away, was a considerable body of cavalry. Sure that it was our right wing, I wondered to see them mounted and in ranks. Just then the voice of an officer rang out:

"'Cavalry! Attention! Draw sabers!' The entire line moved forward at a quick walk, and as the officer wheeled his horse I saw his face. My God, it was Custer! The situation came to Saunders and me like a flash. We threw down the canteens and started back to the battery on a dead run."

"'Trot!' Custer's voice rang out again. Then he shouted, 'Charge!'

"With wild cheers, his cavalry dashed forward in a sweeping gallop, attacking our entire left wing at the same time. We saw our battery taken, our line broken and our men running like sheep. Saunders and I had but one thought—to join our fleeing company. As we reached the telegraph road above the din of the battle I heard Jeb Stuart's voice. There he was, making a stand with a handful of men around him."

"It seemed but a moment before Custer's troops were coming back as fast as they had gone forward. They had met the First Virginians. We greeted them with the rebel yell and the last charge in our weapons. Jeb Stuart cheered us on—ah, how he cheered us! I gave them my last shot and was following with my weapon clubbed when I saw a man who had been dismounted and was running out turn as he passed our rally and fire his pistol."

"Jeb Stuart awayed in his saddle. It was only for a moment; then his voice rang out, cheering his struggling troops. The enemy rallied just across the road and fired a volley into the little band gathered around Jeb Stuart. His horse sprang forward, with a scream of agony, and sank down on its knees. As we lifted the general off the young officer who was helping me exclaimed:

"'My God, general, you are wounded! Your clothes are soaked with blood! You must leave the field, sir!'

"'No,' General Stuart answered; 'I will not leave until victory is assured. Get me another horse!'

"When I returned with the horse he was seated with his back against a tree, and when he tried to get up, weakened by loss of blood, he sank back again."

"'Go!' he commanded us. 'I am done for. Fitz Lee needs every man. I order you to go!'

"We cannot obey that order, general, the young officer told him, and I'll never forget the look that came over his face when he faced the general. 'We must carry you to a place of safety, however the battle goes.' 'It must not go against us,' Stuart replied, and the thought seemed to put fresh vigor in his body. 'You must put me on my horse and keep me there. My men must not know that I am wounded!'

"We lifted him on his horse, and, mounting our own, we held him in his saddle. When the tide of the battle turned, supported between us, he made a last effort to rally his fleeing troops. 'Go back, men!' he cried. 'Go back, men! Go back and do your duty!'

"We felt him sway in his saddle. The young officer turned our horses' heads to the rear, and we carried our fainting general from the field, still holding him upright in the saddle. That was Jeb Stuart's last battle and Custer's most brilliant charge."—Washington Post.

A Hair Dressing

Nearly every one likes a fine hair dressing. Something to make the hair more manageable; to keep it from being too rough, or from splitting at the ends. Something, too, that will feed the hair at the same time, a regular hair-food. Well-fed hair will be strong, and will remain where it belongs—on the head, not on the comb!

Royal Arch and Japanese Village. One of the picturesque attractions at Wonderland.

WONDERLAND.

Alice is coming soon to Wonderland. In brief, elaborate preparations are being made for a great mardi-gras festival the concluding two weeks of the season at this famous Revere Beach recreation park beginning Sept. 2, when Wonderland will indeed be a fairyland with spectacular entertainment of surpassing beauty. The programme will be the most ambitious and have more costly features than were ever before presented at any similar park.

Music is always a strong feature at Wonderland and rightly so, for there is hardly a stronger attraction for a hot summer afternoon or evening than a first class band concert. The band plays twice daily in the new and magnificent $10,000 music court. Besides these concerts, almost every attraction in the park has a musical hallyloo, such as Manning's brass band in front of "Fighting the Flames," the plantation warblers and banjoists with "The Mysterious Miss Jones of London," the Waverly Orchestra, led by Thomas R. O'Connor, in the big, cool hall; the harmony in front of the "Rocky Mountain Hold Up" and the "Mexican Bull Fight," the siren of "Love's Journey" and even the almost countless wind bells of the Japanese village.

Dublin Castle.

The name of Dublin castle is more formidable than its appearance. When it was built in the thirteenth century it was, doubtless, with its four great towers and its deep moat, a thing of beauty compared with the present miscellaneous welter of buildings gathered round two ugly squares. Supposed to have been begun by a grandson of Henry L. Meyer Fitz Henry, it was completed by Henry De Loundres in 1223. In those days—the days of its life as a real castle defending a city—a river ran past the building. The Poddie still runs, but it keeps its obscure course under the pavement of the lower castle yard. It was not until well into the reign of Elizabeth that the castle was first used as the official residence of the lord lieutenant, then described as the "lord deputy." Although it has ever since retained that exalted function, Dublin castle was so neglected about two centuries ago as to need rebuilding. Very little of the original structure remains. A MESSAGE FROM MARS.

His Proof That the Planet Was Inhabited and Civilized.

Ebenezer was driving his master's plow straight and true, but none the less with a thoughtful air, as though his thoughts were elsewhere. And so they were; they were soaring far aloft above the plow and the brown earth turned up as to reach Mars.

The previous evening Ebenezer had attended a lecture at the village school-room on "The Heavens," and what the lecturer had said about Mars being inhabited profoundly impressed Ebenezer. As he mechanically guided his horses and his plow something struck him suddenly on the head, and he dropped senseless to the ground. A balloonist passing overhead had accidentally dropped an empty whisky bottle upon Ebenezer's fortunately thick skull. When he recovered consciousness the balloon had passed out of sight, but the cut on his head and the blood stained bottle at his feet remained.

Ebenezer gasped in amazement and awe as he gazed all around the wide brown fields and the blue sky above. Then he picked up the bottle and smelled at it and at once deserted his team in great excitement and set off posthaste for the village.

"I must tell vicar Mars he's 'habited right enough," he muttered. "Civilized, too; they drink whisky."—London Express.

A FASHION FROM WAR.

How Flat Watches Took Place of the Old Time "Turnips."

When the neat man takes into himself a watch as thin as parchment he little thinks that that thin watch results from army regulations.

Up to the time of the allies taking Paris the ordinary watch was convex in shape and called from its outline a "turnip." The officers of the Russian and other armies objected to this because its bulbous form made the uniform of a man on parade look untidy, whether it were carried in the coat or the fob. In Paris, however, they found that the watchmakers of the Palais Royal had contrived a chronometer which got over the difficulty.

Flat watches were the fashion in Paris. The English when they appeared in the streets of the French capital marched in not in gala dress such as the others wore, but in the uniform which they had worn on campaign. Great was the impression which their habiliments created, but they at once adopted the smart flat watch and brought it back to England for our own manufacturers to copy.—London Standard.

A Ready Answer.

When George Francis Train was giving evidence before the metropolitan board of aldermen of London in favor of his scheme for laying a tramway up Ludgate hill, a noble lord among his interlocutors suddenly fixed the old pioneer with his monocle and said:

"May I—ah—ask a question, Mr.—ah—Train?"

"That is what I am here for, my lord," he replied.

"You know, of course, how very narrow is Ludgate hill. Suppose that when I go down to the Mansion House in my carriage one of my horses should slip on your—rails and break his leg, would you pay for the horse?"

The reply came like a flash. "My lord, if you could convince me that your horse would not have fallen if the rails had not been there I certainly should pay."—Hampers Weekly.

Tit For Tat.

"A United States senator," said a young physician, "addressed the class I was graduated from on our commencement day. He advised us in this address to be broad and generous in our views. He said he once saw two famous physicians introduced at a reception. They were deservedly famous, but they were of opposing schools, and the regular, as he shook the other by the hand, said softly:

"I am glad to meet you as a gentleman, sir, though I can't admit that you are a physician."

"And I," said the homeopathist, smiling faintly, "am glad to meet you as a physician, though I can't admit you are a gentleman."

WHAT IS THE SOIL?

Extent of This Precious but Limited Surface Material.

If you were asked to name the most important of mineral substances, you would doubtless hesitate for a moment and weigh the respective merits of coal, iron and the precious metals. Only after some consideration probably would it occur to you that these highly useful substances have insignificant value as compared with that familiar mixture of ground up minerals which we call the soil.

Man could make shift to live and even in a measure to progress without glass or cement or metals, but his very life depends upon the little film of triturated rock that is spread over the surface of the globe in the form of earth. The constituents of this are metamorphosed into the substance of plants and ultimately into the tissues of man himself.

Properly to understand the matter, however, it must be comprehended that the soil is no important part of the earth's structure, except from a strictly human standpoint. At best it is only a little film of material frayed off from the jacket called the earth's crust. To a giant of such size that the earth were to him what an apple is to us the soil would be no more than the bloom on the peach.

With his handkerchief he could wipe off the films of water that we call oceans, like so much dew, and polish off the soil as we rub the bloom from an apple, clear down to the rock foundations, without changing appreciably the size or the weight of his toy.

To scrape away the entire crust of the earth (so far as known to us) would be but to remove an infinitesimal shell, and the total bulk of air and oceans aggregates only 7 per cent of that shell. Yet the oceans cover three-fifths of the earth's surface and, as measured in human terms, are some miles in depth. How, then, shall we estimate the insignificance of the little powdering of soil, only a few feet in thickness, that is dusted over the remaining two-fifths of the earth's crust.—Appleton's.

THE FLIRTING LOBBY.

Feminine Visitors to the English House of Commons.

Women visitors to the English house of commons are relegated to the semi-seclusion of a gallery provided with a heavy iron grating. When a gentleman of conversation and light laughter floats down from the ladies' gallery members look up and see through the interstices of the heavy grating delicate tints of soft fabrics, the bloom of a fair cheek or the gleam of a bare white arm.

Amusement and curiosity, of course, bring the ladies to the house of commons, but these cannot be the only motives. The fair visitors would hardly trouble to array themselves in such ravishing evening toilets merely to sit in the gallery, that ill lighted den where dresses are not seen to advantage.

No doubt it was with a view to the prevention of flirting that the rule was laid down that if a member desires to converse with a lady in the gallery he may do so for five minutes only. Members, especially the young and impressionable, make frequent visits to the cage. Of course it is for the purpose of pointing out the celebrities on the benches below.

But if in doing so he should exceed five minutes the gallery attendant is empowered to call his attention, courteously, but firmly, to the fact that he has outstayed his limit. It is to be feared that this official, in evening dress, with a chain and badge, often interrupts, by his "Time's up, sir," whisperings of soft nothings in the ladies' gallery, or the "flirting lobby," as it has been nicknamed.—London Ladies' Realm.

BOSTON LETTER

General Bartlett's Friends Are Making Great Claims of Strength

DOYLE IN HAZARDOUS PLACE

There Have Long Been Rumors of Bribery in Connection With Passage of Various Loan Bills

During the past week the friends and workers who are engineering the campaign for the nomination of General Charles W. Bartlett have put in some extremely active and effective labor, and they say they believe the situation today gives them ground for claiming a majority of the delegates to the state convention to be held Oct. 5.

They are especially pleased that the convention is to be held in Springfield rather than in Boston. There is much less opportunity, in their opinion, for the machine Democrats, who are backing Mr. Whitney, to pack the hall in Springfield than there would be if the convention were held in Boston. Springfield has always been regarded as an ideal convention city, by reason of its splendid hotel accommodations and its general accessibility. In the old days it used to be the custom to hold state conventions in Worcester and Springfield rather than in Boston. Worcester was considered the heart of the commonwealth and more accessible than the Hub. Very likely the conventions might have been held in Worcester to this day, had it not been for its great lack of suitable hotels.

Has Bartlett the Goods?

The Bartlett men claim that they have a great majority of the prominent Democrats outside of Boston with them and cite such names as those of Col. John P. Sweeney of Lawrence, Mayor Kane of the same city, former Mayor Charles J. Barton of Melrose, John O'Garra of Brockton, Daniel T. O'Connell of Boston, and a great many others.

Chairman Buntin of the ward 20 Democratic city committee in Boston declares that General Bartlett will be nominated without any great contest when the convention meets in Springfield. He declares that the Whitney men are making a tremendous bluff, and that they have not the goods which they claim.

The men at Whitney headquarters claim to be extremely optimistic as to the outcome of the campaign. There appears to be a thorough conviction with them that the state will declare for the Brookline man by a very substantial margin, although there is some reticence as to giving out figures or making absolutely definite claims. Those who seem to have a pretty general knowledge of what is going on within the Democratic ranks predict the nomination of Mr. Whitney by a wide margin, and there appears to be considerable ground for their cheerfulness and optimism.

Brown May Be Left

In the meantime it is becoming apparent that the Democrats may not intend to nominate E. Gerry Brown of Brockton for lieutenant governor. Mr. Brown would like to receive this nomination and also to have the nomination of the Independence League, in order, as he says, that he may be elected this fall. He assumes that with both nominations he could do better than last year, while those who know the situation feel very confident that he would do very much worse, for more people know him now than knew him then.

But the Democrats do not feel like nominating Brown, knowing, as they do, that the Independence League, whose candidate he really is, proposes to put up its own state ticket and to fight the old line parties for all the league is worth. This will be a heavy blow to Gerry, who has been patting himself on the back all summer with the assurance that he was going to be lieutenant governor next year. Mr. Brown is nothing if not an optimist.

Fitzgerald's Hard Knocks

The Democratic machine in Boston has had a number of hard knocks in the last few weeks. It is very evident that the finance commission, which is inquiring into the condition of the finances of the city of Boston in an endeavor to correct, as far as possible, the bankruptcy of the city by the present administration, is finding a good many things which were previously covered up so that it was very difficult to get at the true situation.

That commission has already recommended to the mayor that additional employees, selected by him and sent to the board of aldermen for confirmation, be held up for the present, at least. By this course it is possible that the taxpayers may be relieved of unnecessary and burdensome taxation for the benefit of these particular individuals. They also recommend a heavy cut in the water loan measure, from $300,000 to $75,000.

City hall is greatly disturbed over the probing which is going on and shows it in various ways, from the highest officials down to the lowest.

Suspicious Loan Bill Practices

It has long been suspected by the persons conversant with the method of doing things practiced at city hall, that in many cases loan bills were forced through the city government by the use of improper means. The charge has often been made in newspapers that various loan bills were passed by

THE DRUG STORE.

Its Evolution From the Apothecaries of the Colonies.

During the seventeenth century the druggist came to America and closely followed English precedents, modifying them, however, by the practice of the Indians, with whom he came in contact. Quack apothecaries began to spring up in the new land, and in 1636 the colony of Virginia passed a law which among other things regulated the prices and fees of the druggist. At this time it was fashionable for the druggists to practice surgery in addition to pharmacy, and the Virginia colony contained a large number of people who were proficient in both professions. In Massachusetts the business was largely in the hands of Indians, schoolmasters, old women and teachers. The Salem witchcraft delusion retarded the spread of the druggist for some time in the Bay State, for the popular impression fastened on the apothecaries a suspicion that they sold the potions that were supposed to produce the spells. Among those who suffered persecution at this time mixers of medicine appear to have been prominent.

The drug shop had not yet become a distinct institution. It was usually a branch of the grocery or spice business. In 1647 one Giles Forman of Boston, had, however, firmly established himself as devoting special attention to pharmacy. In 1688 the first distinctive drug store in America was opened in Boston by William Davies.—Lippincott's.

A Horse's Memory.

My father had a fine driving horse that was intelligent and had learned a number of tricks. One night he was stolen, and no trace was found of him for nearly two years when, one day, father met a stranger driving the horse and of course claimed him. In the dispute which followed father remarked that if it was the horse stolen from him he would on being unharnessed go to the gate, lift the latch, open the gate, go around the barn, slide the bolt, open the door and go into the third stall. The man agreed to give the horse up on those terms. They drove home and up the lane to the barn and unharnessed the horse, when, without a moment's hesitation, he performed the feats father said he would.—Chicago Tribune.

A Cat Monitor.

I once owned two cats, one a gray, the other a black. Daily I placed a bowl of milk on the floor for their disposal. One day at the usual hour their meal was served, but only the gray cat was present. She drank about half of the milk and then walked out, only to reappear an hour later, the black cat following. As soon as they entered the house Maltie (which was the gray cat's name) seized Blackie by the ear and led her to the bowl of milk. That was the first and last time that Blackie wasn't present at meal hour.

Good He Wasn't Upright.

A certain judge, while passing through the scene of an election riot, had a large stone thrown at his head, but as he happened to be in a stooping posture at the time it passed over him. "You see," said he, addressing his friends afterward, "that had I been an upright judge I might have been killed."

Awake on the Tip Question.

The regular patron was indignant as the waiter spilled the soup. "You're tipsy!" he exclaimed. "Couldn't be on your tips. See?" responded the waiter, at least not so indignant as to impede his mental processes.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Impure Food.

In the matter of pure food the war department is apparently doing more for its soldiers than the U. S. government or the States for the protection of the health of the people. A certain summer drink that is extensively advertised in this section has been condemned by Dr. Wiley and in accordance with the facts contained in his official report, the war department has prohibited its sale at all army posts. Despite condemnation of this drink, nothing has yet been done to prevent its sale in Massachusetts. Our State Board of Health should certainly do as much for the health of the people of the State as the war department is doing for the soldier.

Needs Improving.

Cross street from the bridge that crosses the Aberjona river through to Main street is in very bad condition, especially at East street where it is dangerous to travel. This street should be rebuilt from the finished part through to Main street, as it is the main thoroughfare from Woburn to Winchester Highlands and is much used by teams and pedestrians. The low bridge of the Boston & Maine no doubt interferes to a great extent with the carrying out of this work, and this should be remedied. The passage under the bridge is but little better than a culvert and during wet weather is almost impassable to pedestrians. There should be more head room for teams and the passageway much widened. It will, however, be an expensive undertaking as the tracks will have to be raised considerably, yet it is absolutely necessary that something be done.

No Need of Haste.

The question of abolishing the grade crossing is a pretty big one, therefore there should be no impatience manifested by its advocates. It is a good deal better to take plenty of time, than to hasten the matter and force upon the town some form of abolition that will result in an injury to the centre. We believe that Mr. Joslin is doing all that he can to push it along, consistent with a solution that will be most beneficial to Winchester for all time. Such an important matter cannot be decided offhand.

The stand taken by the Railroad Commission and the Grade Crossing Commission in the abolition of grade crossings at Dorchester, will, no doubt, have an important bearing on our grade crossing elimination. These gentlemen have ruled that:

"The physical conditions in the neighborhood of the crossings which it is proposed to abolish make any plan for their elimination by depressing the railroad objectionable. Experience proves that while a railroad can be maintained at this low level with reference to tide water, it involves the possible serious interference at times with traffic, and this fact is a sufficient reason why the decision of the special commission to raise rather than lower the railroad is a wise conclusion."

"Obviously no plan ought to be adopted in dealing with these crossings that is not consistent with the best way of dealing with other crossings to be abolished in the future."

"The plan which is presented in this instance is one which upon the whole accomplishes the largest possible benefit with the least interference with private property, and is, therefore, approved."

This decision will no doubt have an important bearing on the plan submitted by the Selectmen, which not only calls for depressing the tracks but interference with a large amount of private property—in fact the entire centre of the town,—so that it may be found necessary in the end to agree on some other plan or else submit to the tracks be elevated through the centre of the town. Mr. C. E. Redfern, a short time before his death, told the writer that he believed his two bridges plan was the best yet presented and that it would be adopted in the end. As far as injury to property is concerned and the non disturbance to present conditions of the railroad, with practically no change in the centre of the town, his plan is the most economical yet presented, and will not be found so objectionable as some citizens are led to believe. It not only has the indorsement of Boston & Maine officials but likewise many prominent citizens who have carefully studied Mr. Redfern's plan. However, in view of the stand taken by these two commission, it would be well for the town to be prepared to present an alternative plan when the time arrives.

SAVED BOY FROM DROWNING

Yesterday forenoon as Lindsay Beale, son of Rev. Francis L. Beale of Blanchard, Kendall & Co., was passing along Main street near the Mill pond he was just in time to see a boy tumble off the dam into the water. Young Beale, who is only nine years old, jumped over the railing at the street and seizing a piece of telegraph wire which was lying on the shore succeeded in hooking it in the drowning boys clothes and pulling him near enough to catch his hand, rescuing him from death. The boy had been playing on the flash boards of the dam when he lost his balance and fell into the water. He is a son of Sidney Stevens of Purrington place, and certainly owes his life to the pluck of young Beale.

Woburn has had an impure water scare. There was no occasion for alarm however, as the water of Horn Pond was found perfectly pure.

Lawson and Whitney are having it hot and heavy.

Congressman McCall does not believe in too much government interference with State rights.

Obedience of Orders.

A naval commander in the reign of Queen Anne was ordered to cruise with a squadron within certain limits on the coast of Spain. Having received information that a Spanish fleet was in Vigo, beyond his limits, he resolved to risk his personal responsibility for the good of his country. He accordingly attacked and defeated the Spanish fleet with uncommon gallantry. When he joined the admiral under whom he served, he was ordered under arrest and was asked if he did not know that by the articles of war he was liable to be shot for disobedience of orders.

He replied with great composure that he was very sensible that he was, but added, "The man who is afraid to risk his life in any way when the good of his country requires it is unworthy of a command in her majesty's service."

An effort is being made in Malden to have a whiskey advertising sign removed from a conspicuous bill board in Maplewood, and the mayor has been appealed to in the case. Winchester and Wakefield are thus not the only places where the inhabitants are aroused over the display of obnoxious bill boards. In this connection an exchange remarks that the French law gives the authorities of every village complete control over posters. "No one," writes our correspondent, "is permitted in France to deface streets and public places with crude ostentatious announcements of his business or other subject. Billboards are infrequent in Paris and are generally built permanently into a wall, where they are taxed according to their superficial area."—(Wakefield Item.)

OBSERVATIONS.

The Library Trustees should revise their program to the extent of purchasing new books for the summer months instead of not having any new books during that time because so many people are away. Probably most of those who have to remain at home through the heated term can read, and it would seem as if they should not be deprived of new books because so many are able to go. It is up to the Trustees to answer.

The decision of Judge Landis in the Standard Oil cases is absurd and unfortunate and decided discredit to the bench. Undoubtedly he was following in the line of the President's warnings to the big interests to behave, but the people will never stand for such prostitution of their laws and more than that they will not allow the great interests, public and private corporations, to continue to violate them, for if the laws cannot be enforced without confiscation then our government is a failure.

The grand stand on Manchester Field has been much improved in appearance by its coat of paint. Let the good work go on. There are several other things on and about the field that need attention.

So far as the President's address at Provincetown went it was the Pilgrim's monument with the Pilgrims left out. His confounding the Puritan and the Pilgrim was an amazing error for a man like him to make and hard to understand. With all his honesty and courage, he is surprisingly impetuous and lacking in control, and his eating his dinner in twenty minutes at the banquet and clearing out is a fair sample of his actions.

BAD FOR THE WAGE EARNERS.

Judge Grosscup Says Municipal Ownership Would Lower Wages.

Government control and operation would also be found, I think, to have a disadvantageous effect upon the special interest of the laboring man. Labor sometimes gets less than the enterprise employing can afford to pay, but labor never gets more, at least for any length of time, than the enterprise can afford to pay. Lowered efficiency therefore means lowered wages. And public ownership always has been and always will be on this account attended by lower wages. The men who are motormen on the municipal street railways of Glasgow, for instance, get a little less than 13 cents an hour; the motormen of Chicago get from 21 to 24 cents an hour. The locomotive engineer of a German government railroad gets $50 per month; the American locomotive engineer makes easily three times that much. And through the whole schedule of wages paid by public and by private enterprises the same difference runs.

But there is still another side to this objection, what may be called its personal side, the effect of public ownership on organized labor. Much as labor organizations have been abused here and there by opposing interests and much as here and there labor organizations have abused their privileges, it is in labor organizations that the laboring man finds and will continue to find the source of bettered conditions.

Asking for higher wages the one man is unheard. But the many speaking as one make themselves heard. So that the labor organization is the laborers' industrial protector.

But the many speaking as one must have some one to whom to speak, some concrete party with whom to deal. Under government ownership that party would be the whole public. Let not the ready sympathy of the people for alleviative measures such as factory legislation and the like be given too wide a significance, for even there the task was long and hard, nor the readiness of the public to side in at times of labor strikes with the employees. In those situations the public is an outside party, not the other party. Until in some public controlled enterprise there is a demand by the employee for higher wages or changed conditions, some demand that will directly cost the public something in dollars and cents, the laboring man is without proof that the public can be more easily reached than private enterprise.

Something in this line, however, we already know. Government servants, from the highest to the lowest, are the poorest paid people in America. Put man for man, against corresponding grades in private enterprise, the president of the United States against the presidents of the great corporations, cabinet officers against the managers of corporation departments, postal clerks on the railways against express clerks, laborers against laborers, the advantage in every case is with the employee of the private enterprise. And this we know, too—that, though the matter has often been urged, the people at large will not listen to any proposition for increase of pay in the government service. Given then a private employer or the public as employer with whom to deal, the one a thousand times more accessible and infinitely prompt to reach results than the other, to my mind nothing is clearer than that employment by the public would be followed by a severe impairment of the influence and efficiency of the labor organization and of the good it has done for its membership.—Hon. Peter S. Grosscup in American Magazine.

HOW! WHEN! WHERE!

Gas is the only fuel that is ready, how, when and where you want it.

HOW—Your only kindling is a match: then you have a fire in an instant just the size you need, from a pin-point to a flame large enough to roast the biggest joint.

WHEN—Just at the moment you need it. When you are through with the cooking—out goes the flame and you don't either heat up the whole house by keeping a fire going when it is not needed or waste money by burning fuel until you need to use the stove again.

WHERE—The heat is right there below the food to be cooked. You don't have to keep a big fire in a large grate just to boil a pan of water. The fire is right where you need it—and nowhere else.

If you drop into the office or let us send a representative around we can soon prove to you the advantages of gas as a fuel over any other form of heat producer.

STORY OF TWO DUELS.

A Sword Thrust, a Bullet Wound and an Extraordinary Sequel.

When dueling was an actual factor in the social order of this country it had many worthy and notable exponents, including no less distinguished personages than Henry Clay, Andrew Jackson, Alexander Hamilton, De Witt Clinton, Stephen Decatur and others of the same type, but nowhere on this continent was it so much an established institution as in that peculiarly romantic old city of New Orleans. It was woven into the very fabric of the life of the community, and many a crumbling tombstone in the antiquated creole cemeteries bears grim and silent witness to the fact, though to understand the situation more clearly one should breathe, so to speak, the atmosphere of the period.

M. Augustin, who afterward became a district judge and general of the Louisiana legion, was the victor in several encounters in which the temper of the period caused him to be engaged. One in particular is noteworthy on account of the part it played in an extraordinary freak of fortune. Alexander Grailhe was the offending party, though the insult, or rather, provocation, for gentlemen seldom insulted, would in this day be of scant concern. But some cause of action was present, and each was sure that a deadly meeting would certainly follow. They rode together in a carriage with ladies, who, after the duel, commented on their mutual affability during the entire trip, which only serves to show how delicately adjusted was the code of etiquette, especially in the presence of ladies.

They fought at The Oaks, and as soon as the weapons had been crossed and the impressive "Allez, messieurs," pronounced Grailhe, who was high strung and hot blooded—doubtless so under the stress of what he regarded as a grievous provocation—lost his temper and furiously charged his antagonist. Augustin, on the contrary, was cool, collected and agile, parrying each savage thrust until by a tempo d'arrêt (sudden pause), judiciously interpolated into a vicious lunge of Grailhe's, he pierced him through the chest. Grailhe, with one of his lungs perforated, remained for a long time hovering between life and death, and when at last he did come out of his room he was bowed like an octogenarian.

It was now only a question of time for the wounded man, as an internal abscess had formed where it could not be reached—surgery then was not what it is now—and the doctors despaired of saving him. Some time after he had been up and about a quarrel with Colonel Mandeville de Marigny resulted in his challenging that distinguished citizen. This duel was also fought at The Oaks, but as Grailhe was too weak to do himself justice with a sword the weapons chosen were pistols, of fifteen paces, each to have two shots, advance five paces and fire at will. At the first shot, fired simultaneously, the unfortunate man fell forward, pierced by his adversary's bullet, which had entered the exact place of his former and yet unhealed wound. Marigny, with pistol in hand and as placid as a marble statue, advanced to the utmost limit marked out, when Grailhe, who was suffering greatly, exclaimed: "Fire again. You have another shot."

With grave dignity Marigny raised his pistol above his head and fired into the air, saying with feigned politeness, "I never strike a fallen foe." More dead than alive, the stricken duelist was carried home by his friends and consigned to the care of his physicians; but, instead of sinking rapidly, as was expected, he really began to mend and by the following morning was much improved. The ball had penetrated to the abscess which had threatened his life and made an exit for its poisonous accumulations. Some time afterward he walked out of his room as erect as ever and soon regained his health and stately bearing. —Century Magazine.

Psychology of Gambling.

The fundamental basis of the injury done by gambling is a tendency to overrate the chances of winning. When a man speculates by staking, say, $1 on the chance of winning $100, observes an English writer in Nature, the notion of winning $100 makes a big impression on his mind and means something more real to him than the idea that the odds are 200 to 1 against him, say. He forms a clear mental picture of the prize, and the odds do not present the same picture to his mind. Consequently, he exaggerates his prospects.

Appropriate.

A minister, having given out his "notices," was about to read his hymn when he was reminded of one he had forgotten. Stopping, he made this announcement, apologizing for his forgetfulness. Then, much to the amusement of his audience, he began to line out the hymn as follows: "Lord, what a thoughtless wretch am I!"—Judge.

It Wasn't Funny.

"But he's a regular professional funny man."
"I know he is."
"But you referred to him as an 'unconscious humorist.'"

Severe Rebuke.

Constable, the famous painter, once gave a remarkable instance of the sweetness of his temper, which scarcely anything could ruffle. The story was told by Julian Charles Young, whose uncle had witnessed the incident.

He called on Constable one day and was received by him in his front room. After half an hour's chat the artist proposed to repair to the back room to show him a large picture on which he was engaged. On walking up to his easel he found that one of his little boys in his absence had dashed the handle of the hearth broom through the canvas and made so large a rent in it as to render its restoration impossible. He called the child up to him and asked him gently if he had done it. When the boy admitted his act Constable took him on his knee and rebuked him in these unmeasured terms:

"Oh, my dear pet! See what we have done! Dear, dear! What shall we do to mend it? I can't think—can you?"

A Pleasant Sort of Sea.

The power of the surf is a thing about which many of us have but the most hazy ideas, and indeed the ordinary conditions with which we are surrounded prevent us from fully appreciating what it can be at times. The people of the island of Chinopeague, which is about a mile and a half wide, have, however, opportunities for judging this experience, which they must find the reverse of pleasant. On its eastern side and between it and the ocean is Assateague island, which is also a mile and a half wide, but the power with which the waves come is so great that at some places the surf sweeps entirely over both islands.—London Standard.

Council Bluffs Rejects M. O.

The city council has turned down the municipal ownership proposition in connection with the city waterworks plant and voted to grant a new franchise to the water company, whose franchise expired some months ago. The action was taken after a monster petition, signed by almost every business man in the city, had been presented to the council asking that the municipal proposition be killed.—Municipal Journal and Engineer.

What Socialism Would Do.

The substitution of socialism, either absolutely or in a modified form, would be to strike down the best political system which has been thus far devised by the genius or wit of man, and it would undermine the last hope of the lovers of republican government in this world.—Vice President Fairbanks.

SOUND SIGNALS.

Their Unreliability Under Certain Atmospheric Conditions.

At practically every lighthouse of importance on the coasts of this country is some sort of signaling apparatus to be used when weather conditions prevent the lights from being seen. Sometimes it is a bell, sometimes a whistle, sometimes a Daboll trumpet, sometimes a steam siren. The idea is to make a noise which will be heard where ordinarily the light would be seen, to give the mariner warning which a fog prevents the light from giving. Of course, in the case of a first order light, which may be seen twenty miles, the signal is, in part, a failure, only the best and most favorable of conditions carrying a siren sound so far. The signals, of course, have certain characteristics to prevent the hearer from mistaking one signal for another.

At certain times, in certain weather, and more particularly in certain localities, these sound signals behave, as far as their hearers are concerned, in a most erratic manner. In some cases the lighthouse board gets indignant complaints that on a certain date a certain fog signal was silent when it should have sounded. Investigation shows that the signal was sounding at the time, but was, for some inexplicable reason, inaudible to the very ship it was meant to reach. Naturally, such instances have been very carefully investigated, and certain facts have come to light as a result.

It has been found that sound, like light, is sometimes affected by atmospheric conditions and that it will skip about in a most bewildering way. Thus, a fog signal may be heard with ear splitting force a mile from its source and 500 yards farther on may disappear entirely. Yet another 500 yards and it again sounds as strongly as before. The theory in such a case as this is that the sound hits the water and is echoed back from it into the air, to return in a curve of more or less magnitude and again strike the water. The sound, in other words, skips like a stone skillfully thrown into the water, the points of audibility corresponding to the places the water is hit and the areas of silence to the flights of the stone.

This is a simple case. In others the sound forms a circle, a ring of audibility, outside of which there is a silence and inside of which nothing in the nature of a signal can be heard. And to make the matter more puzzling, the conditions sometimes do not appear and the signal acts as it should, while at other and rarer occasions it takes these freaks and falls in its purpose.

As yet no laws have been deduced to cover the cases in point.—Scientific American.

MR. P. W. SWAN

STIRS THINGS UP.

Mr. P. W. Swan, a former well known resident of Winchester, in his new home in Florida takes the same interest in local affairs there that he did here. He was always outspoken in town meeting, and while he may not have that privilege there, he resorts to the papers to give publicity to his views. In a communication in the Atlanta Georgian and News, he thus gives expression to his thoughts on the water system there, a subject he is familiar with as all who attended town meetings in the past will remember:

How long will you people put up with your present water supply from the Chattahoochee river, the worst and most unhealthful water supply of any city in the United States. The very sight of its flowing dirty polluted water and the thought that one has to quench his thirst with such stuff as one sees running down the Chattahoochee river are enough to make one sick. Your water board says that the water is filtered before it is pumped to the city. Yes, you do try to filter it but can you, or do you, with your present apparatus? Or with any apparatus, can you filter the water, so that it is fit for any one to drink, when we take into consideration that the Chattahoochee river is the natural drainage of a large territory, containing many villages and towns above us, whose only source of drainage is the Chattahoochee river, and that the beautiful and lighted city of Atlanta is dependent on such a filthy source as that river must be? Is it not too bad, when our kind Creator sends down upon this Southern land from 5 to 6 feet of pure rain water upon every foot of land each year?

That there should be some way of securing a bountiful supply of this rain water for our lovely city, and there is a way that God has provided for us among the Blue Ridge hills, from 6 to 20 miles from Atlanta. There are many hills and ridges which any good engineer could locate for us, and at an expense which the city of Atlanta could well afford to pay. It would be but a small sum of money compared to the great benefit it would be to the city of Atlanta, to build a dam at the outlet of some ravine where they would find a water-shed large enough to supply and keep full at all times a reservoir of the purest water. If a place could not be found to get our water supply by gravity then find a place where you might have to pump it, which would not cost near so much as it does to pump from the Chattahoochee river now. You are now pumping against over 100 feet head, while from a reservoir in the mountains near here it would not be over 20 feet at the most, and might be much less.

Men of Atlanta, look the idea over and decide what you will do. Will you continue to compel your people to drink the muddy, polluted water of the Chattahoochee river, or will you try to secure the pure water that falls from the skies, the purest water which needs no filtering through your filters and sand tanks, doctored by a liberal supply of alum to destroy the muddy taste? The expense should not be taken into account against the health of the people.

ADIRONDACK AND CANADA RESORTS.

An interesting feature given this year in the Central Vermont railroad's tourists' guide book includes chapters on the famous Adirondacks, Ausable Chasm and the principal summer resorts of lower Canada, which are growing in favor more each year with New England tourists.

The Central Vermont line is the direct route from Boston to both of these Northern resort sections and operates some splendid trains between Boston and New England and that region.

LONG BOW STORIES.

Legends of the Famous Archers of the Remote Past.

Many "long bow" stories may be cited in the literature of the world, and by far the greater part of them had their origin in the remote past. Verkill, in the "Enelid," tells of four archers who were shooting for a prize, the mark being a pigeon tied by a cord to the mast of a ship. The first man hit the mast, the second cut the cord, and the third shot the pigeon as it flew away. The fourth archer, having nothing left at which to shoot, drew his bow and sent his arrow flying toward the sky with such speed that the friction of the air set the feathers on fire, and it swept on like a meteor to disappear in the clouds.

That is a bow and arrow story that tests the strongest powers of credulity. The stories of Robin Hood's archery, illustrated by his wonderful performance as Locksley in Scott's "Ivanhoe," are also a decided strain on one's power of belief.

The famous legend of William Tell is believed by some to have a foundation in fact. There was a Dane named Foke of whom the same story was told, and William of Cloudesley, an Englishman, is said to have shot an apple from his son's head merely to show his skill.

The majority of bow and arrow stories relate to the accurate aim of the archers, but a Frenchman, Blaise de Vigenere, tells one in which the main point is the tremendous force with which an arrow may be propelled if the bow is strong and long enough. According to his own account of the matter, he saw Barbarossa, a Turk, admiral of a ship called the Grand Solymani send an arrow from his bow clean through a cannon ball. Whether the cannon ball had a hole in it or not he neglects to inform us.

Perhaps the most astounding of all stories about arrow shooting is that of the Indians who used to inhabit Florida. It is said that a group of them would form a circle; one would throw an ear of corn into the air; the rest would shoot at it and shell it of every grain before it fell to the ground. Sometimes the arrows would strike the ear of corn so hard and fast that it would remain suspended in the air several minutes, and the cob never fell until the last grain had been shot away.—Chicago Record-Herald.

GOT HIS REVENGE.

The Way Lord Brougham Paid His Debt to George IV.

With all of his knowledge and talent Lord Brougham was eccentric and slovenly in his personal habits. While he was a young and comparatively unknown barrister he was asked to a dinner at which the prince regent presided. Mr. Brougham's hands needed washing. The regent's keen eyes rested on them. He beckoned to a waiter and gave an order which the man heard with a scared face, and then going out he speedily returned with a ewer full of water, soap and a towel.

He carried them to Brougham, presenting them with the prince regent's compliments. The barrister instantly withdrew and never afterward referred to the insult.

Years later, when the prince, now king, tried to divorce his wife, Brougham, as her defender, so vehemently sustained her cause that she triumphed. The king's name was not mentioned during the trial, though the nation knew that he was secretly the prosecutor. Brougham in his speech declared that he saw in the distance the nameless persecutor of his innocent client, smothering with terrible effect Milton's words:

"The other shape,
If shape it might be called,  black it stood as night,
Pierced as ten furies, terrible as hell,
And shook a dreadful dart; what seemed his head

The likeness of a kingly crown had on.
George IV. felt seriously this savage attack. The nation sided with the queen, and her defender had paid his debt with interest.

ON Elizabeth street girls can run a peanut roaster, sell tape and needles and such things from a basket or a bundle upon their shoulders, cry flowers, canvass for anything, and even sell oranges and nuts from a basket, but when they step behind a push cart the complaisance of the street vanishes.

It is not that the girls are desirous to abstain from work, for a father will sit in his doorway and smoke while his daughter trudges past him bent nearly double under the burden of merchandise strapped to her shoulders, and a husband will be equally moderate toward his wife. No; Elizabeth street is indulgent toward its women folk as regards work, and it is an accepted condition for a man to lead his monkey and leave his wife to drag the heavy wheel organ and to show the way with empty hands during their frequent tenement flittings, while the wife and children follow with furniture.

So that morning, when a slip of a girl came from an alley pushing a cart before her that was well stocked with fruit and looked timidly along the curbs for a good place to stop, the other push cart vendors scowled and nodded meaningly among themselves. It was not the competition, for she was only one of the backward kind that did not grasp much trade, but it was an infringement on custom, so they moved their carts a little faster or a little slower, according to her progress, keeping between her and the curbs and the crossings and other desirable places, until at last she stopped, confused, at a point where it would be impossible to obtain customers.

Few of them had seen the girl before, but they recognized the cart. It had been among them several weeks, pushed by a frail little man with white hair. Perhaps he had sold out to this girl, or perhaps she was his daughter and was trying the cart for a few days to see if she would like the business. Well, the first day would tell. If that discouraged her, she would leave. A girl should be in the sweatshops sewing or selling tapes and needles. Push carts were for the men. So whenever any one looked toward them as though with an idea of buying their gesticulations and clamor precluded any possibility of the customer noticing the wistful, anxious face in the back-ground.

But instead of being discouraged, although the day had not brought her a single sale, the girl was there again the next morning, so early that when the first competitor arrived he found her cart in the best place on the corner, with her standing beside it, weary but hopeful.

They crowded as near as they could and by their clamor tried to divert trade, but with only indifferent success. This day she sold enough to make her eyes bright and to drive away some of the despair which had been stealing into them.

The next morning they came earlier, but she was already there on the corner, as before, with dark circles under her eyes, but hopeful. Evidently she had come almost before it grew light.

Again they tried to divert her sales with their clamor, but ineffectually. Her position was too good and her fruit too clean and nicely arranged and the very appeal of her silence too irresistible. But before night when not making sales she spent most of her time leaning against the cart for support.

The fourth day this exhaustion became more apparent, so that even the most callous of the push cart men noticed it. The animosity in the eyes of some of them softened a little, but it was a precedent at stake, so even these tried with the most brutal in their efforts to drive the girl away. And as the hours wore on it became evident that the desire would be accomplished. The girl was very near the point of breaking down.

Just opposite the corner was the shop of a candy maker, much of whose time was spent in the back part of his store working great masses of candy dough, at first with his hands, then by throwing the mass over a strong iron hook in the ceiling and drawing it out into diminishing yellow white strings. When it was of the proper consistency he placed it upon a long marble slab, where he drew it out and rolled it into sticks, which were cut or broken into right lengths by the slight touch of a pair of scissors. Sometimes he would add a few balls of colored candy dough to the mass, and when drawn out these would make the stripes in stick candy and candy balls and shaped objects.

All this was plainly visible through the windows of the shop, and from her position at the cart the girl watched the candy maker much of the time when not engaged with customers, at first idly and then with increasing interest. Apparently the operation was a novelty to her. And on his part, after the first day, the old candy maker got in the habit of smiling and nodding an acknowledgment of her interest.

He was a good customer for fruit, partly to be used in his trade and partly for his own consumption. So on the second day when he picked up a basket and came out on the sidewalk bareheaded and in his shirt sleeves several of the push cart men stepped forward with eager anticipation. But he waved them back brusquely. He had seen a good deal through the window in spite of his seeming absorption in his work.

"No, no," he said irascibly, "your hands are not clean enough to handle fruit. I will buy from the girl."

The third day he began to watch the girl anxiously. He, too, had noticed her exhaustion. During the day he was out twice and bought fruit from her.

The fourth morning a long line of girls went into the shop one after another, remaining a few moments and then came out. For the most part they were ill clad, unattractive girls, and not one of them brought anything. It was evident they were seeking work and just as evident, after the first twenty or more had gone in and come out, that the candy maker was becoming irritated. Toward the end he only gave an applicant a single glance, and more than once his "No" was plainly heard by the girl at her push cart on the corner.

At length late in the afternoon he came out bareheaded and in his shirt sleeves, as usual, but without his basket. He went straight to the girl.

"Are you going to run this push cart all the time?" he asked.

The girl looked surprised.

"I don't know," she answered doubtfully.

"Because if you're not," he went on, "I want to hire you to work in my shop. You saw all those girls straggling in with soiled dresses and untidy hair and sour faces and pert manners. Bah! They'd make pretty shopgirls, wouldn't they? I want a lady, a nice looking, neat, capable girl who can look pleasant and at the same time be ladylike. They all came in answer to an advertisement, and not one in the whole lot suited me."

The girl swayed slightly, but steadied herself quickly by leaning against the cart, holding to it by both hands.

"Perhaps I wouldn't suit either," she hazarded, forcing a smile to her face.

"Yes, you would," he answered. But his tone was not quite so positive.

"I've been watching you through the window for three days. You're neat and particular about yourself. That shows. And you're neat about other things from the way you look after your cart and fruit. And you're attractive to customers and make your self look pleasant even when you feel the other way. That's what you're doing now. You're not sickly, are you?" his new found anxiety at last finding expression in words.

"No, I've always been very strong and healthy," she answered. "Only just now I am a little weak."

"I thought you must be strong," with some relief in his voice, "from the way you handled the cart the first day you came. I was watching. But yesterday and today you've seemed a little sickly. My work will be lots easier than having a cart like this and never and I think will pay you better. But of course I'll need a girl who's spry and can keep up. She'll have to help me make chocolates and fancy candies and put them in boxes and look after customers. I'm too busy to wash my hands every time a customer comes in, and it hurts trade. I could do twice the business if I had good help. I'm turning away trade every day." He was turning a moment, as though debating something, then added cordially: "Anyway, I'm willing to try you a few weeks even if you should be sickly. You're just the appearing girl I want, and I know you're spry."

"Well, I don't know yet," the girl began tremulously. Then her face suddenly changed. She was looking beyond him. "Father!" she cried reproachfully.

A frail little man with white hair was approaching them, walking slowly with the aid of a cane. He looked anxious.

"Giuseppina," he cried, "I could not wait any longer! I have been worrying all day, and at last I had to get up and dress and come and see. You looked so bad last night, and you did not want me to notice. I pretended to be asleep, but I watched, and I watched the night before. The two first days I was too sick to think, but since then you have not eaten a thing. You spent your money for wines and medicines for me, and"

The girl had been trying to interrupt him with warning glances, with expressive motions of her hands. Now she cried "Father!" again with such shamed distress in her voice that for the first time the old man noticed and understood. He drew himself up with sudden unconscious dignity.

"It was only that my daughter insists on buying me costly wines and medicines like the very rich people have," he said, addressing the candy maker and the two or three push cart owners within hearing. "We are in very comfortable circumstances, indeed, and have everything necessary. But such things cost a fortune, and when I am ill Giuseppina gets headstrong and does not know where to stop, and then she thinks she must be economical. She is a very good girl, though, a very good girl, and I assure you we are in perfectly independent circumstances."

The candy maker's eyes were twinkling, but with a mistiness behind them.

"The very use of the costly wines prove that, sir," he said courteously. "I do not have them even when I am ill. But, if you'll excuse me, you interrupted a conversation between your daughter and myself. I was trying to induce her to help me in my business. But suppose we go into the shop. We can talk better there."

Without waiting for their consent he crossed the sidewalk to his store, and after a little hesitation they followed. At the door he turned.

"Say, you cutthroat men," he called warningly to the push cart owners, "don't you touch a thing in this young lady's cart! If you do I'll—I'll run you in."

"You 'sposa we thieves!" called back one of the men indignantly. "We not

"IT IS THE SIGNORINA'S," HE SAID, "want to harm the signorina, only she's no right with push cart. And we never 'sposa she hungry."

As the three disappeared in the shop this man turned to his companions with a few eager words and gesticulations, and they repeated the words and gesticulations to other cart owners farther along who had not heard the conversation. In a few minutes a dozen men had left their own carts and were crowding about that of the girl.

Once inside, the candy maker motioned the old man to a chair, but wisely ignored the girl's weariness.

"Do you know how to make coffee, Giuseppina?" he asked briskly.

"Yes, sir," she answered wonderingly.

"Well, it's just this way," he went on. "I hate cooking and don't know anything about it, and yet I do my own housekeeping. I've got a nice little kitchen behind the shop and three or four rooms beyond, and supper's all ready except just the finishing. Suppose you make the coffee while I finish rolling this candy dough. Then we'll do the talking while we eat supper. Ah, well, it doesn't matter," as the girl colored and looked at him suspiciously. "I can do it after I finish this. Only I thought you wouldn't mind. You could do in five minutes what my clumsy fingers would take half an hour, and it would be a rare treat to have friends sit at table with me. I get very lonesome sometimes. That's right," as the girl started suddenly toward the kitchen.

"You'll find everything nearly ready, with most of the victuals on the table. I leave them that way to save time. Your father and I will talk till I finish this. Then I'll wash the candy off my hands and we'll eat."

It was a much longer meal than usual with the candy maker, and he forced himself to eat twice his usual allowance in order to keep his guests at the table. When at last they rose he was smiling genially.

"So that's all settled," he exclaimed with much evident satisfaction, addressing the old man. "Giuseppina will start in as shopkeeper in the morning, and you will help me with the mixing and cutting. You can make all the lozenges. And, as I said, it will be better for you to move right in here with me. There is plenty of room and it will give me Giuseppina within call all the time. Often I have to keep open as late as 10 o'clock. Hello, who's that?" at a heavy tramping into the shop.

It was the push cart men in a body, with one of them extending a handful of coins. "It is the signorina's," he said as he advanced and jingled the coins into the girl's hand. "We have sold out all the fruit. We had man mebbe, but all hard man have good spot some time, somewhere."

As they tramped out again noisily the girl's lips quivered in an ill repressed sob.

"The world is so good, so good," she murmured.

An Apprehension.

Down-trodden Husbands.

The middle class woman in England now generally affects to be superior to the social position she occupies; she endeavors to dress, live and act up to the highest standard she has adopted as her own. This attitude and its attendant circumstances eventually induce the ordinary middle class husband to regard her as socially superior to himself. In time, from this cause, he becomes little better than a footman to his own wife.—Marmaduke in London Truth.

Nothing Doing.

"Nothing doing." Is that slang? I thought it was until I came upon the words in Dickens' "Dombey & Son."

In chapter 4, old Sol Gillis is explaining to his nephew Walter why the ship must be closed and the business abandoned.

"You see, Walter," said he, "in truth this business is merely a habit with me. I am so accustomed to the habit that I could hardly live if I relinquished it, but there's nothing doing, nothing doing."

So, you see, the phrase had its pathetic fitness many years ago and is not slang at all.—Jeffersonian Magazine.

MUNICIPALUNACY.

By JOHN KENDRICK BANGS.

The municipally owned electric light plant of Crawfordsville, Ind., having shown a so called profit last year of $6,727, the trustees have just made a 10 per cent advance in the charge for street lighting. The probable reason for this is a desire on the trustees' part to increase this year's profits to an even $6,800, round figures being so much more satisfactory than angular ones.

One of the pleasing features of municipal ownership, as shown in New Zealand and Australia, is the luscious, juicy fatness it gives to the public debt. That of the United States is less than $12 per capita, but in New Zealand it is $335, in New South Wales $267, and in Australia's six states it averages $291 per capita. It takes genuine prosperity to increase a nation's credit or debt—the way from 2,200 to 2,800 per cent.

In the bright lexicon of municipal ownership there is no such word as deterioration. All city owned plants are regarded as hardy perennials which wax stronger with the passage of the years—a beautiful floral dream if only waking were impossible!

The following advertisement was received too late to be printed in our regular advertising columns:

FOR SALE

A fine line of public utility plants, as follows:
1. Electric Light Plant, Valley City, N. D. Thoroughly Broken. Can Be Driven By a Lady. Terms Reasonable.
1. Electric Power Plant, Souderton, Pa. A Great Bargain. A Child Can Run It. No Reasonable Offer Refused.
1. City Lighting Plant, Peru, Indiana. $15,000 Will Make As Good As New. Easy Terms.

1. Municipal Light and Water Works, Millford Center, Ohio. Owner Is Going Out of Business. Quick Sale Desired. Magnificent Trading Stamps Accepted in Payment.

For Further Information Apply Direct to Above Mentioned Owners.

The reports of the electric lighting plant of Lincoln, Neb., are illuminating, whether the product is or not. They show the cost per lamp to be $73.08, $50.00, $38.84. This indicates that the city authorities are kind enough to give the taxpayers a choice of figures. Usually we find cost figures arbitrarily reduced to one inevitable sum, but in Lincoln you "pays your money and takes your choice."

The citizens of Pottsville, Mich., having voted against the establishment of a municipal bakery, the downtrodden people of that burg will continue to lie prostrate beneath the iron shod doughnuts of the privileged classes. It really looks as though some of our deceased forefathers who fought against despotic power had died in vain.

IOWA'S GOOD EXAMPLE.

Has Made a Law Providing For Uniformity in Municipal Accounts.

Iowa is setting an example to her sister states which they would be wise to follow as expeditiously as possible. She has recently put into effect a law providing for a uniform system of municipal accounting which, if properly executed, will make it easy to see whether municipal plants are paying their way. If such a law had been in general operation fifteen years ago, it is probable that by this time the agitation for municipal ownership would have entirely ceased, in view of the damaging facts that such reports would inevitably have brought out.

Under the provisions of this Iowa law the state auditor is required to formulate and prescribe a system of municipal accounts. In preparing which he shall be assisted by an advisory committee of municipal accountants. So far as practicable the latest and most improved methods of accounting are to be adopted, and all cities and towns are required to report annually to the state auditor on the forms prescribed by him.

The auditor shall appoint one or more examiners of municipal accounts who shall at least once in two years report upon the financial conditions and transactions of all cities of 5,000 population or more and of smaller cities or towns upon request.

Run at a Loss, Not a Profit.

On March 31, 1906, there were in Great Britain 217 municipally owned electric light plants which had been in operation more than a year. Their reports show an aggregate profit, without any allowance for depreciation, of £306,514. As the capital cost of these plants was £33,577,734 the extremely moderate charge of 5 per cent for depreciation would amount to £1,678,887, thus showing a net loss of £1,282,373 on the year's business.

It Sounds Well, But—

Municipal ownership is one of those things which sound well in print. But, like trying to raise oneself by the boot straps, it appears impracticable. It ought to be better and cheaper, but it isn't. If it is such a benefit and such a valuable thing, why are communities breaking away from the system and returning to private companies under rigid municipal control?—Leadville (Colo.) Herald-Democrat.

Ward Healers on the Payroll.

The greatest evil in municipal ownership is the crowding of the payroll with ward healers who will not work, but who will persistently agitate for a raise of pay and put up their political influence as a reason why they should get it.—Buffalo Times.

DODGED THE ISSUE.

A Story About Lincoln and One of His Would Be Advisers.

The following story was told years ago by Mr. Dixon of Rhode Island, a Republican congressman of prominence in war days. It was when the war was still only half over and many people at the north felt that a more vigorous policy was demanded. There had been a meeting of prominent northern men, including governors of northern states. They passed resolutions that the campaign should be more aggressive and commissioned Mr. Dixon to call on Mr. Lincoln, tell him of the meeting and read to him a record of its conclusions. Mr. Dixon said that he undertook the task with a good deal of satisfaction and felt like a very large sized man when he went up to the White House one evening to deliver himself of his mission.

Mr. Lincoln listened without interruption to what Mr. Dixon had to say, a silence which added not a little to the impressiveness of the latter's eloquence. When Mr. Dixon was through Mr. Lincoln said to him: "Dixon, you are a good fellow, and I have always had a high opinion of you. It is needless for me to add that what comes from those who seat you here is authoritative. The governors of the northern states are the north. What they decide must be carried out. Still in justice to myself, you must remember that Abraham Lincoln is the president of the United States. Anything that the president of the United States does, right or wrong, will be the act of Abraham Lincoln, and Abraham Lincoln will be the people be held responsible for the president's action. But I have a proposition to make to you: Go home and think the matter over. Come to me tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock, and I will promise to do anything that you by then have determined upon as the right and proper thing to do. Good night."

Mr. Dixon left the White House feeling even larger than when he entered it, assured that the president put a higher value upon his abilities than he himself supposed. Dismissing this pleasant thought, he consulted with himself as to what would be done when the responsibility fell on him to decide the policy of the president of the United States. Many suggestions occurred to him, but one after another was dismissed as for some reason out of the question. When morning light broke he had not determined upon his course, upon the policy which he was to impose upon the president. He decided he would not go to the White House that morning. He did not go the next day or the next.

Indeed, three weeks went by before he saw the president. Then it was at a reception at Secretary Seward's, and Mr. Dixon tried to get by in the crowd without attracting special attention. But the long arm of the president shot out, grabbed Dixon and dragged him one side. "By the way, Dixon," said Mr. Lincoln, "I believe I had an appointment with you one morning about three weeks ago." Mr. Dixon said he did recall a mention of something of the sort. "Where have you been all these weeks?" asked the president. "Here in Washington," said Mr. Dixon. "But, to tell the truth, Mr. President, I have decided never to keep that appointment." "I thought you would not when I made it for you," was Mr. Lincoln's comment.

It makes a big difference when a man has the say, when the responsibility rests individually on him, as to what he will do or refrain from doing.

The Eye of the Crook.

Now, you may or may not know it, but the confidence man of tiptop attainments cultivates the control and expression of his features with as much care as does the professional beauty—for the reason that his looks are among his most valuable assets. For the first stage in "turning a trick," whether this be done in a Broadway hotel or a downtown office building, is for the operator to get a hold on the confidence of his victim by impressing him with his (the former's) frankness and honesty through the medium of his steady gaze, cheery smile and sincerity of expression in general. But "wise" people are not taken in by these things. Apart from all else, those who have had much to do with criminals—whether mugged or unmugged—will tell you that there is such a thing as the "crook eye," which invariably gives its owner away. It is, as I once heard a clever detective put it, "an eye behind the eye"—a something sinister peeping out from the bland and childlike gaze which the "con" turns on his prospective gull.—Josiah Flynt in Success Magazine.

The Feminine Touch.

"You can always detect the aesthetic note in the eternal feminine," said the observant bachelor. "There is just as much difference between the sexes as there was in that old era when the foxy Ulysses devised his trick to pick Achilles out from a bevy of Greek maidens. The other morning I was walking down Broadway to my office when I noticed a scrubwoman coming from her early task in one of the big buildings in the financial district. In her hand she carried a newspaper that she probably had picked out of one of the waste paper baskets. When she got in front of an excavation for a big building she stooped and picked up a piece of two inch plank about a foot and a half long. She stopped and wrapped the newspaper around that board and made a bundle as neat as a box of candy, and trudged along. A laboring man might or might not have carried that piece of board home, but he wouldn't have thought of making a package so neat that it gave no idea of its prosaic but useful contents."—New York Press.

Difficult Breathing

Short breath, fluttering, palpitation, sinking spells are symptoms of a weak heart, struggling to do its work. It must keep the blood in circulation to carry nourishment to make flesh, bone and muscle, and remove the worn-out particles. When it cannot do this, it must have help. Dr. Miles' Heart Cure gives strength to the heart nerves and muscles, and increases the heart action.

"I am glad to say that I am so much improved in health. Dr. Miles' Heart Cure cured me when several doctors failed. I think no other medicine could do for me what Heart Cure has done. My case was bad, bad as it could be at times. I had difficulty in getting my breath, my heart beat so fast at times that I thought it impossible to live without relief; the pain was very severe in my left side, and my nerves were all unstrung. I had almost given up all hope of being cured, and I am sure I would not if I had not taken the Heart Cure. I take great pleasure in recommending Dr. Miles' remedies to all who suffer with heart disease."

Parnell's Apology.

Mr. Parnell, on April 16, 1878, characterized a statement made by Henry James as "a legal quibble" worthy of the honorable and learned member from whom it proceeded.

"I must inform the honorable member," said the speaker, "that an expression of that kind is unwarrantable and must be withdrawn."

Mr. Parnell apologized for having used the expression. "I will say," he added, "that the statement was more worthy of the ingenuity of a petty sessions attorney than of a lawyer of the ability of the honorable and learned gentleman."

Mr. Allen Chamberlain tells in the current issue of Suburban Life of the new forestry law passed by the 1907 Legislature of the state of Maine. This is perhaps the most admirable legislation which has ever been enacted along this line, as it gives protection, not only to the land owner, but to the entire population of the state, inasmuch as it preserves the trees along the highways, and yet the owner may receive a permit from the proper authorities to make use of this restricted land for special purposes. The effect of this new law will undoubtedly be widespread and will create a desire in many other states for similar legislation.

Contractor Fitzgerald has completed the cleaning out of the washings and sludge in the river in the rear of the Whitney mill. The appearance of the water is much improved besides allowing the water to pass more freely from the water wheel. What a great improvement it would be to deepen the stream in its shallow places as far down as Mystic lake. This should be done in connection with improving Mystic river now going on in Medford for the Aberjona is only the head waters of the Mystic. In reality both streams are one, only the upper part in Winchester is much the prettiest part. The big dam now being erected at Medford to flow the Mystic river way back to Mystic lake, thus making the river a part of the lake, will be completed this season. Next the Aberjona should be improved as a part of the same great scheme of park and river improvement.

NEWSY PARAGRAPHS.

Prof. Currier had remained pretty close to Winchester this summer. He believes that this town is a pretty good summer resort.

You can get the best street railway guide published at Wilson the Stationer's.

Mrs. Thomas S. Hoyt will spend a few weeks visiting friends away from town and her house will be occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Bell.

Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Foster, Jr., have returned from Hamilton, R. I., where they have been passing the summer.

Mr. O. C. Sanborn expects to occupy his handsome new residence the first of Sept. About all that now remains to be done is finishing the grading.

John Flaherty of Hose 1, who was injured in the runaway of the fire department horses used in watering the streets, last week, has about recovered from his injuries.

MYSTIC ATTRACTIONS.

What Riverside is to the Newtons, so is Mystic Lake to the towns of Winchester, Arlington and Medford. The ride on the electric cars from Arlington to Winchester is one of the prettiest one has ever taken, through woods, by handsome residences and along the shores of the lake itself. The Indians, which history says once lived upon the shores of this lake, could not have been anything but happy, fishing and hunting in these precincts. Probably now and then the peaceful lake resounded with the noise of the war dance and the smoke of the camp fires could be seen curling over what are now the towns of Winchester and Medford. History relates that over three hundred years ago an Indian woman called Squaw Sachem, or the Queen of Misticke, owned and presided over all the land along this lake. She drowned herself in the waters of a brook which flowed into the Mystic a few rods from the Winchester and Arlington line. Later the Indian tribe was compelled by the settlers to stay in a reservation on the western shore of Mystic.

Many bloody battles were enacted by the Indians in what is now the quiet town of Winchester. On April 10, 1676, during King Philip's war, a horrible murder was committed by the Indians. A band of Indians entered the house of Samuel Richardson while he and one of his sons were working in the fields and murdered and scalped his wife and son Thomas. The nurse ran with the baby to the nearest garrison, but finding she was followed by Indians, she dropped the baby to save her own life and the Indians then killed the baby.

At a spot near to where Squaw Sachem's wigwam once stands the Winchester Canoe Club. Opposite, but nearer the bridge toward Medford, is the public boat club, where people may hire boats and canoes, while another pleasing feature of the locality is the Medford Boat Club house on the dam which divides upper and lower Mystic Lakes. The causeway and bridge are an effective feature in the landscape and there is a platform from which to view the superb panoramic view of the hills and shores which surround or form a background to both lakes, making it a picture of unsurpassed beauty. The lakes look very picturesque and animated on pleasant summer days when the water is covered with sail boats and canoes filled with pillows, parasols and pretty girls. The green islands, the curves of the river as it winds from big Mystic into little Mystic, the green shadings of the trees upon the banks, all these things make one feel as if he were in another country and forget that the city is but a few miles away.

Down the road but a three minutes' walk from the Winchester Canoe Club, and on the border of Arlington, stands the Winchester Country Club. This was the Smith farm, and contains sixty-five acres, fourteen being wooded land. The house is large, with a broad, shaded piazza on the Arlington side, and is surrounded by large old trees. There are two fine tennis courts, and the golf links of nine holes covers 2,603 yards. The club house sleeping rooms are on the upper floor and on the lower is a cozy office, two parlors, a dining room and a most artistically furnished smoking room, with black oak furniture, cushioned window seats and an array of steins over the fireplace, which shows at once the room is devoted chiefly to the men members of the club. The paper is dark brown, with an upper border representing a hunting scene in England. Saturday night a supper is served and the dining room is filled with the members and their guests. As the club is passed by the cars, it is an ideal place for a country club.

On the opposite side of the lake is the Mystic parkway. It will not be long before Mystic Lake will be one of the most popular pleasure grounds around Boston and Squaw Sachem and her people will have entirely faded from memory.—[Arlington Advocate.]

THE GREATEST CONTEST

The greatest contest ever known to be held at the New Hope Baptist Church, Cross street will be on Sept. 5, between the debating teams of Haverhill and Winchester. The teams have taken for their subject, "Resolved that the Hypocrite is the more despicable character than the Liar."

Affirmative—Mr. Coachman and Miss Webster of Haverhill, Mass.
Negative—C. H. Johnson and C. B. Kirby, of Winchester.
Commence at 8 p. m.

WINCHESTER'S WATER SUPPLY ADEQUATE.

The water supply in the reservoirs has been falling at the rate of an inch a day and rain is needed to replenish it, although there is no immediate danger of the water famine that has been felt in many of the neighboring places. The water this year is of good quality.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Black are at Freedom, N. H.

The above is a picture of Col. N. A. Richardson and family taken many years ago. The land on which this house stands on Washington street was a part of the original tract of land taken by his ancestor, Samuel Richardson in 1640, and who was one of the original settlers of that part of Woburn, now Winchester; and has been in the family ever since. Mr. N. A. Richardson is of the seventh generation from Samuel Richardson.

87TH BIRTHDAY.

Col. Nathaniel A. Richardson quietly observed his 87th birthday yesterday at his home on Washington street. He received but few callers as his health would not permit of a general observance of the event. He was the recipient of many letters of congratulations and wishes that he might live to see his 100th birthday.

SOLD FAKE PIANO POLISH.

If the analysis was correct, the composition of the wonderful piano polish sold by a man in Winchester last week was mainly gasoline and oil, and as a result several pianos in town will have to be refinished. The peddler claimed to have a remarkably fine polish for pianos or all articles of furniture with a high finish. As a guarantee of the excellence of his goods he volunteered to give a demonstration. This proved highly satisfactory, and as he offered a one dollar bottle of the preparation for only fifty cents, he had little difficulty in finding customers.

But when the preparation was used, instead of beautifying the finish of the furniture it ruined it. One lady who sampled the polish immediately after his departure, found that she had been taken in and at once telephoned the police, giving such a good description of the man that he was soon arrested by officer Harrold.

In court Saturday he gave his name as E. H. Ferro of Lawrence, and as he did not have the necessary five dollars to pay his fine he received a month's sentence.

EVENING CONCERT

A SUCCESS.

The evening concert on Manchester Field Wednesday night proved a decided success if the affair be judged by appearances. The attendance was probably the largest at any of the concert yet, and the number who attended in carriages and automobiles was fully as numerous as during the afternoons. About a dozen canoes came up the river from the Winchester Boat Club. The program, which occupied two hours, from 8 till 10, was considered the best yet by many.

The banks of the river and the parkway seem to be more favored by many people as a place to hear the music than the playground. One reason for this is the round about walk which the people on the east side are obliged to take to enter the playground. An entrance to the field is badly needed opposite the Unitarian Church.

WILL GO TO ALABAMA.

Mr. Edward F. Messenger the popular young teller at the Middlesex County National Bank and treasurer of the Calumet club, leaves Winchester October first. He goes to Birmingham, Ala., where he has accepted a position with the national bank there as assistant cashier. Birmingham is a place of about 50,000 inhabitants.

During his residence here Mr. Messenger has made a large circle of friends and has been one of the prominent members of both the Calumet and Boat clubs.

SEPTEMBER EXAMINATIONS AT THE HIGH SCHOOL.

Pupils of the High School who intend to take examinations for the removal of conditions will present themselves at the High School Building on Saturday, Sept. 7, at 2 p. m. Pupils who cannot be present on this date will be given an opportunity on Monday, Sept. 9.

The Principal of the High School will be in his office at 9 o'clock a. m., Saturday, Sept. 7.

MR. LEWIS PARKHURST FOR REPRESENTATIVE.

We learn from a reliable source that certain citizens, realizing the great financial matters that are to come before the next Legislature, and feeling that this District should have the services of the best business man who could be obtained, went to Mr. Lewis Parkhurst and asked him if he would allow his name to be used as a candidate for Representative to the General Court.

They had little hopes of obtaining his consent, for they knew the calls upon his time and strength in so many other ways.

Mr. Parkhurst said that he had never yet sought public office, and he never would; but if the citizens really wanted him to serve them in that capacity he would do so to the best of his ability.

Of what that ability is we do not need to be informed. We know how successful he has been in the affairs of the great publishing house of Ginn & Co.; we also know how intense has been his interest in the welfare of this town and how faithfully he has served as Water Commissioner, Chairman of the Building committee of the High and Mystic schools and appropriation and other committees.

We feel that he is admirably fitted to grapple with the affairs of the General Court and many predict his nomination and election.

WINCHESTER GUESTS

TOOK PART.

The minstrel, vaudeville and dance, given by the guests of the Russell cottages on last Saturday evening for the benefit of the Boston Nursery for Blind Babies, was one of the greatest successes ever given at this house. The program in charge of Mrs. Edward Everett Parker of Boston, one of the board of directors for the nursery, was given in the casino before a large audience.

Mrs. Parker was ably assisted by a number of ladies including Mrs. F. E. Getty of this town and Masters Arthur Mudge and Francis Getty were pages. Mr. F. E. Getty designed the poster announcing the event. The poster was auctioned off and brought $4 for the fund.

The program included: "My Irish Rosie," instrumental selections given by Miss Frieda Winn of Winchester, Miss Louise Giles and Mr. Newman Giles of Beverly. The two latter being niece and nephew of Mr. S. E. Newman of this town.

TAXES RISE IN MANY TOWNS.

Of the 26 cities and towns of Greater Boston whose tax rates for this year have been fixed, 15 show an increase in the demands upon the taxpayer.

Chelsea, Malden and Quincy have the highest tax rates in their history. Chelsea's is $20.80 which is 1.20 above that of last year. Malden's is $18, raised 80 cents over last year, mainly because of the change of residence of Col. Harry E. Converse, who last year paid a tax of more than $15,000, from Malden to Marion. Quincy's figures are 10.70 which are 1.10 above those of last year.

Following are comparisons:

	This year	Last year
Boston	$15.00	$15.90
Arlington	18.80	18.10
Bedford	15.00	15.50
Braintree	18.60	22.40

WINNING HOME.

The summer season at Winning Home ends next Tuesday after a most successful season. Many parties of children from the tenements have had a happy vacation at this beautiful "hill top" farm, and return to their city homes with the recollection of the happy days spent among the fields and woods, and carry with them the knowledge of another and better way of living than of huddling in the stifling and unsanitary tenements that have thus far been their lot.

May not the seed thus sown by Winning Farm bear good fruit later on.

The Trustees are pleased to acknowledge many acts of kindness from Winchester friends who have felt an interest in that work. The Lambda Phi Sorority of Bridgewater Normal School has sent $18 through its Secretary, Miss Helen G. Ayer.

Mr. Edward H. Stone contributed a case of paper. Another Winchester gentleman has generously given the use of his beautiful touring car and chauffeur to take the children on weekly rides through Lexington and Concord. These with the weekly picnics to Shaker Glen have been the source of great pleasure to these children, and was reflected from their happy faces as they left the farm.

The good pure air, spring water, vegetables and milk did them lots of good, and even in the short vacation of ten days one could note a decided change in their appearance.

Messrs Ayer, Parkhurst and Pratt are the Winchester representatives on the Board of Trustees, there being three trustees from Woburn and three from Lexington.

MARRIED SUNDAY EVENING.

On Sunday evening at the parochial residence of St. Mary's church, Miss Sophie Gertrude, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Hamblton, of Railroad avenue, and Mr. Thomas Joseph Conley of Portland Me., were united in marriage by Fr. Walter Roche. The bride was attended by Miss Marguerite Hamblton of Chelsea and Mr. William Costello of Beaumont was best man.

The bride was becomingly gowned in a dress of white silk batiste and carried bride's roses. The maid of honor wore blue silk and carried carnations.

Following the ceremony a wedding supper was held at the bride's home attended by about fifty relatives and guests from West Medford, Beaumont, Malden, Chelsea, South Boston, Portland and other cities.

After a short trip in Maine, Mr. and Mrs. Conley will reside in Winchester, where they will be at home after Sept. 10th.

BASE BALL.

The Winchester A. A. baseball team will play the Wilmington team on Manchester field Saturday afternoon.

This team desired a return game with the home nine and a good exhibition of baseball is expected as the last match was a 12 inning game.

Labor day morning the St. Charles team of Woburn will play here and in the afternoon the local team will play an out of town game.

A BIG INDUSTRY.

Largest Manufacturers of Upper Leather in the World.

A Visit to Beggs & Cobb's Leather Factories in Winchester.

On invitation of Mr. Harry Cox, superintendent of Beggs & Cobb's leather factories, a representative of the STAR was taken over this immense plant on Swanton street a few days ago. It may not be known to many readers of the STAR that this firm is the largest manufacturers of upper leather in the world, and that their finished product also goes to all parts of the world, even to the interior of South America, where it is carried inland on the backs of mules, the bundles being done up in suitable and compact form for the long journey on the backs of these animals. Beggs & Cobb have other factories, some in Woburn, but this article relates entirely to the plant in Winchester. The immense business of over four and one half millions of dollars is done each year, and the pay roll foots up to from $350,000 to $400,000 a year dependent on the condition of the leather market. The number of hands employed varies from 450 in summer to 600 in winter, during the latter period the business being at its height. A majority of the men live in Woburn, while Winchester shelters many, also some live in Stoneham and in Medford. The average output of completed sides of leather a day during the summer months is about 2100 sides, while in winter when the full complement of men is at work the total of from 3000 to 3500 sides are finished and made ready for shipment each day. This represents the hides of over 1500 cattle. There is on hand constantly about $1,000,000 worth of stock. This comes to the factory in the form of green salted hides, very uninviting in appearance and smell, and when put through the various processes looks pleasing to the eye and are soft and flexible to the touch. There is seen the leather for every form of footwear—the ladies' dainty shoe in all colors and grades, hunting and riding boots, men's shoes of all grades and colors, and so on to brogans and miner's boots and shoes. The transformation from the salted hide to the finished product is surprising, almost beyond belief. Yet in the hands of the skilled workmen, who make up the force in the factories, the results are simply astonishing. Supt. Cox who has charge of the plant is a young man, and yet he thoroughly understands all of the work and complicated machinery even to the minutest detail, that has given the firm of Beggs & Cobb a world-wide reputation for the excellent quality of leather manufactured by them. He knows the composition of the various chemicals used, their mixing and the quantity to be used, for be it known chemicals form an important part in the making of leather, and the factory has a most complete laboratory. He knows and can tune up the vast array of machines that are used so that the best results are obtained, and he knows good leather as quick as his eye rests upon it—in fact he knows the entire business from the green hide to the finished product.

Another thing that the people may not know is that the business of Beggs & Cobb has doubled in the past ten years and that the end of prosperity is not yet in sight. The large tract of land on Swanton street is nearly all utilized and an overflow of the business has extended to a part of the McKay plant near by on the same street. Certain branches of the leather industry may be leaving this section and going to Pennsylvania, but the particular work being done here in Winchester is constantly increasing and expanding. The headquarters of the firm are in Boston.

A visitor is much interested in the number and variety of machines used in the manufacture of leather, there are hundreds of them. We noticed a new machine from the Whitney machine shops that was being set up, large and massive, that will do the work of many men. This was a fleshing machine some nine and one-half feet long, with all the latest improvements and known as model E. F. This machine takes in the largest whole hide, and within a few days two of them have been sent to Germany, while orders have been received from different parts of the United States and Canada. This firm, it is remembered, makes a specialty of leather-making machines of great importance, which are used at home and abroad, the creation of the brain of our townsman, Mr. Arthur E. Whitney. There is a battery of whitening machines, each one of which accomplishes the work of more than eight men, and which takes care of 300 sides of grain leather or 150 sides of splits, on both sides, daily. Embossing machines that leave pleasing imprints on the leather, splitting machines that divide the hide into any thickness, as thin as a postage stamp if necessary; also there are flushing, shaving, unhairing, glazing, softening, coloring, pasting, polishing, rolling, stoning, and last but not least a measuring machine that records the exact amount of leather in each side. A side of leather looks like the map of South America with its many ragged and projecting coast lines, yet this machine records to the fraction of an inch the quantity of leather in a side.

All of the work is not, however, done by machines, as there are certain particular parts that yet call for the work of the hand, and it is surprising to see the skill with which the men handle the sharp knives that smooth down the rough and thick spots, for it must be known that different parts of the hides are not of the same thickness and no machine has yet been devised that will overcome this irregularity in all cases. A slip of the sharp knife and the valuable side of leather would be damaged, yet this seldom happens, so that the loss is trifling. It would be an impossibility in a newspaper article to devote the space to a description of the workings of the different machines and the part each performs in the making of completed leather, also in giving the number and variety of which there are scores.

Grease and tallow form an important function in making the leather soft and pliable. A well equipped machine shop on the grounds is busy repairing the machinery, also there is a carpenter shop, with a full equipment of men in both.

A leach house contains many huge vats extending through two floors, where the tannin is extracted from the bark that is ground in a mill above the vats and enters by a spout. This tannin is distributed into the vast tan yards, where thousands of hides are constantly in pickle. All hides do not now go through the process of being treated with the bark solution, as chemicals perform an important part and is being extensively used. The former method takes weeks to treat a hide, while chemicals will do the same work in three hours, while the results are about as satisfactory. There is a wood that comes from South America, Quebracho, which is extensively used, and it is said to be superior to the old process and is a great time saver, 24 hours being all that is necessary to accomplish the desired result. Nothing goes to waste in a modern leather factory, all the products being utilized. In a slaughter house it is claimed the pig's squeal is the only thing that is not used for some purpose, but in Beggs & Cobb's factory there is not even a loss as infinitesimal as the squeal.

In the yards and throughout the houses there is a well arranged equipment of fire apparatus. A pumping engine of powerful capacity is always ready with steam up in case there should be a fire. There is a ten-inch water main that extends through the grounds, while there are small buildings containing an ample equipment of hose scattered over the grounds and all that is required is to get out the hose, turn on the water and start the engine. Outside the office in the yard is a fire alarm dial which records a fire in any particular building, also there is a private fire alarm box to call out the Winchester fire department. About everything has been done to lessen the danger of conflagration. Watchmen patrol the buildings throughout the night and time clocks are used, so that the movements of these men are recorded during short intervals.

Three hours were spent in a hasty inspection of the immense plant and yet not all parts were visited—it would take a day to do it. But little is heard of this largest-in-the-world industry in Winchester so quietly does it pursue the even tenor of its way. Yet it is a big concern that is known over the length and breadth of the United States and foreign countries for its upright business dealings and for the dependable quality of its leather. That is a reputation worth having.

SCALES SET UP AT CRUSHER.

Superintendent Hinds is having the Fairbanks scales owned by the town set up in the town yard off Pleasant street, near the stone crusher. These scales were used on Cambridge street at the building of the state road, and later loaned to the city of Woburn.

SPECIAL MEETING.

A special meeting of the shareholders of the Winchester Co-operative Bank will be held at the banking rooms, Lyceum Building on Tuesday evening, Sept. 3, at 7 o'clock to receive proposed amendments to the by-laws.

A REPUBLICAN ANNOYANCE.

And now the Republicans of Massachusetts have troubles of their own—or one, at least, perhaps more. The one is Congressman McCall. As usual he is pugnacious; as usual he is independent; as usual he is contrary, and differs from everybody else. If he were not a congressman he might be ignored, but being a congressman, and from one of the most important districts, it is bothersome to have him make such speeches. The worst of it is that nobody wants to take the other side. It cannot be denied that President Roosevelt is autocratic, for he is, and there are millions of people who like him most for that quality. These millions include a very large number of Democrats, and that party isn't ready to denounce the president for any of his autocratic actions.

What can be done about Mr. McCall under these circumstances? Probably the Republicans will let him severely alone. That seems to be the only thing to do just now. It may be added that there are a good many Republicans in this district who have always supported him, who are not pleased with his positions. They wish that, once in a while, he would make a rousing good speech "agin" the Democrats, and for his own party. They have noticed that whenever Congressman McCall is announced to speak there's a general wonderment as to what form his next attack on his own party will take, as most of his speeches are of that type. There are Republicans in this district who go so far as to suggest that it is about time to have a congressman who works with his associates. But this isn't a congressional election year, so the suggestions will not bear any fruit—but next year, what? Perhaps by that time he will be making speeches for the Republicans.—[Cambridge Chronicle.]

And, as usual, he will be elected by the customary big vote. The voters in the Eighth Congressional District are very independent, including Republicans and Democrats. Mr. McCall stands pretty strongly in the good graces of the latter.

THE MERGER IN POLITICS.

There is no doubt that Mr. Whitney has made votes by courageously defining his position on the merger question. It was a distinct advantage to be the first candidate to take a position on it publicly. His views were those of a practical business man. He saw things distinctly and expressed his views clearly, and they commended themselves to the public. The Republicans should have been first to express these views, but they were trying to make up their minds whether there were any votes in the question as a political issue.

Finding that there are none, they will endorse Mr. Whitney's position, unless they find it wiser to ignore the whole matter. They can properly do this, for the question is in no sense a political one, and if Guild and Whitney are the rival candidates, there's no sense in mentioning the subject in the platform of either party or on the stump. If Gen. Bartlett should be the nominee it would change the situation.—[Cambridge Chronicle.]

The merger should not be made a political issue, and there is no reason why Gov. Guild should remain on the fence regarding it, either. If the merger is a good thing for Massachusetts and New England, then it should take place without delay. Pres. Tuttle of the B. & M. and the merchants believe in it, while those who oppose it are mostly politicians who are looking for votes from those people who believe there are no good corporations.

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

With "The Serenade" as its opening attraction, the regular opera season at the Castle Square starts off with every promise of success. "The Serenade" begins next Monday, and was for several seasons in the repertory of the Bostonian, and with its music by Victor Herbert and its libretto by Harry B. Smith, it lacks none of those elements that brings success to a comic opera.

For his coming season, Mr. W. C. Masson, who will retain direction of the theatre, has engaged a company which includes all the old favorite singers, and a number of important new acquisitions. The stage director will be W. H. Fitzgerald, formerly of the Bostonians, and the music director will be Frank N. Mandeville, who has no rivals in his line. Miss Lane and Miss Ewell will continue to alternate the prima donna soprano roles. Miss Louise LeBaron and Miss Elfreda Busing will be the contraltos, with Miss Hattie Belle Ladd in character parts, and Miss Lois Hall as second soprano. The baritones will be J. K. Murray and Forest Huff, the tenors. Harry Davies and Henry Taylor, the comedian John Henderson, the bass, Geo. Shields, with W. H. Pringle and W. S. Griffin retained for other important roles. The chorus will be in every way complete and an expert and enlarged orchestra has also been engaged.

WONDERLAND.

It is no exaggeration to say that there never has been any "show" connected with any recreation park in New England of greater public interest than "Fighting the Flames" has proved at Wonderland. It is too late in the season to go into details of this great spectacular exhibition. Too late for another reason also which the public should not forget. It is this: The "fire show" will not be at Wonderland next season, for in its place comes another big spectacular exhibition, so the few remaining days of the season are positively the last chances the public will have of witnessing "Fighting the Flames," with its laughable comedy, its melodrama, its thrilling rescues from threatened awful death, and the superb work of the gallant fire fighters. This is an exhibition all should see; it is really the sight of a lifetime, entertaining, thrilling and instructive.

The final two weeks at Wonderland will be notable also because of the coming of "Alice in Wonderland" every evening. This is a fairy, floral spectacle, employing the services of a big company, including 30 dancing girls and thirty more little ones as animals, fairies, playing cards and so on.

Children, accompanied by parents, are admitted free to Wonderland up to six o'clock every day, including Sundays and holidays, and admitted to the "Fire Show" for ten cents in the evenings as well as in the afternoons.

DON'T BREAK THE LAW.

Postmaster General von Meyer has gone to the trouble of having notices printed for posting in all postoffices, calling the attention of the public to the fact that written messages cannot be put inside of merchandise or papers that are mailed at the one cent rate. In doing this small thing, he is really showing an interest in the smaller and more ignorant patrons of the mails. There is a mandatory fine of not less than $10 for this offence, though many people, and some not very ignorant people either, say they never heard of such a law. But ignorance is not accepted as an excuse, and the postoffice department last year collected $59,065 in fines on this line alone, mostly from poor people who could ill afford to lose the money. With notices posted calling attention to the law, it will be the citizen's own fault if he does not observe it. The step is a small one, as has been said, but it probably will save a good many thousand dollars in the aggregate to a class of citizens who have not many dollars to squander in fines.

TREMONT THEATRE
VAUDEVILLE.

The Tremont Theatre opens with advanced vaudeville of the Klaw & Erlanger kind Monday, Labor Day matinee, Sept. 2. The plan is to have two performances daily beginning at 2 and 8 o'clock, each of ten numbers. The public can feel certain that nothing but the very best that the theatrical world can supply, no matter what the cost, will be presented. The Tremont is an ideal theatre; the entertainments to be found within its walls hereafter will be ideal. The world wide affiliations of the firm of Klaw & Erlanger make it possible for it to secure stars and attractions heretofore impossible; artists and productions money could not tempt from their tenure in the great cities of the old world. They only come to America now as a part of a new and gigantic policy of interchange, directed by these masters of their profession, Klaw & Erlanger, the leaders of the theatre universe.

It is not possible yet to announce the character of the opening bill, but it promises to be "genuine Metropolitan vaudeville for Boston"—which means New England.

Sandy and the Mare.

A Scottish paper tells the story of Sandy Mc—, a Forfarshire farmer who had been spending an hour or two in the evening with a friend a couple of miles away. It was a moonlight night, and Sandy, after partaking freely of his friend's hospitality, was riding quietly home across the sheep pastures on his "gilt and mare" when they came to an open ditch, which his mare refused to cross.

"Hoot awa, Maggie," said the rider, "this winae dae. Ye maun jist gang over."

He turned back about 100 yards, wheeled round and gave the mare a touch of his whip. On she went at a brisk canter, but as they reached the edge of the ditch she stopped dead and shot Sandy clean over to the other side.

Gathering himself up, Sandy looked his mare straight in the face and said: "Vera weel pitched indeed, ma lass. But hoo are ye goin' to get over yer self, eh?"

He Was an Expert at Figures.

After an absence of several years a one time cavalier of a lady called on her. He found her in the company of her three children.

"Well, well," he said, "and how old are they?"

"Johnny," answered the lady, "is seven, Julia is five and Maud is two."

"Dear me!" he cried, "alarm in his voice. 'Is it possible this flies like that?' Who would think that you had been married fourteen years?"—Philadelphia Ledger.

GOOD FOR STONEHAM

INDEPENDENT.

It will be good news to our citizens to learn that the obnoxious sign board displaying a liquor advertisement on the Chauncey lot, corner of Main and Marble streets, Stoneham, is to be speedily removed, or at least is to be freed from its objectionable advertisement. We are informed that Mr. S. G. Chauncey, upon learning the nature of the sign displayed, at once visited Mr. Donnelly, to whom he had let the space, and informed him of his decided objection to the use of his premises in giving publicity to liquor advertisements. Mr. Donnelly said that he was in ignorance of the nature of the sign, and that, as he did not want to antagonize the people of Stoneham, he would take immediate steps for its removal.

The space for the bill board was let by Mr. Chauncey to display the Henry Seigel department store advertisement. This was changed without his knowledge or consent to advertise a brand of whiskey. In his talk with Mr. Donnelly, Mr. Chauncey offered to refund the money he had received on his contract rather than to have the flaring liquor advertisement remain any longer. Mr. Chauncey deserves to be highly commended for his determined stand.

The Independent also deplores the frequency of similar objectionable advertisements in the cars of the Boston & Northern and Boston Elevated roads. Public sentiment is becoming aroused, and it is to be hoped that in the near future laws will be passed prohibiting or regulating the display of undesirable signs in public places or conveyances.—[Stoneham Independent.] The Independent put up the same fight that the Star did. Result satisfactory.

ORPHEUM THEATRE.

Boston's home of advanced vaudeville. The Orpheum, will open for the season on Monday matinee Labor Day, Sept. 2, with an unprecedented bill of sensational features. During the summer months the Orpheum has undergone a complete renovation and patrons of this popular playhouse will see a practically new theatre, spick and span from the efforts of an army of artisans.

The Orpheum's policy of presenting high class vaudeville will be continued. Vaudeville in its most advanced form as given in the Orpheum last season proved a highly successful venture, and this year amusement seekers will be supplied the very latest American and European novelty acts. The bill selected for the opening week fairly teems with sensational surprises and supreme features. Complete announcement of the opening bill will be made later. The box office opens Thursday, August 29th, at 9 a. m. for the sale of seats.

WOBURN WATER USERS
ASKED TO ECONOMIZE.

Mayor Blodgett of Woburn Saturday issued a letter to the citizens in which he announced that, owing to the scarcity of the water supply, street sprinkling will be discontinued, and he requests that lawn sprinkling be stopped until the present conditions be bettered.

In response to an inquiry, the state board of health wrote, as to the use of water from Horn pond: "In the opinion of the board it is not safe to drink the water unless it has been previously boiled for at least 15 minutes."

About one-tenth of the water now being used in Woburn comes from Horn pond, owing to the extreme low point that the water has reached in the wells of the pumping station.

The citizens are divided in condemnation of Mayor Blodgett for turning the Horn pond water into the mains without first doing all possible to prevent waste.

DOES IT PAY?

In speaking of advertising, ex-Governor Douglas says: "I have given every trial of advertising the fairest sort of trial. I began with newspapers in 1883. The results were so good that later I also advertised in magazines. The returns did not warrant me in continuing. I withdrew my advertisements from the magazines, but later on tried the experiment again. Once more I took out my advertisements and since then I have used only newspapers to bring my goods before the public eye."

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portions of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a running sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces. We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of deafness caused by Catarrh that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

"SOMETHING MUST BE DONE"

The Municipal Plants of Knightstown, Ind., Are in a Bad Way.

The Star of Muncie, Ind., recently described the condition of the municipal plants of Knightstown, Ind., in the following way:

"The municipal electric light and waterworks plant is threatened with financial disaster unless relief measures are taken at once. In order to settle the question satisfactorily the city council has decided to adopt the referendum in the matter and let the taxpayers vote on the proposition of issuing bonds to enlarge and perfect the plant."

"The report of the superintendent shows that the electric light plant has been running behind during the fiscal year and that something must be done to keep it in operation. The business has increased so that there is not now adequate power for the dynamos, and a new engine will have to be put in. The city council also claims that the rates are entirely too low and that prices must be increased to keep the plant on a self sustaining basis."

"An ordinance is now pending providing for the enlargement and improvement of the plant and providing for a special election to determine if the city shall issue bonds calling for $10,000. The present council has had much trouble in keeping the plant going, and loans from the general fund to the electric lighting fund have been frequent for several months."

In response to a request for confirmation of the report the city clerk of Knightstown writes:

"I would say that there has been no issue of bonds nor change in the electric or water rates, but there is apparent need of something to decrease the cost or increase the income from those sources."

NOT UP TO EXPECTATIONS.

Mason, Mich., by No Means Satisfied with M. O.

A recent issue of the Electrical World contained the following item in regard to Mason, Mich.:

"The common council is considering the abandonment and disposal of the municipal lighting plant now in use and securing electricity for lighting and power from the Commonwealth Power company of Jackson. The municipal plant is fast deteriorating in value and utility and becoming a constant bill of expense to the city for repairs and new equipment. The pumps at the waterworks will also be operated by electricity if the proposed plan is carried out."

A letter to the mayor for confirmation of these facts elicited the following response:

"In answer to your letter of recent date would say that there has been no vote on the question of granting a franchise as yet. Mason owns and operates its electric light and waterworks systems. We are contemplating purchasing power from the Commonwealth Power company. Municipal lighting has not been the success anticipated. When depreciation of plant is considered, we are not obtaining our street lighting at any less sum than we formerly paid a private corporation."

AFTER TWELVE YEARS.

Milford Center, O., Sells Its Light and Water Plant to Be Rid of a White Elephant.

In a recent issue the Municipal Journal and Engineer announced that the municipal light and water plant of Milford Center, O., was to be sold at auction. The following was received in response to a request for further information from the president of the village:

"I beg to say that the reason for the sale of the municipal light and water plant is the failure of municipal ownership to operate the plant as economically as private interests could."

J. L. Borlan of the board of trustees of public affairs writes more fully: "On account of a fast increasing deficiency it is deemed best to dispose of the plant. We have had twelve years of municipal ownership and have been fortunate in getting good business men at the head, yet the plant has never been on a self supporting basis and is now in need of a great amount of repair, without any better outlook for sufficient income to warrant expense. We therefore wish to get rid of a 'white elephant.'"

A Sample of Public Ownership.

The Russian newspaper Svet is responsible for the following story: "When a band of terrorists recently rushed a somewhat remote postal telegraph suboffice with the command, 'Hands up!' a cool headed female operator managed to rattle off to the central office: 'Robbers are here. Help!' The message was sent before the robbers had noticed the presence of the woman. The terrorists calmly proceeded to loot the office safe, and after they had departed the following reply to the operator's message was leisurely ticked off: 'Send a proper service message, and assistance will be dispatched.'"

Another Case of "Estimate."

Fairfield, Ind., is a city of about 5,000 population, which owns its own light and water plants. A recent report of the period from April 1, 1903, to Dec. 31, 1906, shows that the cost of operation exceeded the appropriation by $2,049 for the lighting plant and $4,314 for the waterworks. In other words, the plants are costing nearly $2,000 a year more than was expected, with no allowance for the depreciation, which is adding another $1,000 annually to the cost.

SLEEP AND DEATH.

Neither Pain Nor Consciousness at the Instant of Either.

The phenomenon called sleep may be summed up in the following propositions, says a writer in the Cosmopolitan:

First—Sleep is temporary death of the functions of the sensitive system, due to exhaustion by fatigue.

Secondly—This death is temporary because the vital system continues to perform its functions during sleep and restores the sensitive organs to their normal condition.

For our purpose death may be considered under the three heads—natural death, sudden death and death from disease. Natural death is death from old age. It differs from natural sleep only in degree.

The gradual loss of sensibility by the sensitive organs which precedes sleep now takes place in the vital system, and all the organs pass into permanent sleep together. There can be no pain preceding or at the moment of such a death, any more than there is pain preceding or at the moment of passing into temporary sleep.

Sudden death may be defined as death due to a sudden injury from without or within the body sufficient to destroy at once all irritability of both the sensitive and vital systems. It requires no argument to prove that a person who is suddenly stricken dead can suffer no pain. The element of time must be present in order to suffer physical pain, and in the sudden death of a person the element of time is absent.

We come now to consider the third and by far the most frequent form of death—namely, death from disease.

As soon as disease is established dying begins, which is but a more rapid than natural ceasing of all sensibilities, accompanied with more or less suffering, according to the cause which produces it. This dying and suffering, called disease, must terminate either in so called death, which is insensibility to it, or in recovery, which is removal of the cause of it. But in any event the suffering has been endured, no matter whether the final termination is death or recovery.

No one is conscious of or can recall the moment he passes from waking into natural or temporary sleep. Nor shall we, by a "supreme agony" or in any other way, be conscious of passing into permanent sleep.

Being born and dying are the two most important physiological events in the life history of our bodies, and we shall know no more about the latter event at the time it occurs than we did about the former.

Most Prized Austrian Decoration.

The most prized decoration in Austria corresponds to the British Victoria cross, and its value arises from the rigorous conditions for obtaining it and the fidelity with which they have been observed. It is known as the Maria Theresa cross. "It shall be an inviolable rule," says the foundation statute, "that no person, whoever he may be, shall be admitted to the order for any other consideration than long service or wounds received before the enemy and not for any reasons of birth, favor or influence." "We ourselves join hands on this subject," adds the empress founder. The recipients of the cross are ennobled ipso facto.

STATE POLITICS

What the Tariff Tactics of the Democracy Mean

HOT FIGHT AGAINST WHITNEY

Bitterness Between Opposing Forces of Democratic Party Is Becoming Greater Every Day of the Contest

The present campaign in Massachusetts is not a national election, and yet it looks as if the questions to be discussed might largely be what are commonly called national issues. No matter which way the election should turn it would have no more effect upon national policies than it would have upon the ebbing and flowing of the tides of the Atlantic. Everybody interested in the campaign, and with any knowledge of politics, knows that that is the fact, and yet the people are to be appealed to, in the time intervening between now and November, to cast their ballots for the Democratic candidates in order that they may have reciprocity with Canada and tariff revision.

It is perfectly safe to say that the election of Henry M. Whitney to the governorship of Massachusetts would have no more influence upon the negotiation of a reciprocity treaty with Canada or the revision of the tariff at the December session of congress than it would have upon the tariff program of the German empire.

The program of the Democrats in this campaign is very similar to the usual Democratic tactics. If they cannot have free trade they work for a substitute which would be a step in that direction. The Republican party has been committed to reciprocity much longer than the Democratic, but its efforts to secure reciprocity with Canada which would be to the advantage of the United States as well as of the Dominion have been fruitless. The Canadians will never negotiate a reciprocity treaty which will let into the Dominion the manufactured goods of the United States, to crush the progress of its own manufactures. The reciprocity desired by Canada is one in natural products only. If they could secure such a treaty as that, it would be to their advantage, but of none to the people of the United States as a whole. We have not at the present time a sufficient market for our natural products, and are compelled to ship an enormous quantity of grain, of vegetables, and the various other natural products, so called, to Europe. To the people of the United States as a whole it would be no advantage to swap our wheat for Dominion wheat, or let in Canadian wheat when we have more than enough to satisfy all our demands and are compelled to send it abroad.

The Market We Need

What we need is a market for our manufactured goods, and these Canada will not admit except upon the payment of a very substantial duty. But when Canada gets ready to make a treaty which shall be mutually advantageous, the Republican party will go all of half way to meet her.

Nothing would tickle the Democrats so much as to have the Republicans revise the tariff at the coming session of congress, but Republicans have been caught napping in that way once or twice and they will not be caught in the same way a second time. The Democratic party, two or three years prior to 1892, made strenuous campaigns for the revision of the existing tariff act on the lines of what that party was pleased to denominate "tariff reform." In October of 1890 the McKinley bill was enacted and went upon the statute books. That was only a little more than a year before the presidential campaign of 1892 was opened, and the Democrats attacked the tariff act in the most mendacious way. The falsehoods that were told about the operations of the act would make Ananias surrender his leadership as the champion liar of all history and retire in confusion. In the presidential campaign of 1892 Democratic workers, disguised as peddlers selling various kinds of merchandise and produce, went about through nearly every congressional district in the northern states, hawking their wares at enormous prices and claiming that the McKinley bill had caused a great increase in the cost of everything. A very large number of people throughout the country believed these Democratic workers, became incensed at the Republican party and voted the Democratic ticket. The result was the defeat of enough Republican congressmen to make that body Democratic, and secure the election of Grover Cleveland.

The Democrats would like to repeat their tactics of 1892. They will have no opportunity to do so, and their only recourse is to denounce what they term the burdens of the present tariff act, and in each locality adapt their tariff cry to the particular conditions existing therein.

Whitney-Bartlett Fight Hot

The nearer the date for the Democratic caucuses for the election of delegates to the state convention approaches, the hotter grows the struggle between the forces behind Henry M. Whitney of Brookline and General Charles W. Bartlett of Boston.

It cannot be denied that General Bartlett is a very plucky fighter, and that his cause ought to look bright if energetic efforts have any effect upon political fortunes.

A MODEST REQUEST.

Colonel Bill Sterret and the Privilege He Craved.

When Colonel Bill Sterret first went to Washington to report the news of the capitol for his Texas papers, he had desk room in the office of General H. V. Boynton, then the militant correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial.

General Boynton spoke out in meeting. He said things about statesmen that made the statesmen angry. He had many personal encounters with patriots whose feelings had been ruffled.

One night a man came into Boynton's office loudly proclaiming that he intended to shoot Boynton. The general grabbed a chair, beat the intruder over the head with it, knocked him down and threw him out. All this time Sterret sat at his desk, looking on in great amazement.

When the man landed in the gutter Sterret came timidly over to Boynton. "General," he said, "being a new hand here, I don't know the practices of this office nor the customs that pertain to Washington correspondents, and I didn't want to intrude. Now that I have seen what has happened, I trust you will allow me a question?"

"Go ahead," said Boynton. "When the next man comes in, would it be too forward if I should crave the privilege of kicking him a few times in honor of the sainted Confederate dead?"—Saturday Evening Post.

REMOVED AT LAST.

The Figures Did Not Appear in the Final Set of Drawings.

A candidate for the royal engineers some years ago was told by his instructor to draw up the plans and specifications for a railway viaduct to connect two high hills, between which ran a small stream.

In due course an excellent set of drawings was presented, one showing the bridge in its completion, with a sketch of the surroundings, and on which sat two men, with their legs hanging over the side, fishing. The drawing was returned with the request that the men be removed from the bridge.

Upon receiving the paper the second time the professor discovered that his instructions had been carried out, but that the two men were seated on the bank of the stream, still in quest of representatives of the finny tribe.

Again was the paper returned, and this time with positive orders to remove the men from the drawing altogether. Imagine the consternation which overspread the features of the learned instructor upon receiving the papers for a third time to find two little graves and tombstones with appropriate epitaphs situated near the bank of the stream. His orders had been obeyed and the men removed altogether.—London Answers.

Winchester's Water Supply.

With the majority of towns in the Greater Boston district more or less inconvenienced by a shortage of their water supply, Winchester, with its abundance of water, and of a quality greatly above the average, has good cause to congratulate itself. With three good sized reservoirs situated in the Middlesex Fells, a serious drought is not to be in the least feared.

This has been a dry season of considerable note, and the town's water supply has been called upon for extra large quantities of water, but the supply is still equal to the demand and likely to be so. Winchester evidently had nothing to gain as yet, by entering the Metropolitan system.

Mr. Parkhurst's Candidacy.

In announcing the candidacy of Mr. Lewis Parkhurst for the Representative of this District to the General Court, the Republican party will certainly have a strong man and one who will meet with the approval of many voters. It would be hard to find a man of Mr. Parkhurst's abilities, so well known and appreciated by all Winchester citizens, who would be any more acceptable to represent the town and district.

Mr. Parkhurst is a busy man. He is not seeking the office—but if it is the desire of the citizens that he be their representative, then he is willing to give of his time and ability in serving and the STAR takes much pleasure in being able to present his name at this time, among others, as a candidate for this office.

Mr. Parkhurst is today one of the strongest figures in the government and improvement of Winchester, and he has been faithful and untiring in his endeavors to serve the town to its best advantage during the many important positions he has held on its boards and committees. As he is willing to become its representative in the General Court, his former actions give assurance that Winchester will be ably represented if he should be the choice of the party.

W. C. T. U. NOTES.

While Prince Wilhelm is in this country and during this week entertained by Boston, our attention is turned to Sweden. It is of special interest to temperance workers to know that so many of Sweden's best men and women are giving not only their example as total abstainers but take an active part in movements tending to the overthrow of alcohol as a necessary factor in life.

At the Anti-Alcoholism Congress held in Stockholm the last week of July, Prince Gustav Adolph opened the Congress. As it was given in English the representative of the W. C. T. U., Mrs. Edith Smith Davis has reported it to us in full. A few extracts will show his attitude on the subject.

"When I was asked to be the honorary president of the Congress and to declare it open, I gladly accepted, feeling that the question of how best to fight against the question of the misuse of alcohol is one of the most important social questions of the present day."

"The use and misuse of alcoholic drinks seems to date back to very old times, but only latterly has it been scientifically proved that exaggerated use of this stimulant will most certainly, sooner or later lead to very grave consequences for the human race, it being now generally recognized that not only those who themselves are drunkards are ruined both physically and morally, but that their children too are from birth onwards less strong in body as well as mind." "From an economical point of view, too, a diminished consumption of spirits is very desirable. In this country for instance, over a hundred millions of Swedish crowns are yearly expended on intoxicating drinks of all sorts."

After giving his opinion as to "why is the use of alcohol still as great as it is" that the ceaseless work going on in the great industries is to a great extent the involuntary cause owing to the crowded population, poor lodging and food combined with dull and exhausting work of manufactures produces a want for some stimulant. "Better lodgings, better food and when work is done, useful and attractive recreations, such as lectures, libraries, sports and other things, are, if possible to obtain, a great help in the fight against alcohol, but the temperance movement alone is likely finally to be successful in the struggle, even if the victory now may seem afar off."

"Many good results have already been achieved, and one is glad to be able to state that in this country the interest for the anti-alcoholic movement seems to be very great especially among young people. Thus in the public schools nearly one quarter of the boys are total abstainers." "Let it become an honor among the different nations to be foremost in the struggle against alcoholism! Let it be their pride to show each other the results of their several efforts."

WINCHESTER NINE WON.

Notwithstanding the wet weather of last Saturday, the ball game scheduled to take place between the Winchester nine and a team from Houghton & Dutton's of Boston was played, the home team winning by a score of 7-2. A large audience viewed the game, which proved to be among the best of the series. Caulfield pitched a strong game, holding his opponents to three hits. The score:

OBSERVATIONS.

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

Why not at least have a sketch made showing how the river and ponds in the central part of the town might be improved so as to be things of beauty instead of what they are now? I believe the town would gladly appropriate the money for the cost of such a sketch and that it would lead to having the work done. The town and the Metropolitan Park should own and control this water and proceed to beautify it.

We are in health district No. 9 under the new law of this year. Dr. Charles E. Simpson of Lowell is the inspector.

There can be no doubt after Wednesday night's band concert on Manchester Field that the crowd wants them in the evening, and that being so, why is not that the time to have them? These concerts are supposed to be for the million, there is plenty of room on the field, and also on the parkway for those who do not want to be in the crowd. But there should be an arc light or two there so that people may see their way out. Ball games for afternoon and band concerts for evening will fill the pleasure bill best.

All those who have not should visit the navy yard and go over the old Constitution, then visit one of the modern battleships close by. The Tennessee is there at present, one of the largest in our navy, open to all, and several hours can be pleasantly spent on her.

A BUSINESS MAN

FOR THE LEGISLATURE.

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

I wish to bring before the readers of the STAR the belief that Mr. Fred V. Wooster would make a most desirable person to represent the town the coming year in the lower branch of the Legislature. Mr. Wooster has given considerable of his time to the affairs of Winchester during many years, and what he has undertaken has been well and thoroughly done. As one of the original members of the sewer board which planned and laid out our admirable system of sewers he was a faithful and conscientious worker, and he and his associates on the board will be remembered in the years that are to come. For the past few years he has been the chairman of the Board of Assessors where he has acquired himself creditably in this trying office during the times of large town expenditures and endeavors to keep the tax rate down. He has also served on many important committees. If the voters want a business man, why not nominate Mr. Wooster?

The Conductor Courteous.

St. John's, N. F.—some of the natives call it "Senjens"—is far more picturesque than beautiful. But its quaintness redeems it from stupidity, and, wander where you will, you meet with that courtesy and kindness that are the graces of people who live unhurried lives in remote places where strangers are a welcome break to their monotony. When you say to some casual benefactor that you are "much obliged" for some courteous direction, he will touch his hat and say, "Thank you," as if you had conferred the favor upon him. The street car conductor (they even have a trolley line, though how it can be run in winter is a mystery) will see that you are set down where you should leave the car, and if you are uncertain of your way, will get off his car and point your destination out, holding his other passengers until he is sure you understand.—Travel Magazine.

Didn't Get It Just Right.

The subject of profanity was being discussed the other evening at a dinner party in Harlem. When one of the guests facetiously hinted that his host could tear it off a little when no women were present the hostess became indignant. "I would have you understand," she said, with crushing dignity, "that my husband never says anything before ladies that he wouldn't say anywhere." She is still wondering why it was that everybody laughed.—New York Tribune.

The Incentive.

"Does your son study Greek in college?"
"Oh, yes. He's very enthusiastic over it."
"I thought he didn't care for languages?"
"He doesn't, as a rule, but next year the football team is to have Greek signals and Harry is trying for the seven."—Kansas City Independent.

GAS COOKS THE FOOD— COAL COOKS THE COOK

That's the difference between using coal in its natural state and using it in our concentrated form—as gas.

Think of the difference between having to carry in coal, fill up the grate, and then wait until it burns up before you can do your cooking—and a gas range, where a turn of the fingers and the striking of a match gives you all the heat you want in a moment.

Then when you are through with a gas stove another turn of the fingers—and the flame is out. No sifting of ashes—no dirt—no bother.

Gas is the fuel of to-day. To use coal in its natural form is as out-of-date as to use tallow dips.

Let us send you some of our arguments in favor of using gas—a postal card or phone request will bring them to you.

RESENT ATTACKS.

Milford and Hopedale Object to Yellow Journalism

Democratic Newspaper Calls to Mind Story of Ananias

The people of Milford don't take kindly to the vitriolic and indecent attacks of the Hearst papers upon Hopedale and the Draper Company. The latter town was formerly a part of Milford and many of its citizens are employees at the Draper works, and they resent the malicious slanders that have been heaped upon them within the past year.

The Milford News, a Democratic newspaper, under date of August 19, 1907, referring to the recent annual festival of the employees of the Draper Co. at Hopedale, reflects the impressions of the people in the following interesting observations of the event:

"SLAVES" DID WELL

"The slaves are free today." As a representative of this paper was wandering about Hopedale Saturday taking in the sights of that joyous holiday, he chanced to come upon two young men, evidently strangers, one of whom voiced the foregoing remark. The newspaper man scanned the speaker's countenance sharply but could catch not a tremor to tell whether the utterance was in jest or earnest. It was based, of course, upon the Hearst diatribes on spotless town; and as the Hearst paper made no reference to the doings of the great holiday, it must be plain that the author of the remark was not a scribe in its employ—or else he could not find food for the mud machine.

THE DRAPER YOKE

As slaves, owned body and soul by the Drapers, it must appear that the Hopedale residents possess a rare faculty of casting off the yoke on their great holiday. The immense crowd in attendance on this festive occasion presented a truly cosmopolitan aspect, as to nationality. All nations and orders of society were represented in the vast throng that plunged into the pleasures of the hour with hearty zest. It was also apparent that many of them were attracted from other places more or less remote from Hopedale, and it was utterly impossible to distinguish between the victims of the Draper yoke and the free born Americans who are clear of serfdom.

REMINISCENCE OF ANANIAS

The affair was in reality a festival of labor. Those in charge of the exercises were employees of this great juggernaut of oppression for the working man. It is doubtful if any industrial concern in New England, if, indeed, in the United States, can parallel the annual festival of the great Draper works. If any one totally unacquainted with the character of the occasion or with the environment surrounding it had happened to drop into the little town on that day and witnessed the exuberance of joy that shone on the multitude of faces, he would have been put to his stumps to guess what was behind and underneath it. But if he had chanced to read some of the choice literature embellished with flaring cuts, which steadily appears in the Hearst papers, he would—well, he might call to mind the story of Ananias.

A Magnolia Elysium.

When good Charlestonians die, their bodies, it is said, go to Magnolia cemetery and their souls to the Magnolia gardens. Indeed, it were quite excusable in a wandering spirit if, chancing on these gardens when the azaleas were in their radiant perfection, he should mistake the place for Elysium, especially if looking for such a gardenlike Elysium as Herrick's. Although widely known and visited yearly by hundreds, Magnolia is not a public garden, but a noble old estate on the Ashley river, belonging now, as it has belonged for 200 years, to the Drayton family of South Carolina. Very much as the folk of Tokyo go out to worship the beauty of the cherry blossoms, so in March and April Charleston people and any strangers fortunate enough to be within their gates make a pilgrimage to Magnolia. During the season the little steamer plies between Charleston and Magnolia, making the trip twice daily—Francis Duncan in Century.

THE NEEDED SPANKING.

Hughes Administered It In His Two Cent Fare Veto.

It seems not improbable that Governor Hughes' veto of the two cent rate bill may mark the beginning of the end of what may be fairly termed predatory legislation. The judicial words of the governor are in marked contrast to the attitude of those legislators and city politicians who, with demagogic short sightedness, have assumed that the best way to win votes is to badger corporations.

The recklessness of these men has brought the country to the verge of a business depression that is the natural result of the sudden check to industrial development, for men with brains enough to make money are not likely to risk it in new enterprises or extensions of old ones when all prospect of profit may be cut away by an act of a state legislature or a city council. It is great fun for the baby to poke sticks into the works of a watch, and the infantile intelligence of certain "statesmen" probably derives equal delight from their attempts to "regulate" industries of whose workings they know no more than the baby does about the watch. Governor Hughes has administered the needed spanking.

Unfair Comparisons.

One of the commonest arguments advanced by those favoring municipal ownership as proof of the excellent working of that system is to compare the cost of lighting under municipal ownership with the contract price paid private companies at the time when the plant was taken over.

They are specially prone to do this in cases where the municipal plant was started at an early period, when electric lighting was in its infancy and when the cost was necessarily very much higher than it is now.

They entirely ignore the fact that there has been a steady fall in price of lights furnished by private companies since that period and that if they had had no municipal plant they would probably be getting lights at a lower cost today than the municipal plant is capable of securing.

Government's True Functions.

The true and only function of government is to see to it that the citizens are protected in their rights and in the free enjoyment of their means of livelihood from foreign invasion, from the attacks of criminals and from individuals or organizations that would take advantage of the power derived from wealth or privileges to oppress their fellows and extort from them excessive compensation for services. This involves the right of reasonable regulation of public utilities, but it does not warrant any city or state in undertaking work that can be performed by a private enterprise. The moment a government, either monarchical or republican, oversteps this limit it starts upon a road that has no turning and that logically ends in absolute paternalism or in state socialism.

Great M. O. Graft Scheme.

The officials of a Kansas city have discovered a new way of working the graft scheme. Ignoring the fact that a private company had a franchise and contract for lighting the streets at a very low rate, they formed themselves into a company, voted themselves a franchise and made a contract with themselves for lighting the city. Under the terms of this contract the taxpayers furnish the building, labor, steam, oil, waste, etc., and the city agrees to take over the plant at any time within two years at the original cost plus 8 per cent per annum. The scheme has not been patented, and other city councils which find ordinary methods of grafting too slow are at liberty to make use of this process.

The White Man's Burden in Decatur.

The Journal of Decatur, Ind., recently printed a list of persons in that city who pay taxes of more than $100 with the caption, "The White Man's Burden—Is Your Name on the List?—Municipal Ownership and $4.74—How Do You Like It?" Appealed to for elucidation of this cryptic utterance, the editor writes:

"The tax in this city is $4.74 on every $100. The city of Decatur owns both her waterworks plant and electric light. There can be no question that municipal ownership is to a great extent responsible."

General English Revolt.

The London Morning Advertiser gives an account of the organization on June 5 of a federation of ratepayers and kindred associations to take steps "to prevent reckless enterprises of the municipal bodies from being carried on as they are at the present time." Representatives from organizations all over the country were present. This movement is a pretty good indication of the revolt of the English people against municipal ownership.

STAR OFFICE

MARK TWAIN AS A BOWLER.

Bewildering Results He Achieved In His First Game.

More than forty years ago in San Francisco the office staff adjourned upon conclusion of its work at 2 o'clock in the morning to a great bowling establishment where there were twelve alleys. I was invited, rather perfunctorily and as a matter of etiquette—by which I mean that I was invited politely, but not urgently. But when I diffidently declined with thanks and explained that I knew nothing about the game those lively young fellows became at once eager and anxious and urgent to have my society. This flattered me, for I perceived no trap, and I innocently and gratefully accepted their invitation. I was given an alley all to myself. The boys explained the game to me, and they also explained to me that there would be an hour's play and that the player who scored the fewest ten strikes in the hour would have to provide oysters and beer for the combination. This disturbed me very seriously, since I promised the bankruptcy, and I was sorry that this detail had been overlooked in the beginning. But my pride would not allow me to back out now, so I stayed in and did what I could to look satisfied and glad I had come. It is not likely that I looked as contented as I wanted to, but the others looked glad enough to make up for it, for they were quite unable to hide their evil joy. They showed me how to stand and how to stoop and how to aim the ball and how to let fly, and then the game began.

The results were astonishing. In my ignorance I delivered the balls in apparently every way except the right one, but no matter—during half an hour I never started a ball down the alley that didn't score a ten strike every time at the other end. The others lost their grip early and their joy along with it. Now and then one of them got a ten strike, but the occurrence was so rare that it made no show alongside of my giant score. The boys surrendered at the end of the half hour and put on their coats and gathered around me and in courteous but sufficiently definite language expressed their opinion of an experience worn and seasoned expert who would stoop to lying and deception in order to rob kids and well meaning friends who had put their trust in him under the delusion that he was honest and honorable. I was not able to convince them that I had not lied, for now my character was gone, and they refused to attach any value to anything I said. The proprietor of the place stood by for awhile saying nothing; then he came to my defense. He said: "It looks like a mystery, gentlemen, but it isn't a mystery after it's explained. That is a grooved alley; you've only to start a ball down it any way you please and the groove will do the rest; it will slam the ball against the northeast curve of the head pin every time, and nothing can save the ten from going down."

It was true. The boys made the experiment, and they found that there was no art that could send a ball down that alley and fail to score a ten strike with it. When I had told those boys that I knew nothing about that game I was speaking only the truth. But it was ever thus all through my life—whenever I have diverged from custom and principle and uttered a truth the rule has been that the hearer hadn't strength of mind enough to believe it.—From Mark Twain's Autobiography in North American Review.

Women as Well as Men Are Made Miserable by Kidney and Bladder Trouble.

Kidney trouble preys upon the mind, discourages and lessens ambition, beauty, vigor and cheerfulness soon disappear when the kidneys are out of order or diseased.

Kidney trouble has become so prevalent that it is not uncommon for a child to be born afflicted with weak kidneys. If the child urinates too often, if the urine scalds the flesh, or if, when the child reaches an age when it should be able to control the passage, it is yet afflicted with bed-wetting, depend upon it, the cause of the difficulty is kidney trouble, and the first step should be towards the treatment of these important organs. This unpleasant trouble is due to a diseased condition of the kidneys and bladder and not to a habit as most people suppose.

Women as well as men are made miserable with kidney and bladder trouble, and both need the same great remedy. The mild and the immediate effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It is sold by druggists, in fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles. You may have a sample bottle by mail free, also a Home of Swamp-Root pamphlet telling all about Swamp-Root, including many of the thousands of testimonial letters received from sufferers cured. In writing Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., be sure and mention this paper. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

...A... Labor Day Realism.

By FRANK H. SWEET.

Copyright, 1906, by Frank H. Sweet.

PENNINGTON lit a cigarette, took one pull, hesitated, and then threw it away. He had forgotten the doctor's quietly spoken but incisive words, and now remembered them with a sudden return of his old dread of what might come.

And yet, what odds? The world was an unsatisfactory place at best, and if it was to be hedged in by high walls what pleasure would the little cells be?

He was no worse off than others, and his mind went over the little group of his own particular college friends, talented men, every one of them, with incomes above all possible whims. Baker, the class orator and best social man, was at a Keeley; Tomson and Burke had run out, not financially, but physically, and were spending half their time under doctors' care; Paton's heart was weak, brought on by smoking, and he had given up cigarettes two years before; Jones and McFales and Turner were the only ones who carried their heads and shoulders just as straight and high as when at college, and they were the three he saw the least of. Jones had gone in for agriculture, and in spite of all his money, was a hard-working, practical outdoor farmer, with bronzed face and heavy voice and broad shoulders. McFales and Turner spent much of their time yachting, and when not off on the water were pretty sure to be riding after hounds or playing golf. And they, too, were strong and bronzed by the outdoor life.

Pennington shrugged his shoulders impatiently and a little dismally. He did not care for athletics, he had no taste for farming, and yet there had been a time when he dreamed dreams. But accomplishments went with trades and professions and things like that, and with so much money he could not drop into them.

Unconsciously he lit another cigarette, and it was only at its contact with his lips that he remembered and threw it away.

The sidewalk was now thickening so with humanity that he could scarcely crowd himself forward. Another ten feet, and the thickening began to solidify and become stationary. Pennington soon found himself wedged against a letter box near the curb.

A band of music was approaching, and his gaze went to it with the crowd's. It was the only thing he could do.

"HOW HAPPY AND STRONG THEY ARE!" SAID A VOICE.

Behind the music came a great block of marching men, and behind them another, and still another. Then Pennington understood. It was Labor day, and this was the trades parade.

Under other circumstances Pennington's gaze would have swept away indifferently, but here it was the sidewalk or the street, and of the two the street was the less tedious. It was at least a moving bore.

The first impression that came clearly to his understanding was the strong, stalwart units of the blocks; the next, their contented and even happy looks. Then he started slightly, for among the faces he saw one that he remembered at college, a man who had gone in for literature and the higher things, a gentleman of fine and cultivated taste. And here he was marching in the trades, his figure strong, his eyes clear, his face happy.

Pennington grew perplexed, troubled. What did it mean? There were no faces like that among his friends, and his friends were of the favored few of earth. Even Jones and McFales and Turner were not the same. They were contented and healthy, but with a difference. In this face he had seen a suggestion of the dreams he had himself dreamed, a joy of life that was above materialism.

"How happy and strong they are!" said a voice at his side, and Pennington looked down, a quick glow coming to his face and fading yet more quickly. It was the girl who had tinged his dreams, who had since grown distant and sometimes scornful. There was a note of wistfulness, of vague entreaty and almost wonder in the voice, which he felt, but could not understand. His face grew yet more troubled.

"Yes, they seem strong and happy, Esther," he answered, "in spite of being in trades."

"Because of being in the trades," she corrected swiftly, a vibrant ring in her voice that brought his eyes again to her face. But she was looking out at the marching blocks, her gaze steady, but with a tremulousness of the delicate lips that somehow reminded him of the odd note in her voice.

She did not look toward him once, and when the procession had passed and the sidewalk relaxed its tension she slipped into the crowd and was lost. Pennington remained by the letter box until the sidewalk was clear and the street almost deserted; then he turned and walked in the opposite direction from what he had intended, his head bent thoughtfully.

The next day there was a rumor of Pennington's going abroad; his housekeeper had received a note to close the house, the agent to look after the affairs until further instruction.

Down on one of the back streets—a street unknown to Pennington's old life—were many dingy offices, meager in appointments, but representing a vast accretion of labor. At one of them a line of men were seeking employment, passing in front of a keen-eyed foreman, who accepted or rejected them almost with a glance, but the rejections were few. Men were wanted for new blocks of buildings going up, men of skill, of strength, of merely carrying capacity, anything that could add to the labor force and hasten the work.

So when a white handed man of confessed incapacity stopped in front of the foreman's desk he was looked at askance, but finally accepted and set to carrying brick from the sidewalk to the men who were laying the foundation. It was muscle making or muscle breaking work, and for the first few days—or weeks even—it seemed wholly of the breaking.

But there was an under element of doggedness in Pennington's nature which had never come to the surface, and, though his limbs trembled with weariness long before the day was half over and at noon he sank into a crouching heap upon the nearest board rather than cross the street to a restaurant, he struggled on in some way until the hour of dismissal came. The second day the boss told him gruffly that he could not afford to pay him more than half wages, and the third day that he should pay him nothing at all, for he was worth nothing.

That was tantamount to a discharge, and so the boss meant it, but it was not one of actual words. Pennington disregarded it.

The boss looked toward him doubtfully from time to time, but in the end concluded to let him remain. Such determination promised good work if the man survived the breaking in. Besides, he must be in dire need. The boss could understand why such a workman might seek employment in vain. When pay night came he was given an envelope like the others, and the boss thought he knew why the now thirsh and bleeding fingers turned the envelope over and over and finally slipped it into a pocket where a hand was allowed to remain as though to feel its contact. But he did not. It was merely the first money that the new man had ever earned.

Pennington had a little room over the secondhand Jew store where he purchased his coarse suit of working clothes, but he had not brought money to pay the room rent. He possessed a cheap silver watch, however, and this he left with the Jew as security. With his first pay envelope he redeemed the watch.

In his room were a cot, a chair and a rusty little stove propped up with wooden blocks. But it was not until the third week that he started a fire in the stove and made disastrously ineffectual attempts to cook his breakfast. It was a good sign, however. And by this time the blisters on his hands had disappeared under rough lumps and ridges.

How he had lived before this no one knew but himself, for until he received his second pay envelope he did not commence crossing the street to the restaurant for a noon lunch. When he sat down for a few minutes at the noon hour he did not double over in a tremulous heap as he had done at first, and, though his face was whiter and thinner, its flesh was firmer than when he first came, and his eyes were clearer.

The boss looked at him with more approval now and was beginning to see that the man knew things outside the working of his hands and that even their inefficiency would be overcome in time by his determination. For the most part the men were illiterate, and many of them among the foreigners could not even read or write. As Pennington's hands acquired a working knowledge of the materials and his mind began to more thoroughly grasp the details the boss gave him occasional jobs of oversight or authority, for he seemed the best man at hand for them. At first it was an hour or two of keeping the men's time, the stock taking of some of the materials or perhaps a commission downtown to purchase things that required inspection and could not be ordered by ordinary messenger or phone; then, after a year or so, he began to be left in temporary charge during the enforced absences of both foreman and boss. And by that time Pennington's hands were as firm and hard as the average workman's, and his thin face and narrow shoulders were filling out with good, solid flesh.

At the end of three years the foreman started out as an independent contractor, and the boss took his place. Pennington would then have become boss, but the new contractor asked that he go with him as foreman, and Pennington, with an odd feeling of exultation and wonder, consented.

All this time the agent had heard nothing, and an expression of speculation was beginning to appear on his face. Of course Pennington must be dead, for he was a man who required a great deal of money, and being in Europe made the money more imperative. The agent was in half mind to communicate with the nearest relative, but hesitated and concluded to wait a little longer.

A small portion of Esther Kilton's property consisted of downtown tenements, and in the last few years she had become infected with the reform movement and was remodeling them with more regard for the inmates' welfare than her rent roll. Several blocks had already been rebuilt and occupied, and recently to hasten the work she had given a block to a new contractor. When the old buildings were demolished and the new walls up a dozen or more feet she went down to look at the work.

Men were springing up to the cross timbers, dropping back and walking about on the narrow beams carrying heavy loads, and all with such unconcern and fearlessness that she stood looking at them, fearful and yet fascinated.

Poised on the very end of a timber almost above her was an alert, compactly built man who seemed to be directing the work. Something about him drew her gaze back again and again, yet even while her eyes kindled they filled mistily. He was so like and yet so unlike, so what the other might have been and was not.

Presently the man sprang lightly across to another timber, seven or eight feet away, explained something about the work to a new man, then crouched and dropped to the ground twelve feet below.

As he turned he stood facing the owner, and they gazed for some minutes.

SOMETHING ABOUT HIM DREW HER GAZE BACK AGAIN AND AGAIN.

ites into each other's eyes. He had been so absorbed in the work that he had not noticed her presence.

"Esther," he said.

"Ralph Pennington," wonderingly. "I thought you were in Europe."

"No. I have been here all the time."

"In work like this?"

He nodded.

She looked at him, with the color rising warmly to her face. In her eyes was inquiry, then comprehension, joy, exultation.

"Ralph," she said softly after a long silence, "will you come up this evening and—tell me about it?"

There was a smile in Pennington's eyes, though his face remained grave.

"Yes, Esther," he answered, "I will come up and—ask you about it. I am now in the trades."

Don't Try Uncertain Recipes

It is entirely unnecessary to experiment with this, that and the other recipe. Get from your grocer for 10 cents, a package of "OUR-PIE" Preparation—Lemon, Chocolate or Custard—for making pies that are sure to be good.

A REWARD OF FAITH.

The Story of a Church Twice Struck by Lightning.

A congregation in a hilly district in Ohio, says the Youth's Companion, bought a small tract of land and erected a church building upon it. Then the question of insurance came up. Mr. Sipes, the wealthiest member, who had contributed more than half the money needed for the new structure, declared that he did not believe in insurance. "This is the Lord's building. He'll take care of it," he said.

His view prevailed, and there was no insurance. In a few weeks the building was struck by lightning and almost totally consumed by fire. Another one was erected, Mr. Sipes contributing the greater portion of the fund as before. This time the demand was almost unanimous that it be insured, but Mr. Sipes again objected on the same ground.

"If it burn down again, brethren," he said, "I'll agree to rebuild it myself."

Again he carried his point. In less than a month the new church was struck by lightning again, and although strenuous efforts were made to save it, the loss was almost total.

"There must be some reason for this, brethren," said Brother Sipes. "I am going to find out what it is."

Thereupon he employed a force of men to sink a shaft on the site of the twice destroyed church. Within a few days a rich vein of ore was found, and the church property was sold for many times the amount needed to buy land in another locality and build again.

"I tell you, brethren," said Brother Sipes, "it pays to trust the Lord. He's a great deal better business manager than anybody in this congregation."

OLD CARLSBAD.

In Ancient Times the Cure Was Somewhat Violent.

Carlsbad, that fashionable resort in Bohemia, is a very ancient cure place. It has held a royal charter from Kaiser Carl IV. since 1401. History has it that it was the mighty leap from rocky heights to the depths below of a hunted deer pursued by the hounds of Kaiser Carl IV. that led to the discovery of the Sprudel spring and that the deer hunting emperor was the founder of the health resort to which he gave his name.

Originally the Carlsbad cure and the mode of life there, a mode which remained in fashion for at least two centuries, consisted solely in the use of the baths. This, however, was so energetic that the children of the twentieth century are overcome by a feeling of admiration for the doctors who ordered such cures and still greater honor for the patients who could undergo them, for the bath treatment was so severe that it was not infrequently called the "haufresser" or skin enter. It was only about the year 1500 that Dr. Payer, the town physician of Elbogen, near by, ordered the Carlsbad water to be drunk as a cure. Quoting from the publications of the period and Dr. Payer's remarks:

"I have said that this water must be drunk, and as hitherto it was not usually employed for drinking, but only for bathing, this will appear new to many." The quantity of the water prescribed was in handsome proportion to the "skin enter"—twenty, forty and up to sixty cups of a morning regularly.—Town and Country.

A Cardboard Planet.

One remarkable achievement of Sir William Herschel was in connection with the planet Saturn. He had arranged to erect his telescope at Windsor castle to enable Queen Charlotte and the ladies of the court to see the wonders of the ringed planet, but on the evening arranged for the observation great banks of clouds covered the sky. However, he explained that that would not matter, and after the instrument had been carefully directed the queen and her attendants looked through it and saw the great planet and its marvelous rings quite distinctly. Herschel, it seems, had expected bad weather and during the day had made a cardboard model of the Saturnian system and erected it in the grounds a lamp at the back providing the necessary illumination.—Westminster Gazette.

He Wasn't a Gormand.

That wary old fellow, Ballie Macduff, was enticed into a friend's house the other night, and his host managed to win 50 shillings from him at "nap." What is more remarkable, when the baillie had parted with his last shilling he rose, full of wrath.

"Won't you stay to supper?" pressed his host. "We have a fine bit of ham waiting."

HINDOO PROVERBS.

Happiness consists in the absence of anxiety.
Truth, contentment, patience and mercy belong to great minds.
Little things should not be despised. Many straws united will bind an elephant.
It can never be safe to unite with an enemy. Water, though heated, will soon extinguish fire.
He who removes another from danger and he who removes terror from the mind are the greatest of friends.
Courage is tried in war, integrity in the payment of debt and interest, the faithfulness of a wife in poverty and friendship in distress.
Every one looking downward becomes impressed with the idea of his own greatness, but looking upward feels his own littleness.
He who in your presence speaks kindly, but in your absence seeks to injure, must be rejected like a bowl of poison covered with milk.
No Sentiment.
Edith's Papa—And so you love my daughter? Edith's Admirer—I do indeed, sir. I cannot tell you how much I love her. Do you know what it is to see a single face everywhere, to hear a single voice ever sounding in your ears, to be possessed by the one idea, to feel all the time that the one presence is before you? Edith's Papa—No, young man, I have never had any of those feelings since I signed the pledge.—Pearson's Weekly.

Every Known Object, Even Ice, Contains Some Heat.

SOME PARADOXES EXPLAINED

How the Wheels of an Express Train Going Forward at Sixty Miles an Hour Travel Backward at the Rate of Ten Miles an Hour.

In "Paradoxes of Science and Nature" the author, Mr. Hampson, explains the why and wherefore of many things which appear to contradict scientific principle or settled belief.

For example, when a train is going at a rate of sixty miles an hour, what part of it is moving backward? This is no trick, no "sell." The whole train is not going backward, and you are not the innocent goat to be sacrificed upon its rails. The train is going forward at the rate of sixty miles an hour, and yet a portion of that same train is going in a contrary direction at a pretty fair rate of speed. It is not going relatively even; it is actually and literally in a hurry in that direction. You may prove this for yourself with a bicycle. Push its front wheel up against a house wall. Make a chalk mark on the lowest part of the wheel and on the ground immediately beneath it. Back the machine a little from the wall, and when the wheel has moved an inch the marked spot will not appear to have moved at all. As the machine is slowly backed farther the first visible movement of the bottom of the wheel is upward from the ground, while it is impossible to see that the marked spot has backed from the wall to the smallest extent. This means that all wheels, traveling at any speed, have a part—the part in immediate contact with the ground—which has no movement at all.

But the wheel of a railroad car has a flange, a portion which juts down below the wheel's point of contact on the rail. That point of contact then becomes a center; the whole wheel passes forward above it, while the flange beneath it passes under it, going backward. That is the part of the wheel that travels in the contrary direction. And by a simple mathematical formula its rate of speed is calculable at about one-sixth of the speed of the axle of the wheel, which represents the forward rate of travel. So that on every express train going sixty miles an hour toward New York there's a portion that is traveling toward Boston at its humble ten.

The paradox that sail and ice boats may fly faster than the wind which propels them is obvious and commonplace to the point of boredom. But consider the intelligence of the average billiard ball. Place three balls in a row along the cushion, touching each other. Place another ball alongside the cushion, say eight inches from this row. Hit this lightly and smoothly, so that it strikes the row. It will come to rest at once on striking the nearest ball. The nearest ball and the next one to it will also remain stationary. But the third ball will start off from the bunch at precisely the speed of the ball you have struck, and it will quietly move off to the exact distance from the row that you had placed the ball which you struck. The balls will then be in a position exactly the reverse of the one at which you started. The ball you struck with your cue will be the third ball in the row, and the last ball in the original row will be at rest just eight inches away from them. If you had placed two balls eight inches from your row of three, and hit them with your cue so that they struck the row of three, then just two balls would leave the row of three and retire to the eight inch position occupied by your two cue balls. Plainly the billiard ball is smart enough to come in out of the rain. It can count and add and subtract. It probably has its opinion of the people who bat it about the cushions with not nearly so true an instinct for angles and velocities as it has itself.

Hereafter when coal is high we may heat our houses with ice, for ice gives out heat—not much. It would take a large chunk to heat the public library, but it might be done. Everything in nature has some heat, every known object, even ice. Ice is cold to us only because it has much less heat than our bodies. It hasn't much heat, to be sure, but still a little. You may lower its melting point by mixing in some salt. A mixture of water and salt requires 32 degrees of frost to freeze it. Therefore the mixture of ice and salt can be melted by the heat of anything that has a higher temperature than that. Such a thing is pure ice which has been exposed for some time to the air. It remains at freezing, or melting, point, 32 degrees F., or zero on the centigrade scale. At this temperature then it has heat enough to melt a portion of its own substance that has been made more easily meltable by addition of salt. It proceeds to melt a part of itself, devoting a part of its heat energy to this work—that is to say, that having used up some of its heat it has less heat left. And that is further to say that all the while the ice was melting it was growing colder.

We come now to the ice furnace. A large mass of pure ice is contained in a galvanized receptacle, having a flue leading from the top. About this receptacle is placed ice mixed with salt. The salted ice melts. In melting it draws from the pure ice its heat. Our patent flue conducts this heat to all parts of the house. And there is a great saving in coal.

Water may be made serviceable as a fuel. It is no mere reportorial hyperbole to say that the water which the firemen turned upon a fire rather added to the intensity of the conflagration. The heat of the flames instantly disintegrated the water and, converting it into its constituent gases, burned them. Let only some inventive genius set himself to work and apply this principle to the kitchen range and he shall have fame and fortune and we a cheap and handy substitute for anthracite at $7 a ton.

The soundest of eyes has its blind spot. Anybody can find his own after a short search. On a plain piece of paper place the capital letters R and L some five inches apart, like this:

Now close your left eye, holding it tight with your hand if necessary. Then hold the paper off, say, eighteen inches from the open right eye. Look only at the letter R. But "out of the corner of your eye," as we say, you will catch a glimpse of the letter L. Now slowly move the paper closer to the eye, keeping that eye peeled on the R all the while. When the paper is about six inches from the eye the L will disappear. You have ceased to see it out of the corner—that is, you have apparently ceased to see it. Move the paper closer yet to your eye, and the L will reappear. It has simply passed the blind spot in your organ of vision.

We hear a great deal about the heartstrings—those famous heartstrings which the theater press agent promises us shall be played upon by his drama. You sit in your seat before the play, turning the leaves of your programme, and you hit upon the announcement of the next attraction. It is sure to say that this powerful attraction will reach the heartstrings. Now, most of us have held those heartstrings to be but a figure of speech. Poor lay fools that we are, we know not that they have a place in physiology and a very large place in everyday life. The heart without heartstrings doesn't work, that's all.

We all know that between the auricle and ventricle are valves. But those wonderful automatic valves are not stout enough in their own tissue to hold back the pressure that the heart imparts to the flow of blood at each of its beats. And nature, with her wonderful provision for everything, has fitted to those valves complete sets of tiny wires which stiffen them to their work. Of course they are not of wire; they are tendons, but they do very well, considering the double duty they perform. Go to the Bowdoin square and learn for yourself the extra they are called upon to perform.

Truly harmonious nature has her capricious moments and dearly loves a feat, a paradox, a bit of sport.—Boston Transcript.

The Nonchalant Canton Merchant.

Frequently on entering a Canton shop you will find its owner with a book in one hand and pipe or fan in the other and wholly absorbed in his studies. You will be doomed to disappointment if you expect the smoker to start up at once, all smiles and blandness, rubbing his hands together as he makes a shrewd guess as to what he is likely to take out of you and receiving you with obsequiousness or with rudeness accordingly. Quite the reverse. Your presence is apparently unnoticed unless you happen to lift anything. Then you hear that the fan has been arrested and feel that a keen eye is bent on your movements all the while. But it is not until you inquire for some article that the gentleman, now certain that you mean to trade, will rise without bustle from his seat, show you his goods or state the price he means to sell at, with a polite yet careless air which plainly says, "If it suits you, we will make an exchange."—"Through China With a Camera."

The Minute of Shells.

Among the minute existences upon the face of the globe that have been elevated by means of the microscope into an honored position of independence are the foraminifera, mostly marine atoms inhabiting many chambered cells. At one time they were considered mollusca, at another they were ranked among the Infusoria and eventually they were settled comfortably in the subkingdom protozoa. The calcareous shells have in the past formed vast deposits of chalk. They are often today congregated as recluses of sand. These animals are not always minute, but generally they are subjects imperatively demanding the lens. An ounce of sand has been known to contain 6,000 of their shells, and in the West Indies the figure once ran into millions. Your object under the naked eye seems to be merely a pinch of brown sand; under the microscope you have a great variety of the loveliest hilliputian shells, representing every variety of form known to the conchologist.

Pampered Dogs.

London veterinarians tell surprising stories about dogs. There was a poodle for which a prime leg of lamb was roasted every day; and there were other pets which, when taken into the custody of the veterinary, were visited every day by their owners in carriages, whose footmen would get down from the box and hand in partridge breasts and other dainties on silver dishes for the sick dog.

Old Noble, Queen Victoria's favorite collie, was often taken in as a patient by one veterinary and found to be suffering from overfeeding. It would frequently eat a whole roast pheasant, and the wonder is that it lived so long. A veterinary once got a telegram from Oxford to go down instantly and treat a pet dog that had fallen down stairs and broken its leg. But the veterinary had to wire that the last train was gone, whereupon another message came: "Take special." And he did, at a cost of $160.

If You Are Sick

It is because some of the organs of the body are not doing their work well. There is a lack of that nervous energy that gives them motion. Consequently you are weak, worn-out, nervous, irritable, cannot sleep; have headache, indigestion, etc. because there is not sufficient nerve force to keep the organs active and allow them to perform their natural functions. Dr. Miles' Nervine restores health because it restores this nervous energy.

"I have been sick for a year, and did not know what was the matter with me. I tried many remedies and none of them proved of any value. I heard of Dr. Miles' Nervine. I procured a bottle, and before I had taken half of it I was better. I would have had nervous prostration, if I had not got this medicine when I did. I continued to take it until I was entirely well. I have since recommended it to five of my lady friends, and they have all thanked me for doing so, for it benefited them all."

Dr. Miles' Nervine is sold by your druggist, who will guarantee that the first bottle will benefit you. If it fails, he will refund your money.

Coughing in Lieu of Oratory.

A singular fashion which prevailed among the preachers of Cromwell's time was that of coughing or hemming in the middle of a sentence in order to attract the attention of the congregation. The necessity of continually attracting the attention of the listeners could not have argued well for the brilliancy of the sermons. Some authorities say that the preachers coughed merely as an ornament to speech. At any rate, when the sermons were printed, as many of them were, the coughs and hems were always indicated on the margin of the page.—St. Louis Republic.

NEWSY PARAGRAPHS.

It costs $50 per funeral for members of Boston's city government. In some instances this money should not be regretted.

Fortunately for the Republicans, nobody even dreams that Mr. Lawson, in his attacks upon Mr. Whitney, is working in their interest, or is in their pay. If any other man made such a speech, the Republicans would be suspected of connivance. All the same, they are not lamenting over Mr. Lawson's course.

Mr. and Mrs. Emmons Hatch are home from Marshfield Hills.

The August number of The Boston & Maine Messenger, published by the B. & M. Railroad Co., has an interesting and useful article on "Abandoned Farms," a careful perusal of which we heartily recommend. It suggests a practical way of dealing with the abandoned farms of New England.

Miss Blanche H. Hawes has returned from Atlanta, Me.

Mr. George H. Gilbert arrived home Wednesday from Dublin, N. H., where he had been passing the summer. He says he is glad to be at his home in Winchester again. Frank, his coachman drove his horses home over the road.

An exchange, evidently speaking from experience, has this to say about the telephone: "Time was when to do ordinary marketing for a dinner took hours; now the housekeeper loses but a minute at the phone and the dinner is in the home. There are the business conveniences and burden lightening of the telephone, and it is also becoming a great factor in the social affairs of life, which many are learning who are on a two, three or four party line. 'Line is busy' will soon necessitate everybody having a line of his own."

Public opinion when backed by the local paper is almost irresistible power. This was made clear in the removal of the obnoxious liquor sign on Washington street.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert C. Metcalf have returned to Winchester from Glen Falls, N. Y.

The political pot is beginning to boil down here. Winchester has the picking of a Representative to the General Court this year, and already several candidates have put in an appearance for the office. If it was left to me I should nominate Dr. B. On his last birthday anniversary Mr. Samuel W. Twombly announced that he would be a candidate for Representative from this District this fall, it being Winchester's turn to elect.

He served in the House 36 years ago, and again two terms in succession 36 years, or so, later. He is now 86 or 87 years old, and it was supposed that his last term in the Legislature closed his political career; indeed, it was so announced at the time. Mr. Twombly is a good man and worthy citizen, he has done more than any other person to make our town the beautiful place it is; but I do not believe that a man close on to 90 years old, with the infirmities of age clinging to him, can count for much in the House. Mr. Twombly is too old and infirm for the office. Then there are a plenty of young, ambitious men in the community who would like to represent the town in the Legislature, and would do credit to themselves if elected. Give the young men a chance.—(Woburn Journal).

Our contemporary should remember that Mr. Twombly is a pretty vigorous man today.

Local Board of Health Running Short of Cash.

New Laws, Outside Aid and Other Expenses Depleting Treasury.

When the local Board of Health presented their estimates of expenses for the current year to the citizens at the annual meeting last March, the gentlemen composing the Board evidently did not know what was before them. They asked for exactly the amount of money that it was supposed would be needed, judging from past years. They did not take into consideration the health laws that would be passed by the last Legislature, and indeed, how could they, and yet these new laws are calling for the expenditure of considerable additional money. And again no account could be taken of sickness among persons who claim Winchester as their legal residence, yet living in other places. A person taken sick with a contagious disease and who is living in another city or town and not able to pay sick expenses and who can show residence in Winchester, can call upon the Board of Health to meet the bills incurred. One would naturally suppose that the expense of those afflicted with contagious diseases would be charged up to the local Overseers of the Poor, if they were penniless, but this is not so. If the Overseers of the Poor were to do this, then the recipient of charity would be placed on the pauper list, a condition not to be desired in many cases where assistance is given. When a Board of Health furnishes aid this does not occur.

When the local Board put in their estimate last spring, they did not know that they would have to pay $100 to Beverly for nursing a sick woman with a contagious disease, or like sums for two persons in Cambridge and $100 for one in Boston, making a total of $400. These unlooked for expenses made a great drain on the funds of the Board, but there was no way to escape payment, as the law says the expenses incurred must be paid by the

JOHN O. McFEELEY.

John Owen McFeeley, the thirteen year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Bernard A. McFeeley of Winchester place, died at the Mass. Gen. Hospital on Monday morning of blood poisoning. The lad had been troubled with an ulcerated tooth, and although he had a bad mouth no serious results were feared. On Saturday his condition assumed a threatening aspect and he was taken to the hospital, but the doctors were unable to save his life. John was a remarkably bright boy and had many young friends. Last season he was promoted two grades in the public schools and was to have entered the Wadleigh school next week. The lad's father, Bernard McFeeley, was for some years switchman in the centre for the electric cars, he now being in the employ of Kelley & Hawes.

Funeral services were held on Wednesday morning at nine o'clock from St. Mary's Church.

Requiem mass was celebrated, Rev. Francis E. Rogers officiating. The pallbearers were Lawrence Nichols, Joseph Mullen, Arthur Mullen, Jr., Francis McNally, Herbert Ebbell, William Nowell, Frank McGrath and John Noonan. The burial was in Calvary Cemetery, Montvale.

ALL NOT SATISFIED.

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

Your correspondent of a few weeks ago did not voice the opinion of all the lady patrons of the B. & M., when she stated that the objectionable features concerning the seat outside the ladies waiting room had been removed. I do not agree in this matter. On the morning of Labor Day I found this seat occupied by five men, while waiting for my train, three of whom were smoking. Furthermore a lady and man each holding a young child were standing nearby.

Why not place a seat expressly for the men at their end of the station.

FOR ANOTHER SEITEE.

SAVE THE BURLAP.

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

Now that the burlap placed about the public shade trees in the spring has performed its duty, why is it not taken from the trees now and saved for use next year. This burlap must be worth something, probably far more than the cost of gathering it. That used on my trees, I have saved carefully to be used again next year, and the tree men should do the same, as it is too valuable to throw away. I saw some of the burlap lying on the sidewalks and on the streets last week.

ECONOMY

GILBERTVILLE'S UNIQUE DRINKING FOUNTAIN.

The village of Gilbertville, Mass., enjoys the distinction of having one of the most unique public drinking fountains in the state.

The fountain is hewn out of a solid boulder weighing 15 tons, and is the gift of the W. C. T. U., assisted by the George H. Gilbert company, of which Mr. George H. Gilbert of Winchester is one of the principal members of that well known firm.

The new fountain occupies a central position in what is known as Depot square, and attracts much attention on account of its novel shape and structure, and is said to resemble somewhat one of the well known pictures of Plymouth rock.

The boulder was taken from the side of one of the ranges of high hills overlooking the village. The work was begun last spring, when the boulder was dug out, jacked up, placed on skids and hauled out of its bed for a distance of about 40 feet and which took about three days. The contract for the removal of the rock to the village was given to George C. Wesson of Ware, who at the end of a week gave up the contract.

The Gilbert company then put their own gang of workmen on the job and by using one pair of horses, heavy blocks and 3-4 inch wire cable, they were able to drag the boulder along. This was done for about a mile or more, the distance between the place where the rock was found and where it now is, over places where teams could hardly drive and where the grade was as steep as 45 degrees.

A foundation four feet deep of stone and cement was put in, there being two 30-inch walls, with a space left for valves and pipes, reached by a manhole. The drinking place for the horses is cut down about 18 inches and holds seven feet of water. On the side facing the depot a basin is cut out and a pipe comes up on top of which is a little saucer-shaped piece. The water bubbles up through this and by placing your mouth over it you get a drink of fresh water at any time, which does away with the use of a cup.

Down on the bottom on the right end looking from the road, is a place cut out for dogs. This is filled from the overflow from the horse trough, and comes down through a natural crevice in the rock, which was enlarged to make it run better.

The approximate cost was about $700 or $800 for the fountain.

A LOSS TO THE CHURCH.

At all the masses at St. Mary's Catholic Church last Sunday mention was made of the loss which the church had sustained in the death of Archbishop Williams, and remarks of a eulogistic nature were spoken by the priests. In speaking of the career of the great churchman the pastor Rev. Daniel J. Keleher, said in part:

"Archbishop Williams was a truly great man. His career was coincident with the grandest epoch in the history of the church in New England. He was a man admirably adapted for the work on account of his natural ability, noble characteristics and deep faith."

A solemn high mass of requiem was celebrated Monday morning. Rev. Daniel J. Keleher was the celebrant, Rev. Hugh Maguire of Murrayville, Ill., deacon, Rev. Francis E. Rogers subdeacon and Rev. Walter J. Roche master of ceremonies. At the First Congregational Church, the pastor, Rev. D. Augustine Newton, in his prayer referred to the consecrated life of the distinguished prelate whose death was mourned by the Christian world.

WINCHESTER MAN ENGINEER.

For the third time in the past quarter of a century the Cape Cod Canal, has been begun, and it is hoped this time will see the project carried out to a successful finish. At noon, Monday, the first shovelful of dirt was thrown out by William Barclay Parsons, of New York, chief engineer and immediately afterward a large force of men under the direction of Contractor Seretto, of Boston got busy with their shovels. The spot chosen for the start was about half way between Cape Cod and Buzzard's Bay, not far from the shops of the Leith Manufacturing Co., at Sagamore. There was but little ceremony in the start of the work. A spur track has been laid, and the material taken out is to be deposited on the Scussett marsh, where it will be used for filling.

Mr. Charles M. Thompson, former town engineer, has been interested in this canal for many years and has surveyed and mapped out every foot of it. He is also the leading engineer at the present time, and his home is in Sandwich.

Miss Alice Chapman has left Brant Rock where she had been spending the summer, and is now stopping at Plymouth, N. H.

SCHOOLS TO OPEN MONDAY

When the Long Vacation will Come to an End.

Information that will Prove of Interest to Parents and Scholars.

The public schools will open next Monday. In past years the commencement of the fall term has been on the Wednesday following Labor Day, but this year the time was extended to the Monday following that day in order to give all the pupils an opportunity to return from their vacations. This ought to result in a full attendance of scholars.

The schools this year will be in charge of a new superintendent, Schuyler F. Herron, who for the past two years has been in charge of the American school in the City of Mexico. Robert C. McCaff, the former superintendent retired at the close of the last term, declining to accept a reelection. He will be aswill fill the position made vacant by the marriage of Miss Josephine E. Connors. Miss Edith P. Rockwood of Walpole will take Miss Collins' place at the Washington school, and Miss Elizabeth Cullen of this town, who has been teaching at Peterboro, N. H., will take the place of Miss Bessie G. Hurbutt at the Rumford school.

Miss Elizabeth Spencer returns to the position of principal at the Prince school after a year's leave of absence. Miss Carrie L. Mason, principal of the Wyman school, has been granted a leave of absence for a year, and Miss Anna D. Marden will fill her place. Miss Juliet Todd, however, will act as principal of associated with an educational bureau in Boston and so keep in touch with the many friends he has made in his long career as an educator.

Previous to going to Mexico, Mr. Herron was superintendent of schools in Northampton and made an enviable record for himself in that city. He came to Winchester the past week and has been busily engaged in getting affairs in shape for the opening next Monday. He will be at the office in the High school building every day this week from 8 to 12 and 1 to 5.

During the summer the school buildings have undergone many minor repairs and all have been thoroughly cleaned. The supplies for an entire year have been bought and distributed and everything is in readiness for the work of the year.

Several changes have been made in the teaching force. Benjamin D. May, formerly principal of the Nantucket High school, has been appointed submaster at the High school, in place of Robert T. Elliott, who goes to the Worcester classical High school. Miss Marjorie N. Weeks of the Manchester, Mass., High school will fill the place at the High made vacant by the resignation of Miss Gertrude Hall, the English teacher, who will teach in Somerville next year.

At the Wadleigh grammar school Miss May M. Badger takes the place of Miss Alice M. Hillard. Miss Annie B. Stott will resume her position after her leave of absence.

Miss Annie L. Collins has been transferred to the Chapin school from the Washington, and will take the place made vacant by the resignation of Miss Mary Gill. Miss Gertrude Cameron, who has been teaching in Berlin, N. H.,

IS NOT SEEKING THE OFFICE.

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

I notice in last week's STAR an article suggesting that I should be a candidate for representative and while I fully appreciate the complimentary mention of my name I wish to say that I am not seeking the office.

If as suggested my past services have been of benefit to the Town that will assuredly give me great pleasure.

Very truly yours,

F. V. WOOSTER.

[It can be said without hesitation that the voters generally prefer men for office who are not seeking it, but as a rule they are not the ones always selected. Of the many names suggested by the STAR as suitable candidates for the position of Representative, not one that we know of is personally seeking the position, however much their friends may be working for them. Mr. Wooster in the many town offices that he has held and so ably filled, has never sought them, but the honors have come to him unsolicited, and this will be his position regarding the matter of Representative. Whoever takes this office, sacrifices not alone a great deal of valuable time but suffers a pecuniary loss, as the salary does not begin to compensate for the loss of time from business.]

RUN OVER AT STATION.

Mrs. S. J. Huston of this town while alighting from the 8:11 train at the station last evening, slipped and fell partly beneath the cars, the wheels badly crushing her knee. She was taken to the Mass. Gen. Hospital on the next inward train, where it was found necessary to amputate the leg, and her condition is regarded as very serious.

Mrs. Huston is mother of Mrs. Herbert L. Larrabee, making her home with her daughter on Cliff street.

It appears that another train was at the station, and as the train carrying Mrs. Huston slowed up to allow it to start she thought it had reached the station and attempted to get off falling partly beneath the train. She was attended by Dr. McCarthy, who accompanied her to the hospital, she being taken in on the express which was at the station when the accident occurred. She is 53 years of age and her recovery is considered doubtful.

POLITICAL.

As the time approaches for holding the Republican caucus, but little interest in the contest for Representative to the Legislature appears on the surface. It is not known that any work is being done by any of the men mentioned or their friends to secure the nomination, which appears to be anybody's at the present time. Of the names given in the STAR during the past three weeks there is an opportunity to make a good selection. The caucus will be held on the 24th of the present month, and between now and then something definite may be evolved.

THE SAME OLD PRICE.

Messrs. Blanchard & Kendall are selling their coal at the same old summer prices, despite the fact that there has been twice an increase in Boston. Now is a good time to secure a winter's supply, as the continued increase in prices may yet compel this accommodating firm to also raise prices. This firm has the best labor saving plant north of Boston, and it is this fact that enables them to keep their prices down.

SHERMAN-COLGATE.

Mrs. Minerva E. Colgate of 5 Lloyd street and Mr. Alfred T. Sherman, also of this town, were married on last Friday evening at North Woburn. The ceremony was performed by Rev. George H. Tilton of Woburn. The couple will make their home on Lloyd street, this town.

BASE BALL.

Two well played and interesting games of base ball were pulled off on Manchester Field by the Winchester A. A. on Saturday and Monday, the home team winning both matches. The games attracted a large gallery on both days and many good plays were applauded.

On Saturday afternoon the game was with the Wilmington team, which was anxious to again try chances with the A. A. after its former defeat in a previous twelve inning game. The game closed with the home team the winner by two runs and was a pretty exhibition of base ball.

Caulfield struck out 12 men and allowed only three hits. The score:

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

There is pleasure in store for music lovers at the Castle Square next week, when "Mignon" will be given for the first time in Boston in many years. "Mignon" combines two elements of comic and grand opera in such degree that it appeals to every variety of taste.

The cast of "Mignon" promises a fine series of performances at the Castle Square. Miss Clara Lane and Miss Blanche Rae Edwards will alternate the title role, with Harry Davies and Henry Taylor as Wilhelm Meister, J. K. Murray as Laertes, George Shields as Lothario, Alice Crafts Benson as Filina, and Fritz von Buesing as Frederick. The scenic production will be in every way beautiful and accurate, with the orchestra under the direction of Frank N. Mandeville, and the stage direction in charge of W. H. Fitzgerald.

For the two following weeks at the Castle Square Manager Masson has arranged revivals of "The Wizard of the Nile" and "Rigoletto."

TELEGRAPHERS

LOSING SYMPATHY.

Whatever may be the rights of the case in the dispute between the telegraphers and the two big telegraph companies, there is no question that the men have done themselves a serious injury in alienating the sympathies of the newspapers. This they certainly have done, and that they are already feeling the effects of it is shown by their complaints in New York and Chicago that the papers "are not treating them fairly." Just here it may be as well to tell a little of the inside history of the strike which will not increase public sympathy toward the union leaders. The fight of the operators was against the commercial telegraph companies. The men in the service of the several press associations had no particular kick coming, and the operators for the brokers and others on the leased wires had even less. When the strike first became an accomplished fact, the telegraphers' union attempted to cripple the biggest of the press associations by calling out all of its men. They caused some inconvenience for the first forty-eight hours. But most of the big papers put in leased wires to New York and other important points and paid the union scale of $30 a week for six days work with extra for overtime. This meant about $40 per week to every leased wire operator, which will sound pretty good to many men on a salary. But not content with this, the "union" demanded that all of the papers employing leased wire operators should sign a contract to keep up this arrangement for a year on pain of having all the leased wire men called out. Some of the papers and brokers submitted to this squeeze and others told the union to go where it was too warm for telegraph work. And the move cost the union what little sympathy it might have had from the papers. Is it any wonder?

HOPEDALE ALL RIGHT.

Town and Draper Co. Are Valuable Assets of State.

The people of our State are beginning to realize that the town of Hopedale and the Draper Company are not such a public menace as was pictured last fall. This is always the case when the people take time to differentiate truth from slander. The fact that Eben S. Draper, one of the proprietors of this great enterprise, was a candidate for an important state office, was the real cause for the misguided attack upon a town that has no superior in all New England. Those who are intelligent enough to comprehend the value of Massachusetts industries, known full well that the Draper Co., from its inception to the present time, has been, and is a most valuable asset to the State and its people, and no one man has been more conspicuous in the development of this great industry than the Lieutenant Governor, and this ought not to be considered a crime in this intelligent age. [Fall River Herald.]

OFFICIAL DUMPS.

WINCHESTER MASS., Sept. 1, 1907.

The following Regulations for removing and dumping ashes, paper and other refuse substances were adopted by the Board of Health at a meeting held Aug. 30, 1907.

- 1 Materials removed must not be scattered along or allowed to be blown about the streets.
- 2 Licenses do not cover the removal of swill or garbage. Such substances can be removed by the town garbage men only.
- 3 Materials removed must be dumped only in such places and left in such manner as specified below.
- 4 When authorized dumping places are closed or new ones opened, notice of the same will be sent to each licensee.
- 5 Nothing combustible shall be left anywhere except on the Town Yard Dump.
- 6 All dumping places except the one in the Town Yard shall be kept leveled by the person using the same.

AUTHORIZED DUMPING PLACES.

- 1 Town Yard Dump, off Main street.
- 2 Foxcroft Road Dump, between Wedgemere avenue and Cambridge street.
- 3 Lynam Dump, off Nelson street.
- 4 Quigley Dump, Washington street, foot of Lincoln.
- 5 Gas House Dump, Fletcher street.

RECOGNITION OF LOCAL PRESS.

The following from the American Press will be read with interest by many:

"Bulletin No. 79, just issued by the bureau of the census, contains a note of encouragement for the newspapers of the smaller cities and towns. After reciting the wonderful growth of the printing and publishing business, which has doubled in 15 years, it says, 'in number and circulation the newspapers of the smaller cities and towns have held their own against the dailies of the larger cities.' Frankly, we are glad to know it. There can be no doubt that it is highly important and much better for the country that every community should be represented by its own paper, which should be supported in preference to any other on top of the earth."

"The fact that the census figures show it, doesn't indicate merely patriotism or local pride in readers. It means that the local papers are made good enough to command the support of the public."

"The report also refers to the service performed by the weekly newspapers as the pioneers of progress and civilization."

ORPHEUM THEATRE.

For the second week at the Orpheum another big bill of head lines is provided, one that promises to be even more interesting than the bill of last week. Every act is a head liner, from "Motoring," the great English burlesque on the automobile craze, to Elizabeth Murray, the most pleasing of all women story tellers and singers.

Then, there is Tacianu, the female impersonator, who has just returned from a season of unprecedented success in London; the Dasque Quartette, and Palfrey and Noelfler.

A special feature will be Bert Levy, the cartoonist of the morning Telegraph of New York. Clifford and Burke, the black faced comedians, in a big head line act. Notwithstanding the immense cost of these shows the prices remain the same.

THE REV. BILLY SUNDAY AND HIS WAR ON THE DEVIL

In the September American Magazine there is a complete story of this remarkable unconventional revivalist who, after a long career as a professional baseball player, has converted 100,000 people.

THE SEPTEMBER

AMERICAN MAGAZINE.

The most interesting thing in the September American Magazine—and, indeed, one of the "star" pieces of reporting of the year—is Lindsay Denison's description of "The Rev. Billy Sunday and his War on the Devil." Sunday is the old time professional ball player who is said to have converted 100,000 people. He is sometimes paid as much as $3,600 a month for his work. The story of his own conversion is one of the choicest things in the article. And the prayers and sermons by Sunday, which Mr. Denison has collected, are great reading.

In the same number of The American Lincoln Steffens tells a real detective story, the story of William J. Burns, the Secret Service man who uncovered the land frauds. Burns, apparently, is one of the greatest detectives alive.

Eugene Wood writes about "The New Baby;" Woods Hutchinson writes on "Sleep and its Counterparts;" and Edith Dickson tells something real about "The Rise in the Cost of Living."

The American's fiction is notable, "Beauty" Kenigam by Charles Belmont Davis is an exception story of newspaper and stage life.

David Grayson writes another "Adventures in Contentment." "The Interpreter" talks about Japan and war.

TROLLEY EXPRESS.

Indications are that the trolley express is about to invade the cities and towns north of Boston the same as is now being done on the other side of Boston, and that the local express companies will no doubt suffer thereby to considerable extent. A beginning was made at Wakefield last week when Col. Charles F. Woodward, representing the Boston & Northern Street railway company, appeared before the selectmen and asked for their approval on the Boston & Northern as a common carrier of newspapers, baggage, express and freight, subject to their regulations and the approval of the state railroad commissioners.

Col. Woodward stated it was the company's plan to put in an electric baggage car, establish a central depot, and put on delivering teams to cover the town, which in his judgment would be a desirable addition to the town facilities as was the railroad in the first place.

He also stated that the system was not an experiment as the Old Colony street railroad was running the electric railway express to the satisfaction of its patrons.

TREMONT THEATRE.

The inauguration of advanced vaudeville by Klaw & Erlanger at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, on Labor Day, was certainly an event of the greatest importance in the theatrical world for, simultaneously, eighteen other first class theatres, in as many large cities of the East, were dedicated to the same form of public entertainment. It is not the intention of this firm to begin with a programme of extraordinary merit and then gradually cheapen their entertainments. Its reputation for many years is a guarantee of keeping faith with patrons of the theatre, and the aim will be to constantly improve.

These attractions cannot be announced in advance, for various reasons, but advanced vaudeville by Klaw & Erlanger at the Tremont can be depended upon. A very popular scale of prices has been arranged, especially for the matinees, and the Tremont Theatre certainly should prove a delightful place to pass a few hours in sane recreation. Performances are at 2 and 8 o'clock.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portions of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed, it has a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces. We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

BATTLE OF THE WITS

When Artemus Ward and Henry J. Byron First Met.

A TILT IN A LONDON CLUB.

The Famous Humorist Started in to Have Some Fun With the Dramatist, but Found in the End That He Had Met His Match at Chaffing.

What follows relates to the first meeting of the late Henry J. Byron and Artemus Ward. It was at the Savage club in London after one of the Saturday dinners, and Tom Robertson suggested to Artemus to have a tilt with Byron and if possible draw him out. The genial showman had only been in England a few days, but he knew Byron's "meter" and went for him in this fashion:

"I fancy I have seen a face like yours before. Did you ever have a brother Alonzo?" Robertson was behind Artemus and winked at Byron. "Alas, I had!" replied the dramatist, instantly catching the situation. "He was a mariner, engaged on the deep?"

"That's so."

"You haven't heard of him for five years?"

Byron affected to be lost in reflection and deliberately replied: "It's five years ago this very day. How curious you should mention it, sir?"

"Well, sir," replied Artemus, taking out his handkerchief and pretending to wipe away a tear, "I sailed the salt sea with your brother. We were wrecked together in the gulf of Mexico, a day before help came. I killed and ate him. The moment I saw you I recognized the likeness. He was a good fellow, full of tender feeling."

"I am glad you found him tender," interrupted Byron, also pulling out his handkerchief.

"But, sir, I am awfully sorry I ate him," said Artemus in the most imperturbable fashion. "Had I known I should ever meet his brother I am sure I'd have gone without food some weeks longer. But I was driven to it, and you will forgive me, won't you? I liked Alonzo," and he offered his hand to Byron, which the latter shook with cordiality.

"Excuse my emotion, won't you?" gasped Byron in his handkerchief. "He never wrote and told me what had become of him. I hope he agreed with you."

"A slight indigestion afterward. He was a little tough," replied Artemus, "but we'll not speak of that. We both suffered. He suffered most. But remember, sir, the law can't touch me now. It was stern necessity, and necessity, as you may have heard, knows no law. But I am willing to pay you damages for the loss. About what would you think a fair compensation?"

"Don't mention it," said Byron, who now thought it time to turn the tables. "I think your name is Ward," said he.

"Yes."

"Artemus Ward?"

"Quite so."

"You had a father?"

"I had."

"He was a Yankee peddler in his own country, was he not? Sold bug plzen and fine tooth combs?"

"You've hit the comb—I mean the nail—on the head."

"He died in the black country of England, did he not?"

"He did."

"Well, I killed him. I knew you were his son the moment I laid eyes on you. He was a nice old gentleman, and I made his acquaintance in Staffordshire. He wished to go down a deep coal mine; so did I, and we went down together, had a good time, explored, lunched with the miners, drank more than was good for us and proceeded to return to mother earth's surface. After you have been down a mine you are fond of your mother. I assure you. The prodigal felt nothing to what I experienced. We entered the huge basket and were being slowly down toward the mouth of the pit when I saw the old rope was about to snap under the strain. It was a perilous, a horrible, a critical moment. The weight of two men was too great, and your father was a broad, bulky man. Self preservation is the first law of nature. An instant more and we were both lost. We seemed to be about fifty feet from the top.

"I hastily called your father's attention to something—implored him, in fact, to look down the mine. He did so, and as I gently tipped him over he went whirling and crashing down to the bottom. It was rough on him, but I saved myself. I ciphered it out on the instant like this: He is an old man, nearly bald, deaf in one ear, two teeth gone in front, with only a few years to live. I am half his age, strong and healthy, the father of a young family, with a career before me, a comedy to finish for the Haymarket and a burlesque accepted at the Strand. Now, I ask you, under the circumstances, did I not behave nobly?"

"You did, you did!" sobbed Artemus. "I would have acted that way myself."

"I am glad to find you so intelligent. You ate my brother and found him tough, and I am the assassin of your dear old father," continued Byron, keeping up the farce of pretended emotion. "We are both avenged. Let us draw a veil over the past and never allude to these heartrending incidents again."

"Agreed. We cry quits. Shake!" roared Artemus, extending both hands and dramatically dashing a flood of imaginary tears from his eyes.—London Standard.

AN ITALIAN BALL GAME.

A Statuesque Beauty in Pallone Seen in No Other Game.

Pallone is the king of ball games, requiring not merely great strength and alertness in the player, but offering also such a succession of noble plastic poses as may be seen in no other game. Goethe, who saw his first match with delight at Verona in September, 1786, wrote that such attitudes were "worthy of being put into marble." Our more enlightened archaeology would probably declare for the nobler bronze if the pundits could be persuaded to follow Goethe and occasionally exchange the library for the pallone court.

Be that as it may, the gist of the game is almost as readily grasped as its statuesque beauty. Pallone is merely the perfected and titanic form of the jeu de paume that is played from end to end of Europe. You see it in its incipency when two urchins with tambourines beat a rubber ball to and fro in the open or against a side wall. In Spain the thing is done with a wicker racket in a court and is called pelota. But pallone, the ancient game, which is the parent of tennis, rackets and half a dozen other wall games, is as far superior to its rudimentary forms as baseball is to rounders.

One look at the big ball, the pallone itself, would convince you that here is a sport for men, if not for giants. The pallone looks like a huge baseball, but has twice the diameter and weighs two-thirds of a pound. I have seen it like in Columbia county, N. Y., where, years ago, the old Dutch game of wicket was played. Imagine a twelve pound shell or an enlarged croquet ball soaring from end to end of a 300 foot court or ricocheting treacherously off the side wall as the agile player gives this or that turn of the bristling wooden cestus. This ball is as noteworthy as the ball. A wooden cylinder, about eight inches long and six in diameter, with an outer array of inserted wooden spikes and an interior cross grip shaped to the player's hand—such is the arm piece, or pracciale. It is so heavy—weighing at least four pounds—that one may rather say it sways the bearer than he it. Once it swings at the hurtling ball, the whole body must follow the gesture; hence the remarkable plastic quality of all the attitudes of play. And the contestants are dressed in a fashion to give value to these momentary poses. A trim jacket, the right sleeve short, tight knickerbockers, stockings and canvas slippers, all spotless white, make up a costume that admits a touch of color only in the gold fringed sash—gift of an admirer, generally—which marks the player as belonging to the reds and blues. Returning to the pracciale, it is not a comfortable thing to wear. At every pause the players rap it sharply against the wall to drive the bandaged wrist home, and they often breathe on the hot and half exposed knuckles in a vain attempt to cool them.—Frank J. Mather in Century.

The Triumph of Titus.

The total number of those who perished in the siege and capture of Jerusalem is estimated by Josephus at 1,100,000 persons; 97,000 were taken captive by the Romans. Of these 700 of the finest and strongest were selected to grace the triumphal procession of Titus. The old and the weak, who could not be used, the Romans had butchered in cold blood. Those over seventeen years of age were part of them sent into the Egyptian mines, part of them forced to appear in battle with wild beasts and be torn to pieces by them or to fight as gladiators with one another to delight the eyes of the heathen populace. In Caesarea Philippi alone, at the celebration of the birthday of Domitian, more than 2,500 Jews shed their blood in the arena. The males under seventeen years of age and the women were sold directly into slavery. Titus, with all his prisoners and all his booty, marched to Rome, where he had a brilliant triumph in the year 71 A. D. The sacred vessels of the temple were carried before the "imperator," and Simon and John, for the first time shoulder to shoulder, were obliged to march before the chariot of the victor with the 700 chosen captives. Simon, being the real leader, was first scourged and then throttled at the stake, in accordance with Roman custom. John finished his career in prison.

MAORI SAVAGERY.

The Women Slaughtered the Victims For the Cannibal Feasts.

Mrs. E. M. Dunlop of Auckland, New Zealand, writes of the Maori women: "The Maori woman can keep at will. She has practiced the art, which has formed an important part of her training. She weeps so genuinely and so copiously as to melt the heart of a sympathizing witness. The Maoris hold 'tuagis,' or weeping parties, to mourn their dead, and in these gatherings the women play a conspicuous part. While weeping they utter a low, mournful cry, which has a very weird effect when produced by a number of voices. The mourners sit in groups, with their heads partially covered, giving forth their monotonous wailing and shedding copious tears.

"The Maori woman of past ages almost excelled her lord in savagery. On the return of a triumphant war party they usually brought home a number of prisoners and slaves. It was the privilege of the women of the tribe to fall upon these, slaughtering them in preparation for the cannibal feast which followed. The women bore the painful ceremony of the tattoo without shrinking. Spiral marks were cut into the flesh of their chests, lips and faces; a soot made by a peculiar method was rubbed into the wounds, causing an indelible blue-black stain.

"The Maoris, even in their former state, treated their women with a certain amount of consideration, although the lot of the female slave was very hard and often ended in her being served up as a dainty dish to appease the appetite of her voracious lord, who would kick away the baskets of vegetable food presented to him by his wives as a signal that he required the tender flesh of a slave girl."

THE SIX HUNDRED.

Incidents of That Mad Ride to Death at Balaklava.

Of that mad but heroic charge a hundred incidents are preserved—thrilling, humorous, shocking. The Cornhill Magazine tells of a man of the Seventeenth lancers who was heard to shout, just as they reeled in upon the guns, a quotation from Shakespeare, "Who is there here would ask more men from England?"

The regimental butcher of the Seventeenth lancers was engaged in killing a sheep when he heard the trumpets sound for the charge. He leaped on a horse. In shirt sleeves, with bare arms and pipe in mouth, he rode through the whole charge, slew, it is said, six men with his own hand, and came back again, pipe still in mouth.

A private of the Eleventh was under arrest for drunkenness when the charge began, but broke out, followed his troop on a spare horse, picked up a sword as he rode and shared in the rapture and perils of the charge. The charge lasted twenty minutes, and was ever before such daring or such suffering packed into a space so brief? The squadrons leaped into the fight numbering 673 horsemen, but their mounted strength when the fight was over was exactly 195.

It was all a blunder, but it evoked a heroism which made the blunder itself magnificent. And as long as brave deeds can thrill the imagination of men the story will be remembered of how—

Stormed at with shot and shell,
Bodily they rode and fell,
Into the jaws of death,
Into the mouth of hell—
Noble six hundred!

A Strain on the Taxpayers.

Some time ago Georgetown, O., undertook to build an electric light plant. They voted bonds in accordance with the "estimates" and started construction, but soon found that in order to complete the plant $12,500 in excess of the "estimates" would be needed. The additional bonds have been voted, but the extra expense is quite a strain on a town of 1,600 inhabitants.

BOSTON LETTER

Purpose of the Persistent Attacks Upon Senator Lodge

DEMOCRATIC CONTEST IS HOT

Whitney and Bartlett Both Waging Energetic Campaign For the Nomination-Fitzgerald In Tight Place

It has long been a favorite trick with the Democracy to undertake the depreciation and vilification of leading Republican statesmen, in order to create dissatisfaction with their leaders in the rank and file of the party. It has not always succeeded in this effort, but there have usually been a few Republicans taken in by this method of campaigning, and made to believe things which would not appeal to voters awake to such methods.

For several years the chief assaults of the Democratic party in Massachusetts have been upon Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, entirely owing to the fact that Mr. Lodge is the most conspicuous figure in that party in Massachusetts today. Democratic newspapers and Democratic orators have, for a long time, singled out Mr. Lodge as the object upon which to pour the vials of their abuse and have not hesitated to call him a boss, a dictator and a scheming politician.

Mr. Lodge is being assailed, not because he is Senator Lodge, and not because he is a boss, but for the sole and only reason that he is the leading political figure in the Republican party in Massachusetts at the present time. Were Senator Crane or some other gentleman occupying the leading position in the party, then he, instead of Mr. Lodge, would be the victim of this guerrilla style of campaigning and the attempt made to create discontent and dissension in the Republican ranks.

No Bossism in Massachusetts

In no state in the Union is there less bossism. A great many Republicans have declared that if the party organization in Massachusetts were more rigidly maintained, it would be much better for the party. In that case, there might perhaps be some justification for charging a party leader with being a boss. As the case stands today, however, there is no such justification and nobody who has real knowledge of the situation thinks there is.

No man holding so prominent a place in the Republican party as Senator Lodge has done for a number of years, and having such high official position, can possibly please everybody, even if he were gifted with the wisdom of Solomon and the patience of Job. It is recognized at Washington, in the United States senate, that Mr. Lodge is one of the ablest United States senators in the upper branch of congress, if not the very ablest of them all. If Massachusetts, knowing him so well, can be deceived by the noisy clamor of Democratic spellbinders and decadent newspapers, then it is a different Massachusetts from what its history would imply.

No man who has ever represented the state of Massachusetts in the United States senate has labored more zealously, more persistently, or more courageously to promote the highest material and moral prosperity of the old Bay State than has Senator Henry Cabot Lodge of Nahant. All his great abilities and undagging energies have been consecrated to her service in the past, as they will be in the future. It has been a labor of love from the beginning. Mr. Lodge is proud of the commonwealth which he represents. He is proud of her history, of her achievements and of her possibilities. It is his ambition to see her reach greater heights of glory and prosperity than she has ever yet attained. There has not been one act or word uttered during his career in the senate which would indicate any other thing.

The Wonder of It

That such a man should be maligned, misrepresented and vilified by a political opposition which has neither great moral purpose, permanent political principles, nor party coherency, is perhaps not remarkable, but that such vilification and attack should be seriously entertained or accepted as just or correct in such a state as Massachusetts is incomprehensible. If Mr. Lodge is not appreciated in his home commonwealth, there is certainly the highest appreciation and respect for him in the other states of the Union.

The late Thomas B. Reed of Maine, who was one of the most astute philosophers the country has ever produced, once declared that statesmen were dead politicians. Probably no statesman who ever lived was acknowledged as such by his political opponents, and until the millennium comes, no statesman ever will be so accepted by those who oppose him politically.

Things Are Hot Here

The political situation on the Democratic side is fast reaching the stage known as "red hot." The intensity of feeling between the Whitney and the Bartlett wings of the Democracy is apparent to everybody. If Mr. Whitney is nominated, it is apparent already that he will lack some Democratic support, and in case Mr. Bartlett is nominated, it is quite clear that some of the factions in the party will give him but nominal support. So bitter has become the contest that there is a general feeling of despair among Democrats of ac-comprising anything in the November election.

The attack upon Mr. Whitney in connection with his manipulation of legislation, and especially his relation to pipe line legislation, made by Thomas W. Lawson, is probably an indication of what Mr. Whitney may expect in case he secures the nomination for governor. The question would then seem to be whether a man accused of using methods for securing legislation which incurred the sharp censure of a legislative committee of investigation, should be chosen governor of the commonwealth as an endorsement of such methods.

Both Whitney and Bartlett are traveling about the commonwealth, meeting Democrats in every locality they visit. It must be admitted that General Bartlett has plenty of pluck and determination, and his friends believe that when the caucuses are held, he will be shown to have a majority of the delegates to the state convention. A great deal of active, quiet work is being done to promote his candidacy. His headquarters, in the Compton building, is a very lively place, and there are daily visitors from all parts of the state, who call to make reports of progress, and to receive news of the campaign from the rest of the state.

The Whitney men seem to assume that the battle, while it is warm, is yet going very favorably for their candidate. They base their estimates upon personal reports being received from every corner of the state, and if they are correct, Mr. Whitney will have a very strong following. It is an extremely expensive campaign for Mr. Whitney, and it seems to be a question with many Democrats as to whether the nomination is really worth the powder which is being burned to secure it.

Looking Bad For Fitzgerald

The finance commission, which is investigating the condition of the city of Boston in a financial way, is passing up some pretty strong hints to Mayor Fitzgerald to hold in check the looters who seem bent upon plundering the city of Boston. The suggestion of the commission that the mayor hold up a number of land deals, which are suspected of being grafts, has evidently touched Mayor Fitzgerald in a tender spot. In his reply he suggests to the commission that he is capable of safeguarding the interests of the city in these land deals, and that he proposes to do it.

It is very evident that the commission has discovered suspicious circumstances, and this may lead them to feel that the one thing from which the city of Boston needs to be protected is John F. Fitzgerald himself. It is common talk round Boston that never in the history of the city has there been such a rotten administration as that which is prevailing since the election of Mayor Fitzgerald two years ago.

The creation of this finance commission will, undoubtedly, be of considerable benefit to the city of Boston, for it may hold up a number of jobs which had been planned by which the city was to be the victim of extensive grafting.

The Toe Nails.

Owing to the friction and pressure to which toe nails are exposed in all persons who wear boots or shoes there is a great tendency to thickening on the underpart of the free growth, the portion of the nail that extends beyond the toe point. This thickened part sometimes gets pressed against the flesh, and then very painful corns result. The preventive treatment is to keep the nails cut short and to remove the rather soft thickened parts with a blunt pocket knife or scissors blade.

The soothing spray of Ely's Liquid Creams Balm, used in an atomizer, is an unspeakable relief to sufferers from Catarrh. Some of them describe it as a Godsend, and no wonder. The thick, foul discharge is dislodged and the patient breathes freely, perhaps for the first time in weeks. Liquid Cream Balm contains all the healing, purifying elements of the solid form, and it never fails to cure. Sold by all druggists for 75c including spraying tube, or mailed by Ely Bros., 56 Warren Street, New York.

A WOMAN'S QUICK EYE.

It Was the Means of Gaining a Fortune at Monte Carlo.

Nearly every one who has been to Monte Carlo has heard of "Mamma" Vland, a little, bent old French woman, a widow, who played for years.

"Mamma" Vland played roulette each day from morning until night. Her beady eyes, twitching nervously, saw nothing but the ivory ball as it fell into the cell. As they watched her staggering from the gaming tables late at night people pitied her.

Her whole soul, her life, seemed absorbed in the awful desire of winning. The old woman at times lost heavily—for her; then she regained her losses. For a long time she was enabled to live and continue her feverish pursuit of the game.

One night the old woman lost nearly all her store. As she passed from the table, despair in her eyes, her attention was attracted by another wheel. She stopped and bent over the table. Again and again the wheel spun around and stopped. The old woman's eyes sparkled. A flush suffused her pallid cheeks.

As she left the room she clapped her hands, and her laugh—a shrill, mocking chuckle—startled the gamblers as ominous, uncanny.

"Better watch the old woman!" one of the official lookouts told a detective. He followed "Mamma" Vland to her hotel. He listened outside of her door. There was no alarming sound. In a short while she extinguished her lights and evidently had retired.

The following evening she reappeared in the gaming hall. Her eyes still sparkled; her cheeks were still flushed. With her were several notorious gamblers. They approached a table, "Mamma" Vland began to play.

She won. The gamblers, who had looted her money, watched. She played a second time and won and a third time and won. The gamblers looked on amazed and saw the old woman raking in thousands of francs.

During the evening the old woman sat by the table, playing persistently. Her winnings doubled, trebled, quadrupled and piled up about her.

The management became alarmed. A consultation was held. Special detectives were sent to watch her. Scores had gathered about the table, looking on breathlessly at her wonderful run of luck. The detectives reported to the management that "Mamma" Vland was playing a certain combination of numbers that invariably won.

One of the directors besought the old woman to desist playing. The bank would be broke, he declared. She smiled and continued to play.

The director offered her $50,000 to cease playing. He doubled the figure if she would tell him the secret of her success. He importuned her to take $200,000, $250,000, only cease waging her successful battle for gold.

Finally he offered her $300,000. Accepting this, "Mamma" Vland, gathering together her fortune, told him very quietly that in passing the table the night before her quick eye had detected that the ball of this particular wheel stopped at a certain place at regular intervals. The managers examined the wheel, found that it was out of order and congratulated themselves upon having compromised with the old woman.—Philadelphia North American.

Should Get In Touch.

As the Russell brook act takes effect January first, it behooves those whom it will reach to get in touch with the State Board of Health this Fall, for if they do not it may embarrass them a good deal, as this act will be strictly enforced. Woburn concerns are the ones affected.

Dumping Places.

The Board of Health has an announcement elsewhere in this issue giving a list of places in town that may be used as dumping places for refuse, also the kind of material permitted to be deposited and the rules governing the entire mode of procedure. It is understood that the Board will rigidly carry out the rules laid down, and that hereafter there will be no promiscuous dumping.

Probing Boston.

The City of Boston is being treated to a specimen of the "Galveston plan" of governing a big city by a commission of business men. Such men have no other view in mind but to do their duty faithfully and impartially. There is no semblance of politics in this investigation and it is expected that before the commission gets through they will show that the "methods" of administering the affairs of Boston are truly surprising. Considerable has already come to the surface. The days of graft are over for a while, or as long as the people show signs of interest in good government. It might be a good thing for Boston to adopt the Galveston plan permanently.

Inspector of Health.

Massachusetts is getting to be an over much inspected State judging from the numerous boards and Commissions. The latest to be created by the Legislature is State Inspectors of Health, whose duty will consist primarily of going about the State seeing if every manufacturing establishment and every shop that has even one little machine or even a printing press is provided with an emergency outfit to be used in case of an accident. It is surprising that this matter was not taken up years ago, judging from the importance that it has now assumed. In the name of common sense, if an accident was by any means to happen in a small shop, who would know how to use the appliances, and would the time lost in a bungling attempt to do so, be more preferable than taking an injured person to a doctor where intelligent treatment could be administered. Do these small establishments run slaughter houses when fourteen gauze and eight cotton bandages are required, also absorbent cotton, styptic gauze, sterile gauze, antiseptic tablets, green soap, safety pins, scissors, tourniquet, etc., and finally a pint bottle of brandy—this last being the only article that there would likely be an intelligent (?) use of, provided it could be kept in this miscellaneous list until an accident should occur. This last item would no doubt be the most expensive thing in the entire useless outfit in the course of a year because it would be the most extensively used. About every large establishment in the State has its emergency outfit with some person present who knows how to use it intelligently. By and by the proprietors of workshops will be compelled to take a course of study in a hospital. But what matters all this annoyance to thousands of business men throughout the state so long as fat positions are provided for a number of inspectors, and that some cranks are satisfied.

In fairness to our local Board of Health, we would state that its only interest in the matter has been to lessen the expense imposed by the State on the business men as much as possible by reducing the number and quantity of articles in the outfit.

Road Preservatives.

Why would it not be a good idea for the Selectmen to try sprinkling Highland avenue and Forest street as a means of preserving the macadam roadbeds of these two thoroughfares which are being so torn up by automobiles and because of not being sprinkled with water. Supt. of Streets Hinds has looked into this matter of preparations that have been put on some roads in adjacent towns and cities and no doubt the experience gained may be of value to Winchester. Certainly such preservatives would not be used by the State Park Board unless they had merit.

Band Concerts.

Next year if band concerts are given on Manchester Field arrangement should be made to notify the STAR of the dates of their postponement and not subject the reporters to the trouble and annoyance of finding out the best they can and in trying to procure a program. Announcement of one of the postponed concerts was printed in the papers to occur on a certain date, both in the afternoon and evening, while the one which was to have been given last Wednesday, but which was postponed on account of the rain, no notice was made. The people have a right to know the dates of all postponed concerts and the local paper is perfectly willing to give the information which does not cost the manager of the band one cent. Of course if publicity is not given, then it is only a matter of time when the State Park Board will discontinue them, therefore it is for the interest of the band to have as large attendance as possible and thus make the concerts popular.

W. C. T. U. NOTES.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union will resume its meetings Friday, Sept. 13, at 3 p. m. in the Congregational church vestry. the Provision of State Wide Prohibition be Adopted."

A strenuous campaign is being made for its adoption and the request is made that reunions all over the state observe the day in fasting and prayer for Oklahoma.

GIVE ALL A FAIR SHOW.

The Pittsfield Eagle brings forward the right idea in a short editorial headed "A crusade against Draper." The Eagle announces that the publicity being given the Drapers and Hopedale at the present time is probably prompted by the misrepresentations of the Drapers and their shops by a number of articles that have appeared in a Boston newspaper, the object of which was apparently to prejudice the future political chances of Lieutenant Governor Draper. One of the articles states that employees in the Draper shops who get but $9 a week are obliged to pay the company $1.75 a week for house rent, but this is absolutely without foundation. Only men who work at a trade and get from $2.50 a day upwards are allowed to pay that sum for any of the company houses. It is further stated that employees of the Drapers have to buy coal and ice of the Draper concern, but this report also is without foundation. The Eagle declares that whatever may be the claims of the lieutenant governor for promotion to the governorship, it is no more than fair that the public be made acquainted with the exact social and business conditions at Hopedale, and all fair minded people will agree with the paper in this statement.—[North Adams Herald.]

BAND CONCERT.

A pleasant band concert was given on Manchester Field by the Woburn Brass Band last Saturday afternoon. It was one of the best of the lot, but attended by the smallest crowd of the season, the ball game which took place being apparently a greater attraction. The usual number of canoes, carriages and automobiles were present on the river and parkway, and in this connection it seems as though the parkway side of the grand stand has been the most favored place for hearing the music this summer.

The concerts have been highly enjoyed by many people during the summer, and it is hoped that next season they will be continued—with at least some evening programs.

Mr. and Mrs. M. C. Bouve who have been stopping at the Lincoln House, Swampscott, returned to Winchester this week.

OBSERVATIONS.

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

I am informed that the further establishment of meters and closer inspection of fixtures and use of hose has resulted in a large saving of water previously wasted. There are two rates that should be changed however. Hose should be advanced to five dollars and the minimum charge for water by meter reduced from twelve dollars to ten at least, perhaps lower.

Chapter 191, Acts of 1907, provides for making the Selectmen a Board of Survey in those towns which accept the act, with powers to establish grades, width and even layout of streets, etc. This is a very important act and if we have a town meeting this Fall it should be referred to a committee to report upon it at the next annual town meeting in connection with the building laws, and it might well be referred to that committee now considering that subject.

Geo. Fred says the Democratic voters have not spoken yet and adds with his usual consistency, but if they should endorse Mr. Whitney I shall oppose him for election. Which means that those voters are only right when they agree with Geo. Fred. Naturally he would support a brother lawyer for the nomination, but a very large number of voters prefer a business man to a member of the bar for governor. The balloon chasing Independence League is the place for George Fred.

If five 32 candle power electric lamps are equivalent to one arc lamp what is the candle power of the arc? How much longer is the fiction of calling arc lamps 2000 candle power to be continued, or 1200 either, on the companies' own statements?

Unless many of our side hill streets are crowned up they will be badly washed out when we have a heavy flow of water. The dents in the macadam streets also should have attention this Fall. They have become pretty bad on some streets. Why should not the superintendency of Water and Sewers be under one man now that the work is under one board?

Has there got to be a special appropriation made to get notices of the office hours of the various Town officials placed upon the office doors, or can it be taken from the contingent fund?

Three Layers of Atmosphere.

It appears that in the atmosphere there are three distinct currents of air, the first lying at an elevation of from 500 to 1,500 meters, the second at from 2,500 to 4,000 meters and the upper one at from 6,000 to 8,000 meters above the surface of the earth. These are to an extent separate currents, flowing each with its own velocity. At the bottom of each of the layers the stratus clouds are formed, and at the top of each of the layers occur the cumulus clouds. This suggests that the stratus originate at the bottom of a moving current and the cumulus at the top. It is probable, then, that the stratus owe their origin to the difference in velocity and temperature of the two layers, while the cumulus are formed by ascending currents within the layer of air.

Bad, but Still Good.

A judge from one of the African crown colonies, now home on leave, is telling this story. It is the custom in the local courts to administer to the natives the form of oath which they consider most binding. One day a Christian colored gentleman, of whose good faith the judge entertained some doubts, was about to give evidence. At his own request he was allowed to take the oath of a Christian. Then the judge intimated that he must also be sworn in the native fashion. The man was visibly disconcerted. "Oh, no, massa," he pleaded. "Not dat. Me very bad native, but me very good Christian."—Manchester Guardian.

The Hidden Treasure.

By ROLLIN HUME.

Copyright, 1907, by Thomas Clark.

A BAR had formed off Warble's wharf, so that a whaler could not lie at it or anywhere near it. But this was not a matter of any special consequence, for more than thirty years had passed since a whaler and that wharf had had anything to do with each other.

It was a wharf in ruins, and almost as badly dilapidated was the oil house that stood on the end of it, with great doors that opened out over the water. But these doors were never opened now, nor was the little sliding door that shut down fairly into the water and when it was raised opened a channel into which a boat could be floated. Both of these doors were fastened on the inside, and the door that opened on the wharf was fastened with a padlock as big as a small cabbage and as rusty as if it had been towed astern of the Harmony Home during a whole cruise.

The Harmony Home was the whaler that used to discharge her cargo into the oil house. She had been owned and sailed by Captain Tranquil Warble, and for a long while she and her commander had the reputation of being the luckiest ship and the luckiest captain afloat.

Captain Warble was coining money, the Greysheels people said—Greysheels was the name of the little port—and was getting richer and richer every year. Moreover, he was hoarding his money in coin.

"No banks for me," said Captain Warble, "an' no real estate, neither. I tried banks in 1837, an' whar was I after they all broke, I'd like t' know? An' I tried real estate in 1850, an' after th' man I'd bought it from got clean out to California another man come along an' proved a mortgage on it, an' whar was I then? No, no! Hard dollars hid about in a place that nobody but me knows about—thet's my style!"

This was all very well as long as good luck attended the Harmony Home's cruises, but when the news came down from the northern seas that the Harmony Home had been nipped in the ice and had gone to the bottom with every soul on board of her the captain's financial methods did not make quite so satisfactory a showing. For the captain's widow had not the least notion in the world where the fortune in hard dollars that now was hers was to be found. She looked in all the likely places for it and in all the unlikely places she could think of—and the thought of a good many—but not a trace of it did she find. At last, while she still was looking for it, she died. Then her daughter, Miss Ruth Warble, who was then a young girl and very energetic, though that seemed hard to believe now, began the search. And Miss Ruth spent all of her youth and most of her energy in searching, and here she is now, forty years old and looking fifty, with her fortune as safely hidden as ever and herself as poor as anybody could be outside the town farm.

For Theodore Rodford—widely and unfavorably known as "that Terry Rodford"—the old oil house down on Warble's wharf had a wonderful attraction. He had peeped through the chinks in the boards time and again, and what he had seen inside had made him wildly eager to explore it thoroughly, for strewn about the floor were old harpoons and piles of delightful ropes and big and little blocks and oars. He was almost certain that he could make out among the shadows under the stairway leading to the oil loft that was over the storehouse a little brass cannon partly covered with a bit of old sail.

Thinking of that cannon and of what he could do with it if he only could get hold of it sometimes kept him awake all night. He even had tried on several occasions to make friends with Miss Ruth, to the end that he might gain permission to investigate this delectable place. Once, when he discovered the Barkums' pigs in Miss Ruth's garden and drove them out before any great farm had been done, he almost had succeeded.

To Miss Ruth in her poverty the loss of her garden stuff would have been a very serious matter. She was truly grateful to Teddy for saving it and told him so with some warmth.

Being thus encouraged, he was emboldened to ask her if she wouldn't some time or another let him take a look around in her oil house. And Miss Ruth, still mellowed by her gratitude, said almost kindly that maybe some time or other she would.

Nye's wharf down on the point was where the boys usually went in swimming. Warble's wharf was nearer, but because of the bar the swimming was not very good there, even at high water. But it happened one hot June day that Teddy felt too lazy to walk all the way down to the point, so he thought he would just step down to Warble's wharf and get cooled off a little.

Although it was low water and the bar was bare, there was a cool looking pool just in front of and shaded by the old oil house, and into this pool he settled down very comfortably. While he was sitting on the sandy bottom in this pleasant place, with only his head out of water, he made a very exciting and delightful discovery.

It was dead low tide, and the stone foundation wall of the oil house was bare clear down to the tops of the piles on which it rested. The sliding door was out of water entirely. To his joy Teddy perceived that so large a part of one corner of this door had been knocked away, probably by a bang from the nose of some badly steered boat in a long past time, that a boy twice as big as he was could wriggle through the hole.

He gave a look up and down the river to see if anybody in a boat was in sight, and then, having assured himself that the coast was clear, he slipped out of the water and across the bit of bare sand and through the hole.

He found himself in something like a little open dock in the floor of the oil house, evidently a place where in former times a boat had been kept. Steps, black rotten with age, led to the level of the floor. Up these slippery steps Teddy went gingerly. His first object of investigation was the shadowy place under the stairway. He found that he had been right. It was a cannon, a little six pounder, such as whalers used to carry to fire signals with, and it was a regular little beauty.

He did not stop to examine the other interesting things which were scattered about him. With these, thanks to his frequent peepings through the cracks, he already was tolerably familiar. The sail loft was an undiscovered country that he longed to explore, so up the stairway that led to it he went two steps at a time. The loft was far lighter than the room below, for the sunbeams came through the cracks in the walls. It was a great bare place, with some old sails piled up in one corner, some sail making gear still lying on a little bench and some chalk marks still on the floor that doubtless showed the exact cut of the Harmony Home's last suit of sails.

There was something a little awesome in finding all these things just as Captain Warble, years and years before, had left them, but unpleasant thoughts of this nature were driven quickly and completely out of Teddy's head as he caught sight of a delightful fat little tub of a boat standing close to the side wall at the end of the building nearest to the water carefully chocked up on blocks so that it stood on an even keel. The oars and a little mast with the sail wrapped around it lay fore and aft on the thwart, and the rudder, all ready to be shipped, was lying in the stern sheets. Running tackle was rove to rings in the bow and stern, and to stout hooks in the ridgepole of the roof. The ends of the lines were coiled away neatly over belaying pins in two of the upright beams.

Then Teddy perceived that a great trapdoor rigged with counterweights opened in the floor just over the little dock below. Obviously this was the identical boat for which the dock had been built.

Then Teddy perceived that a great trapdoor rigged with counterweights opened in the floor just over the little dock below. Obviously this was the identical boat for which the dock had been built.

As he thought of what fun he could have in that boat, along with Noah Barkum and Lem Harbud and Pud Nye and perhaps Sam Wyburn, he forgot everything else in the world.

He wanted to go right to work at swinging the boat up by the tackle and then lowering her through the trapdoor, but he found, to his surprise, by the way that the light was fading, that the sun must be nearly down. Accordingly he went downstairs again and found that the tide was half in and that the hole in the door was a foot under water.

There was a pin that held the door down, and when he had pulled this out he found that he could raise the door easily, for it also was hung with counterweights, so he got out without diving and pulled the door down again. Even at high tide he saw that the water would not be much more than a foot deep. Now that the door was fastened he would roll up his trousers and wade in whenever he chose.

It was just half tide the next morning when he went down to the wharf and there was only about a foot of water at the sliding door. He was barefooted to start with, and it did not take him many minutes to roll up his trousers, slip down the edge of the wharf, open the door and shut it behind him, and then scamper upstairs to the sail loft.

It is possible that Teddy would have been uneasy had he known that Miss Ruth Warble had happened to see him go down on her wharf and then disappear over the edge of it; that she had felt instinctively that something was going wrong and had made her mind to go down to the wharf herself as soon as she had finished paring a painful of June apples and see what he was up to.

Notwithstanding his excitement Teddy went at his work very judiciously. His plan was to swing the boat up by the tackle, hauling alternately at the bow and stern and making each line fast to its belaying pin before he went at the other, until she was free of the chocks and high enough above the floor for the trapdoor to open, then, keeping a couple of turns of the ropes around the belaying pins so that the boat would not get away from him, to lower her first at the bow and then at the stern until he had her safe in the dock below. This was a good plan, but it encountered serious difficulties in executing it. The bow came up all right, but for the life of him he could not budge the stern. This was discouraging, but Teddy was a lad of expedients and had not lived all his life on the seashore without learning something about rigging. There were plenty of blocks and ropes lying around, and it did not take him long to rig a snatch block to a bolt and to the end of the line he had been hauling.

MISS WARBLE AND TEDDY STOOD AND STARED AT EACH OTHER.

ing on. With this double purchase, by putting out all his strength, he was able to raise the boat's stern.

It was the queerest thing in the world, he thought, that the stern of that boat should be so heavy. It seemed as though it were made of solid iron. At last he got the boat clear of the chocks and got the line made fast just in time to meet the jerk on it that came as the boat, now hanging free by the falls from the ridgepole of the roof, swung across nearly the whole width of the left with such a lunge that the ridgepole bent and creaked and the whole framework of the old oil house swayed as though it were coming down.

Teddy was glad to take a good rest at this stage of the proceedings, while the boat swung backward and forward like a great pendulum flashing through the rays of sunlight.

By the time that the boat had stopped swinging and hung steadily by the falls just clear of the floor he was pretty well rested and ready to go to work again. To open the trapdoor he must raise the boat about six feet. He went at the ropes with a will, hauling away easily at the bow fall and tugging at the stern fall with the double purchase with all his might. At last the bow was high enough, and one more tussle with that dreadfully heavy stern would make everything clear for him to open the trapdoor and lower away. Teddy strained away at his tackle with all his strength, stopping to rest and to puff like a porpoise after each round, but gaining steadily. At last the boat swung level, a clear six feet above the floor, and victory was almost within his grasp.

It was just as he had reached this almost triumphant point in his labors and had turned to make the rope fast to the belaying pin while he opened the trapdoor—at this critical moment Miss Ruth Warble's spectated face showed at the top of the stairs, and Miss Ruth Warble's sharp voice exclaimed:

"Why, Teddy Rodford! Of all created things, what badness are you doing here?"

Teddy jumped as if he had been shot. The rope slipped from his hands and whizzed through the blocks, and that tremendously heavy stern of the boat dashed downward through the sunlight. With a bang and a crash of splintering wood it struck a beam with such force that the old oil house swayed and trembled and seemed in a fair way to fall to pieces there and then.

With this banging and crashing was also a most curious jingling sound, and very astonishing was its cause. As the stern of the boat struck the beam the stern sheets were broken all to pieces, and out of the stern locker poured a stream of gold and silver coins which jingled as they fell and which blazed and glittered as the sunbeams touched them while they went rolling every which way over the floor.

In the silence which followed this outburst of noise Miss Ruth Warble and Teddy Rodford just stood and stared at each other across more silver and gold and five dollar pieces and ten dollar pieces and even twenty dollar pieces than either of them ever had seen anywhere and certainly more than they ever were likely to see again loose on the floor of a sail loft.

And so the lost fortune that Captain Tranquil Warble had hidden in this queer place before he sailed away in the Harmony Home to his death in the northern seas was found at last.

BLOOD SUBSTITUTE.

Why Saline Solution Is Sometimes Injected into the Veins.

Occasionally in cases of serious wounds where there has been great loss of blood the published reports state that "saline solution" was injected into the veins to supply the deficiency. The average reader, however, has a very vague if any idea how a solution of salt takes the place of blood.

Not to go into a complete analysis of the blood, it is sufficient to note that of 1,000 parts, 780.15 is composed of water, albumen .65 parts, sodium and potassium .8371, coloring matter (supplied by the red blood corpuscles) .133, leaving only some 12 parts to be composed of fibrin, fat, calcium and magnesium, etc. Where there is serious loss of blood a state of collapse sets in because, the normal weight of blood being reduced, the heart's action is diminished, there being less resistance for that organ to overcome.

To counteract the result of shock and collapse it is necessary to stimulate the heart by restoring the normal weight; in other words, to get it to work by giving it something to work on. As the analysis shows, of 1,000 parts of blood nearly 800 are composed of water and sodium, and therefore a plain saline solution makes a good substitute. The heart does not know the difference, and it goes to pumping away as usual as soon as this imitation blood gets in the veins. The saline solution serves to tide the patient over the danger point. As the food is converted into chyle, new blood is formed, the red corpuscles are supplied rapidly from the normal tissues, and the saline solution is thrown off through the secretions in the usual way.

Formerly transfusion of blood was the means employed, but this always objectionable method has been supplanted. The greatest objection to the transfusion of blood from one person to another was that to supply the necessary amount to restore the wounded patient it was inevitable that the volunteer should be almost as badly drained, so that the physician would have two patients on his hands where he had one. Besides, there was always the risk of transfusing disease to the patient with the other's blood. Dogs and sheep have been sacrificed to surgery for this purpose, but most people prefer to use blood of their own manufacture to any imported from beasts or their fellow creatures.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

The first of the modern bank notes were made in China about the year 1000 A. D.

Blood in its natural state contains a surprising amount of pure air, amounting to nearly seven-eighths of its entire bulk.

The wasp's nest is constructed of a first class article of papier mache, made from the pulp of wood, with an animal glue specially prepared by the wasps for the purpose.

The honey of the wasps cannot be extracted by the common bee, which has not weight enough to pull down the lower jaw of this curious flower. Only the bumblebee has access to the interior.

The first trapdoor was made by a species of African spider which has its nest in the ground and closes the entrance by means of a trapdoor opening outwardly and covered with bits of earth and grass in order to escape observation.

Women's Love of Ugly Men.

The illustrious men in history who were distinguished as much for the fascination which they exercised over the fair sex as for their talents and ability were, as a rule, plain and insignificant in appearance. Julius Caesar was a very ill favored man, and yet when a mere stripling, before his fame in Rome, girls of his own age sighed for him and mature women longed for his love. Among the men of later times who were renowned in like manner were Sir Philip Sidney, plain almost to ugliness; Paul Scarron, the comic poet, a cripple; Voltaire, unmistakably ugly, and Rousseau, whose manners were awkward as his face was plain, while John Wilkes, who had the power to subjugate any woman who spoke to him for even five minutes, was admitted by his own showing to be the ugliest man in England in his time.

MRS. C. E. FINK

is an honest, tried and true remedy of unquestionable therapeutic value. This medicine made from native roots and herbs contains no narcotics or other harmful drugs and today holds the record for the largest number of actual cures of female diseases of any medicine the world has ever known, and thousands of voluntary testimonials are on file in the laboratory at Lynn, Mass., which testify to its wonderful value.

Mrs. C. E. Fink, of Carnegie, Pa., writes:—Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—“I wish every suffering woman would take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and write to you for advice. It has done me a world of good and what it has accomplished for me I know it will do for others.”

When women are troubled with Irregularities, Displacements, Ulceration, Inflammation, Backache, Nervous Prostration, they should remember there is one tried and true remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Mrs. Pinkham's Standing Invitation to Women

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to write Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Out of her vast volume of experience she probably has the very knowledge that will help your case.

The Modern Restlessness.

Like the Athenians of old, most people are vainly searching for some new thing, only to look upon it when they find it with suspicion. Of the vast majority it is as true today as it was first written—

They eat, they drink, they sleep, they plod.
They go to church on Sunday.
And many are afraid of God.
And more of Mrs. Grundy.

Cutting Down Competition.

"I saved $500 this year by moving."
"Cheaper house?"
"No; I found that my wife was trying to outdress a rich woman in the same block."

No man can produce great things who is not thoroughly sincere in dealing with himself.—Lowell.

HEALTH OF WOMEN

In this nineteenth century to keep up with the march of progress every power of woman is strained to its utmost, and the tax upon her physical system is far greater than ever.

In the good old-fashioned days of our grandmothers few drugs were used in medicines. They relied upon roots and herbs to cure weaknesses and disease, and their knowledge of roots and herbs was far greater than that of women today.

It was in this study of roots and herbs that Lydia E. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., discovered and gave to the women of the world a remedy more potent and efficacious than any combination of drugs.

MOUNTAIN AND MOUSE

National Civic Federation Report Is Disappointing.

After Two Years of Labor the Committee Brings Forth a Report Which Proves Little—Investigators Allow Their Prejudices to Blind Them to the Facts—Labor Unions Are Warned of Danger.

For two years a committee of the National Civic Federation has been making a study of municipal ownership in the United States and England. The investigators having been selected impartially from the advocates and opponents of municipal ownership. The report embodying the findings of this committee will be published this month in two parts, one of which will be devoted to the opinions of the investigators, the other to the statistical information upon which those opinions are supposed to be based.

Half Truths.

We use the word "supposed" advisedly, for from the advance sections that have been given to the papers it appears that some at least of the municipal ownership members of the committee have not considered it necessary to make their opinions square with the facts. For instance, Mr. Bemis holds up the Wheeling (W. Va.) gas plant as an example of successful municipal ownership because its net rate is 75 cents, while $1 is charged by the companies in Norfolk, Va., and Atlanta, Ga. According to the newspaper reports, Mr. Bemis does not inform the public that the average price of coal in Norfolk and Atlanta is at least 60 per cent higher than in Wheeling and that the latter city uses natural gas as fuel in its retorts, nor does he call attention to the important fact that the average candlepower in the two cities named is 25 per cent higher than in Wheeling.

Charity Begins at Home.

Where Mr. Bemis does use figures he uses them shrewdly. As superintendent of the Cleveland waterworks he of course knows that in that city the average death rate from typhoid in the thirty-two years preceding 1905 was 52 per 100,000. So he uses for comparison with cities that have private waterworks only the years 1905-06, when the typhoid death rate in Cleveland averaged only 17.6 per 100,000. Two years is of course far too short a period upon which to base such a comparison, since the rates vary widely in different years, the rate in Syracuse in 1900, for example, being only about half what it was in 1906, while Cleveland dropped from 114 in 1903 to 15 in 1905.

Hope Versus Experience.

Professor Parsons, another of the M. O. members of the committee, seems to prefer the future to the past as a basis for determining results. He expresses his conviction that municipal ownership would develop a higher class of municipal administrators, but when he is faced with such conditions as existed in Philadelphia under the notorious gas ring he promptly sides with the issue by declaring that Philadelphia did not have public ownership, but only ownership by political grafters. The humor of this is apparent when one considers that one of the principal objections to municipal ownership is that it tends to result in "ownership by political grafters."

Politics Versus Efficiency.

On this point the opinions of Professor Commons are worth quoting. Although he also has a predilection for municipal ownership, he evidently assumed that it was his duty to give a verdict in accordance with the facts. His sincerity must be recognized even by those who do not accept all of his conclusions. He and Mr. Sullivan, editor of the Clothing Trades Bulletin, consider the labor aspects of the subject. Professor Commons admits that some municipal plants are "politically honeycombed" and adds: "The appointment, promotion and dismissal of employees and the wages to be paid offer peculiar opportunities for political and personal influence inconsistent with efficiency."

Professor Commons finds that it is not unusual for public service companies to appoint employees at the behest of political bosses, but he notes that in such cases the employee has to make good in order to hold his position, while in the case of city plants the politician's influence is expected to keep the man in the position even if he is incompetent or negligent.

Municipal Employees Pull Together.

In Great Britain Professor Commons finds that municipalization has produced "a spurious form of trades unionism," which was repudiated by a practically unanimous vote of the trades union congress in 1906 on the ground that the Municipal Employees' association is a class rather than a trade organization. Speaking of the advocacy by some councilors of the disfranchisement of municipal employees because of their tendency to support candidates who will concede their demands, Professor Commons says that "it is not the true remedy, though it goes without proof that such a remedy is needed, for municipal employees sooner or later cast their votes for candidates who promise or have secured a betterment of their condition regardless of its effect on the enterprise as a whole."

A Menace to Unionism.

Professor Commons considers that trades unions will check this tendency, but such has not proved to be the case in England, and Mr. Sullivan, who is evidently a friend of the unions, points out that it is more probable that the organization of municipal employees will undermine unionism than that the unions will be able to keep the city employees out of politics. The fact that municipal departments must be open shops supports Mr. Sullivan's contention and should be given more consideration by union men than they have hitherto accorded it.

The Matter of Wages.

These two investigators agree that in Great Britain the wages in municipal plants are not higher than elsewhere except in the case of unskilled labor and in the tramways. In this connection it is worth while to recall the words of James Dalrymple, manager of the municipal tramways of Glasgow:

"In Glasgow when we took over the tramways we paid a better wage, but we did not pay that wage to the same men. It was paid to other men. We got superior men."

In general Professor Commons finds common labor better paid by cities in America than by companies, but Mr. Sullivan points out that in many cases at least the man is expected to earn this extra wage by voting and working for his political boss and that his tenure of office depends on this rather than on his efficiency and adds:

America Behind Europe?

One section of Professor Commons' report is very misleading. He says: "Neither municipal ownership nor private ownership has accomplished the good results in the United States that should be expected of it, and both are far behind what both have accomplished in Great Britain. . . . We are in precisely the same position that British municipalities occupied forty years ago in the gas business and fifteen to thirty years ago in the street car and electricity business."

The utter absurdity of this statement is shown by the fact that in 1904, the last year for which statistics are available, there were in the United States 30,187 miles of street railways against 2,117 in the United Kingdom, although the population of the latter country was then more than half that of the United States. It is a well recognized fact that in the application of electricity to lighting and power the United States not only leads the world, but nearly equals all the rest of the world.

AN IMPLSION.

It is the Opposite of an Explosion and Less Familiar.

Every one knows what an explosion is, but its opposite, an implsion, is less familiar. At great depths in the sea the conditions are favorable for its production. At 2,500 fathoms the pressure is, roughly speaking, two and a half tons to the square inch—that is to say, several times greater than the pressure exerted by the steam upon the piston of a powerful engine.

An interesting experiment to illustrate the enormous force of this deep sea pressure was made on the Albatross, a government vessel engaged in deep sea exploration.

A thick glass tube several inches in length full of air was hermetically sealed at both ends. This was wrapped in flannel and placed in one of the wide copper cylinders used to protect deep sea thermometers when they are sent down with the sounding apparatus. The copper cylinder had holes bored in it, so that the water had free access inside, round the glass. The case was then sent down to a depth of 2,000 fathoms and drawn up again. It was found that the cylinder was bulged and bent inward, just as if it had been crumpled inward by being violently squeezed. The glass tube itself, within its flannel wrapper, was reduced to a fine powder, almost like snow. The glass tube, it would seem, as it slowly descended, held out long against the pressure, but at last suddenly gave way and was crushed by the violence of the action to a fine powder.

This process, exactly the reverse of an explosion, is termed an implsion. —Chicago Record-Herald.

MASTERY OF THE NILE.

The Method by Which the Flow of Water Is Controlled.

Every morning from a little room of a great white house on the eastern shore of the Nile at Assouan is clicked by telegraph to Cairo the question, "How much water?" The answer comes so many thousand gallons more or so many thousand gallons less. A button is pressed, the water which flows under the iron bridge at Cairo is increased or diminished some ten days later in accordance with the telegraphic answer, and the intervening valley between Assouan and Cairo has a little more or a little less water on its surface. The man at the button may bring joy or sorrow to thousands of little farms—it is all according to the message he receives.

From the great white house there extends across the river a granite wall or dam 150 feet high. Halfway up this wall and stretching its entire length a line of shutters opens or closes by a pressure of the button. In the winter months a huge lake expands to the southward, which has every appearance of being a flood, for in certain places the tops of palm trees are discernible above its surface, and the summits of inundated ruins apparently mark the sites of sunken cities. As the days go by and Cairo demands more and more water the palm trees and the ruins seem to rise from their watery beds until in June and early July the river flows freely with all its historic indolence.—New York Times.

If it's Neuralgia

and those sharp, shooting, agonizing pains drive you almost crazy, take Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills, and get relief. They drive out the pain by their soothing effect upon the nerves. When taken as directed they are harmless, and leave no bad after-effects. That's the reason they are so popular with all who use them. Your druggist can tell you what others in your locality think of them.

"I do positively think that Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills are the best medicine ever put upon the market. I find them so restful and soothing, and without any bad after-effects. I have suffered with neuralgia so that my system would just ache and quiver, and I cannot take opiates; but I can take these tablets, and they always relieve me. No one that suffers with neuralgia need fear to take them, as I know they will not form a habit, for if there was any opiate in them I could not take them. Just one in the morning when I feel bad, and I can do my work all day."

It has been an argument in constant use that Reading's tax rate has prevented the rapid development of the town; per contra, now that North Reading's rate has dropped from $18.50 to $13.00 there should be a rapid incoming of new population to prove the argument not fallacious. But nearly all of us feel like one citizen who said, "Thank God for the high tax rate that gives my children an education." We are thankful to be able to buy water and electricity from the town at present rates, to have a quiet, well ordered, good governed, democratic town, with just enough country features to make it enjoyable.—[Reading Chronicle.]

Yet there should be a limit to the increase of taxes, or else people will locate in places where the rates are low.

SPOKE ON ARCH-BISHOP WILLIAMS.

Services were resumed at the Unitarian Church Sunday after the summer vacation. At the morning service the pastor, Rev. William I. Lawrence, took for his subject the lives of four distinguished men who had passed away in the last few weeks. These men, Mansfield the actor, Joachim the violinist, St. Gaudens the sculptor, and Archbishop Williams, each a leader in his chosen field of endeavor, exemplified four distinct types of men.

After speaking of the exalted position held by the first three in their lines of art, Mr. Lawrence said: "There is another art, greater than the others, more difficult and more important, and that is the art of life. In this we find the highest type exemplified in the late archbishop. The cathedral and the splendid organization of the Catholic church in this section will stand as an abiding monument to his industry."

Mr. Lawrence also spoke in appreciation of the courtesies shown him by Archbishop O'Connell some years ago while he was in Rome, whereby he and his friend were enabled to secure admission to the vatican library and inspect some of the ancient manuscripts and other treasures.

BOYS BROKE ARMS.

Two boys broke their arms in town last Friday afternoon at almost the same time, each accident being from a fall while they were at play. The lads were Charlie Harrold, son of Police Officer Harrold, and Harold O'Loughlin, son of Thomas O'Loughlin.

The Harrold boy fell from a horse in the yard of Whitney's mill, his father, who was on duty in the centre at the time, taking him to a physician, who set the fracture.

Harold O'Loughlin was playing "fire" and riding in an express cart when it tipped over. His break was in the small bone of his arm and it was found necessary to break the large bone in order to set it.

BASE BALL.

The Winchester A. A. will close their season Saturday, September 14, with a game with the strong Roxbury team. The season has been very satisfactory as far as games are concerned, the home team having won 9 out of 12. From a financial point it is quite different, the team having run behind owing to the poor support they have received from the town. As this is the last game the management hopes that it will be well attended and that nobody will overlook the ticket agent when he comes around.

WILL TEACH IN NEWTON.

Mr. Robert Adriance, son of Rev. and Mrs. S. Winchester Adriance of Mt. Pleasant street, began his duties on Monday as instructor in history at the Newton high school. Mr. Adriance is one of Winchester's brightest young men, a graduate of the High school and of Dartmouth College. He taught last year in the Hanover, N. H., high school while taking a post-graduate course at Dartmouth.

RETURNS TO AUSTRIA.

Mr. Fritz Redtenbacher returned to his home in Lunz, o. d., Austria, this week. Mr. Redtenbacher has made his home in Winchester for the past two years, being a popular member of the Calumet Club. He does not expect to remain in Austria, but to return to Winchester again in a couple of months.

TO TEACH IN BOY'S SCHOOL.

Mr. Howard Newton, son of Rev. D. Augustine Newton of the First Congregational Church will teach at the Mitchell boys school in Billerica the coming season.

1613 PUPILS REGISTERED.

The school registration on the first day showed a total of 1613 pupils in Winchester's ten school buildings. That this number will be increased by at least 100 more during the year, is highly probable. The registration this year showed an increase of 150 pupils over the first day of a year ago.

Following is the number of pupils in the various schools:

High	196
Wadleigh	333
Prince	119
Chapin	283
Gifford	135
Highland	89
Mystic	33
Rumford	171
Washington	125
Wyman	129

Indications are that the schools will not be over filled in any instance, although certain grades in some schools are larger than can be conveniently handled, which will necessitate the changing of some scholars to other schools to even things up. Thus some of the 5th and 6th grade scholars in the Chapin will be transferred, as will grade 1 pupils in the Rumford and some of the upper grade scholars in the Washington. The Rumford and Washington pupils will probably go to the Chapin, and the latter scholars to the Gifford or Prince.

Supt. Herron has been diligently at work since assuming charge and has things running smoothly and satisfactorily in all school departments. His methods and personality have made a decidedly favorable impression upon the teachers and parents.

A meeting of the teachers was called by Supt. Herron at the High school on Monday afternoon. Plans and methods of work were discussed, and remarks were made by Supt. Herron and Mr. Currier, chairman of the school board. There will be no radical changes in the school work this year.

In his remarks the new superintendent expressed his hearty administration for the present school conditions, as shown in building, equipment, and teaching force and his full appreciation of the work done by Mr. Metcalf. He further expressed the hope that the teachers would rest assured that no changes in the school administration would occur to occasion any unrest although doubtless progress would require the adoption of new plans from time to time. He emphasized the importance of the work of instruction and the value of remembering that the fundamental ends of the school life should mean more than the lessons learned from the text books.

The special teachers are now working on the arrangement of a schedule which shall, as far as possible, provide that only one of them shall visit any grade on the same day. This will tend to adjust the regular and the special work of the school rooms with the greatest advantage to the work of the instruction.

Through the courtesy of Mr. R. I. Ellis, of the Boston & Northern Street Railway Company, an arrangement has been completed by Superintendent Herron whereby street car tickets sold to pupils in books, at the rate of 40 for $1.00, to be used solely for transportation to and from school, may be obtained at the Superintendents' office, in the High School building. This avoids the necessity for making out a certificate and sending to Reading every time tickets are needed and will be a great convenience to teachers and pupils.

It is a pity that the Kindergartens of the town have no larger attendance than is now the case. At present there are enrolled 31 in the Chapin school and 23 in the Prince. Probably no other year of school work is more valuable under competent instruction, such as we have in Winchester, than that given to Kindergarten work. It is not so much in preparing children for the work of the first grade as in developing the best side of the child nature, in training and guiding the child activities, and in inculcating lessons of neatness, order, beauty and unselfishness. It would be a gain to the school system if a Kindergarten could be established on the east side to accommodate children who cannot go either to the Prince or the Chapin building.

Parents will be interested in knowing that at the present the Prince Kindergarten will open at nine a. m. and close at noon.

As already announced Superintendent Herron's office hours are 8 to 9 a. m. and 3 to 5 p. m. on school days and 7 to 8 o'clock Thursday evenings. It is hoped that the latter hour, which will be lengthened if necessary, may be of particular service to many parents who could not well see the superintendent during the day.

The school census will be completed this month, it being about half taken at the present time.

THE WINCHESTER

MOTHER'S ASSOCIATION.

The opening meeting of the fall will be held on Wednesday, Sept. 18, at 3 p. m., in the Congregational vestry. Mrs. Alfred S. Higgins of Winchester will speak on the subject: "The Light Touch in Child Training." All teachers are especially invited to join, or enjoy these meetings of the association once a month. The social hour with light refreshments is to follow the paper. Little children may be brought and will be cared for during the meeting.

These meetings are wholly undenominational. They are for all mothers and all interested in the care of children.

POLITICAL.

The political situation in Winchester is extremely quiet, not alone as far as it concerns the question of Representatives, but the entire ticket. This applies to both parties. Gov. Guild will have the support of the Winchester delegation, and so too will Senator Riley of Woburn who will be given a second term without opposition. The indications are that Mr. Lewis Parkhurst will be the Republican nominee for Representative with but little or no opposition. Mr. Parkhurst states that he is not seeking the place and will not enter the caucus to make a contest but if it is the desire of the voters of the district that he serve he will accept the nomination.

The other gentlemen who have been brought forward by their friends, are not lifting a hand to secure the nomination so far as can be learned. The Democratic nominee for Representative will probably come from the Medford end of the district, it being their turn to name a candidate. Who it will be is not known to the party managers. One of the leaders of the party in town informed the STAR that if Mr. Parkhurst was nominated it would be useless to make a fight against him. This same gentleman deplored the fact that prominent and strong Democrats in this town could not be induced to allow their names to be used for this office. There are certainly a number of strong men, who would not only receive the entire support of their party but also many other voters. To make the contest interesting, the candidates of both parties should be from the same end of the district. Another point this Democratic leader raised was that despondency in the party should give way to hope, and a strong fight put up.

Mr. Whitney will secure the Winchester delegates to the State convention as there appears to be no Bartlett sentiment.

The Republican Caucus will be held in the Town Hall, Tuesday evening, Sept. 24, and the Democratic Caucus Friday evening, Sept. 20.

95 VOTERS DROPPED FROM VOTING LIST.

New Names Will Keep Total About the Same.

The registrars of voters dropped 95 names from the voting list at their last meeting. These were the names of those who were not assessed here May 1. A session of the registrars will be held before the caucuses to elect delegates to the conventions.

The reason for dropping so many names was because of deaths and removals—some of the latter being the last contingent of men employed by the United Shoe Machinery Company.

These names dropped will only represent a temporary shrinkage of the total as it is expected the registration of new voters between now and election day will pretty nearly put the list back on its footing of a year ago. The loss sustained by the United Shoe Machinery Company has about been overcome by new names that have been added to the list since the company left here.

MRS. DAVIS BADLY BURNED.

Mrs. Reuben S. Davis was badly burned by the explosion of a kerosene lamp at her home, 6 Reservoir street, on Sunday night. Mrs. Davis had descended a flight of stairs with a lamp in her hand to open the door for her two daughters, when she was seized with a fainting fit and fell to the floor.

She dropped the lamp, which exploded, setting fire to her clothing. Her daughters saw her lying unconscious on the floor, but were unable to get in for a moment or two. There were obliged to break a window and thereby succeeded in arousing Mr. Davis who was asleep, and who went to the assistance of his wife. Miss Mildred Davis was badly cut about the hands.

They extinguished the fire in their mother's clothing, but not before she had been burned about the face. Mildred was also somewhat burned about the hands. Neither was seriously injured. The lamp set fire to the floor. Mrs. Davis is confined to her bed.

WINCHESTER MAN

CAN BOWL.

William Dotten of Winchester, out loose at Flanders' Saturday evening and showed he had not forgotten how to roll, even if it is early in the season. Three strings in succession, of 104, 116 and 120, with a total of 335, is pretty fine bowling.—[Woburn Times.]

POLL TAX BOOKS.

With the return of the summer vacationists the demand again arises for the "Poll Tax Books." The book of this year was completed early in the summer, and many residents left town before it was out. Persons desiring them can have them by calling at the STAR Office.

A BEAUTIFUL MEMORIAL.

The congregation at the Unitarian Church, last Sunday, was treated to a pleasant surprise. Mr. Lawrence, at the time of the offertory, spoke of the sacred significance of memorial gifts, recalled the fact that the communion table and the baptismal font had been so received and asked the congregation to repair with him, at the close of the morning service, to the church parlor, for the purpose of receiving another gift. In the parlor they found a beautiful new upright piano, made by Chickering, grand scale. It was the gift of Mr. George P. Brown, in memory of his wife and children. The donor had kept his kind purpose so secret that it was known only to the pastor, and to Miss Bishop who selected the instrument.

At this service of recognition Mr. Lawrence said that Mr. and Mrs. Brown had intended to present a piano in memory of their deceased children, but that Mrs. Brown's sudden death had so changed the situation that the gift is now in her memory as well as in theirs. He accepted the gift in behalf of the people, particularly for the little ones of Mrs. Cuming's primary class, for whom it will be chiefly used. The congregation then sang "Blest be the tie that binds," and Miss Noyes sang "Suffer little children to come unto me." Under Mrs. Lochman's touch the tones of the piano were strong and clear, and there were many expressions of appreciation. The Standing Committee will make more formal acknowledgement to the generous donor. Mr. Brown is one of the few original founders of the church now living. Two others of the original signers, Mrs. O. L. Wellington and Mr. Franklin C. Perry were also present at this service.

MRS. SARAH J. HUSTON.

Mrs. Sarah J. Huston, who was so badly crushed by a train at the station on last Thursday evening, passed away at the Mass. Gen. Hospital on Friday forenoon at 11.10.

It appears from a statement made by Mrs. Huston that the station had been called and the train stopped when she attempted to alight, and the starting of the train threw her in such a manner as to crush her right knee, amputation being necessary later at the hospital.

Mrs. Huston was 56 years of age, being a native of Crystal, Me., and a daughter of Alonzo C. and Phoebe Ham Hersey. She had been a resident of Winchester for the past six years, coming here with her daughter, Mrs. Herbert L. Larabee, and making her home on Cliff street. In addition to Mrs. Larabee she leaves one son, Mr. Freeland L. Huston of this town and a brother, Jonas H. Hersey, of Island Falls, Me.

Funeral services were held from the Larabee home on Cliff street Sunday afternoon, conducted by the Rev. D. Augustine Newton, pastor of the First Congregational church. The pall bearers were Messrs. Herbert E. Butler, Charles H. Hall, Harry A. Wheeler and Joseph Kennedy. There was a large attendance of relatives and friends and a profusion of flowers. The burial was in Wildwood cemetery.

GANG ROUNDED UP.

Chief of Police McIntosh rounded up the gang who have been breaking into houses near the Woburn line this week, and he succeeded in not only capturing the thieves, but a large part of their plunder as well. The series of breaks culminated in the taking of some 300 pounds of lead from the Carlton H. Lee place on Main street last Saturday night and about $25 worth of cigars and tobacco from the store of L. K. Dunham at the Swanton street bridge early Monday morning.

The Chief got after the offenders in earnest and on Tuesday he knew who the men wanted were. He located some of them near Russell's hill, just off Cross street, telephoned the Woburn police to watch for them if they went to that city, then after a chase got two of them—William Carrol, aged 18 of Woburn and Joseph McGarr, also of Woburn. On Wednesday he captured two other members—Thomas McGourty and Joseph Kelley of this town, who were caught in Brighton.

Carrol proved to be the ring leader of the gang, and under cross examination by the Chief disclosed the hiding place of the stolen goods on Russell's hill. The cigars and tobacco were recovered, together with a quantity of the lead.

The first two captured were in court Tuesday, their case being continued and they being held under $800 and $500 bail respectively. The last two were also held under bonds, and the cases of the four come up today.

This gang has been committing small breaks in the vicinity for some time, and their capture will probably put an end to them.

Mr. L. S. Redding and family of Lakeview road, and Mrs. T. R. Rhodes, Miss M. A. Rhodes and Harold Rhodes are spending the week at the Russell Cottages at Kearsarge, N. H.

GEORGE A. GUERNSEY.

George Anson Guernsey of Eaton street passed away at his home on Wednesday evening in his 70th year. For some years he has been a sufferer from brights disease, and was stricken with a shock in July, 1906. Since that time his health steadily failed, and when he had a second shock last Saturday, he did not recover consciousness until the end.

George Anson Guernsey, son of Hiram C. and Maria R. Guernsey, was born in Bridgewater, Penn. His life was an active one. After completing his education he engaged as a teacher in the state of Pennsylvania and was engaged in this profession at the outbreak of the war in '61. He enlisted in the 93d Penn. infantry, holding the rank of Sergeant Major. At the battle of Fair Oaks he was taken prisoner, remaining in the hands of the Confederates for three and a half months, during which time he was confined in several of the famous war prisons, including Belle Isle and Libby. He was finally discharged, his army service covering a period of 14 months.

He again resumed his teaching and later engaged in the oil business at Oil City, Penn., and in '65 was married to Miss Miriam J. Wright of Forest Lake, Penn. About this time he organized a national bank at Susquehanna Depot, Penn., holding the position of cashier. He later organized banks at Port Jervis, N. Y., Towanda, Penn., and Canton, Penn. Previous to engaging in business in Towanda he resided for two years in this town, returning again to make his permanent residence here in '99.

Mr. Guernsey was an active member of the local Methodist Church, of which he was a charter member, and held many important offices. In 1892 he was a delegate to the General Methodist Conference at Omaha from the central New York conference. He held a local preachers license in Penn. before reaching 21 years of age. He was a Mason and a member of the G. A. R., being a past commander of the post at Canton, Penn.

Mr. Guernsey leaves a wife and five children—Mrs. Clifton H. Mix of Worcester, Mrs. Robert J. Sprague of Bangor, Me., Benjamin W. of Wellesley, Henry C. of Chicago and George R. of Glendive, Mont. One sister, Mrs. H. Miranda Bailey of Brooklyn, Penn., also survives him.

Funeral services will be held this Saturday at 2 p. m. from his late residence, No. 27 Eaton street. The burial will be in Wildwood.

SELECTMEN'S MEETING.

September 9th, 1907.
Board met at 7.30 p. m.
Present Messrs. Beggs, Barnard and Winn.

In the absence of the regular Chairman Mr. Beggs was chosen to act in that capacity.
Mr. E. N. Lovering appeared and asked that the light on Hillside avenue near Winthrop street be moved about thirty feet nearer Winthrop street; referred to the town engineer. Same party asked to have the concrete sidewalk reskimmed; was told that it would be considered with other concrete work later.

Voted to grant an Auctioneers license to Frank L. Ripley to April 1st, 1908, fee of two dollars accompanying application.
Received communication from Robert S. Goff, General Manager Boston & Northern St. W. Y. Company saying that said company intended making repairs to the roadbed on Washington street this fall, and more extensive repairs next spring.

Received petition from Blank Bros., asking to have the sidewalk on Lake street between Main street and Linden raised so that the water from the street would not flow onto it; referred to the Supt. of Streets to do.

Received communication from W. J. Daly asking for slight repairs to Westley street; Replied that the Board would try to do work of some sort there this fall.
W. L. Bowser applied for an Intelligence office license at 555 Main street; voted to grant same subject to approval of the Chief of Police, on payment of the usual fee of two dollars.

Granted use of the small Town Hall for the Democratic caucus, Friday evening, September 20th, and for the Republican caucus, Tuesday evening, September 24th, next.

Warrants drawn for $873.63 and $1905.69.
Adjourned at 9.35 p. m.

G. H. LOCHMAN, Clerk.

DEMOCRATIC CAUCUS.

A caucus of the Democrats of Winchester will be held in the Town Hall on Friday evening, Sept. 20, for the purpose of electing one delegate each to the Democratic State, Councillor, County and District Conventions, also two delegates to the Senatorial and four delegates to the Representatives conventions; also to choose a town committee for 1908 composed of nine members.

The reason for the small number of delegates to the several conventions is because of the splitting up of the vote at the last State election.

THE WATER METER RATE.

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

"Observation" says in your last issue that the minimum charge for metered water should be $10 instead of the present rate of $12. Why not make the charge conform to the number of fixtures in a house, the same as now in force. For instance if a house is now paying $6 a year, make the minimum charge for metre $6, a twenty five dollar house $25 and so on according to the number of fixtures. With the present minimum charge of $12 a year, the house with the large number of fixtures will get a reduction while the house with one or two fixtures will have the rate practically doubled. As the introduction of meters is supposed to be to effect a saving in the consumption of water and not to increase the present rates, a meter rate based on the present charges would accomplish that end. The minimum meter charge of $12 would prove unfair to poor people and to owners of small tenements, while those at present paying over $12 a year will be benefited. This is discrimination.

Suppose that the telephone or electric light or gas companies should require its customers to pay such a fixed charge, would the people stand for it. Hardly. Why should not the town treat its citizens as equitably as these concerns do?

SMALL WATER USER.

CLAIMED HE TOOK FUNDS.

On complaint of the officers of Court Pride of Foresters, Alfred F. Forten, the late treasurer, was in court Tuesday forenoon at Woburn charged with embezzlement of the funds of the lodge. His case was continued until next Tuesday, and he was placed under bonds of $500 for his appearance on that date.

The officers claim that there is a shortage of over $300 from dues that had been paid by members also bills credited as paid but which were not paid. It is also claimed that the peculations have extended over a period of three years, since he was first elected to the office of treasurer.

Mr. Forten, who has been one of the most active members of the Court and having held many prominent offices in the local organizations and also in the grand body, claims that he is innocent of any wrongdoing and that he can clear up the matter when the case comes to trial. Not being able to obtain bail he was taken to East Cambridge.

ARMSTRONG-BARSTOW.

The wedding of Miss Florence Mae Barstow, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Norman G. Barstow, and Frank Alexander Armstrong of Woburn took place Monday evening. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Daniel J. Keleher, Ph.D., at the parish house of St. Mary's church. The bride wore white net over white silk and carried a bouquet of white roses. She was attended by her sister, Miss Laura Barstow who was gowned in blue silk and carried pink roses. The best man was Walter Barstow, a brother of the bride. After the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents on Pond street and was attended only by immediate friends. The couple were the recipients of many beautiful presents both useful and ornamental, including a handsome sideboard, hand painted china tea set, a lace bed set, parlor rocker, etc.

Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong left after the reception and will make their home at 196 Main street Everett.

IS YOUR NAME ON THE LIST.

See that your name is on the voting list so that you can take part in the caucus to be held on the 24th. The Registrars of Voters announce that they will hold a session in the Town Hall Building on Tuesday evening, Sept. 17, from 7.30 to 8.30 o'clock, to receive applications for registration from those who desire to act in the respective party caucuses. Don't forget the date, and also do not neglect to attend the Caucuses.

BOARDS OF SURVEY IN TOWNS.

The STAR prints below in full the act passed by the last Legislature to authorize the establishment of Boards of Survey in Towns. It is a very important act, and its adoption would in many ways, it is believed, be of benefit to towns. In all probability a motion will be made at the next town meeting to refer the matter to a special committee to consider the advisability of its adoption by the town. The act reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., as follows:

Section 1. The selectmen of any town which accepts the provisions of this act shall constitute a board of survey for that town.

Section 2. Any person or corporation desiring to lay out, locate or construct any street or way in any town which accepts the provisions of this act, after the date of such acceptance, shall, before the beginning of such construction, submit to said board of survey suitable plans of such street or way, to be prepared in accordance with such rules and regulations as the board may prescribe. Upon the receipt of such plans, with a petition for their approval, the board shall give a public hearing thereon, after giving notice of such hearing by publication once a week for two successive weeks in a newspaper published in the town, the last publication to be at least two days before the hearing; and after such hearing the board may alter such plans and may determine where such street or way shall be located, and the width and grades thereof, and shall so designate on said plans. The plans shall then be approved and signed by the board and filed in the office of the clerk of the town, who shall attest thereon the date of the filing.

Section 3. The board of survey shall from time to time cause to be made under its direction plans of such territory or sections of land in any town which accepts the provisions of this act, as the board may deem advisable, showing thereon the location of such street or ways, whether already laid out or not, as the board shall be of opinion that the present or future interests of the public require or will require in such territory, showing clearly the direction, width and grades of each street or way, and the board may employ such assistants and incur such expense in regard to said plans as it may deem necessary, not exceeding the amount of money appropriated by the town for the purpose. Before making any such plan the board shall give a public hearing as to the location, direction, width and grades of streets or ways in the territory to be shown on the plan after giving notice of such hearing by publication once a week for two successive weeks in a newspaper published in the town, the last publication to be at least two days before the hearing, and shall, after making any such plan, give a like notice of hearing, and a hearing thereon, and shall keep the plan open to public inspection for one month after the first application of notice of such hearing. After such hearing and after the alterations deemed necessary by the board have been made in such plan, the plan shall be marked as made under the provisions of this act, shall be signed by the board, and shall then be filed in the office of the clerk of said town, who shall attest thereon the date of such filing.

Section 4. The powers of the board of selectmen of any town which accepts the provisions of this act in regard to highways shall not be abridged by this act in any manner, except as provided in this section, and the powers given to them by this act shall be in addition to the powers now possessed by them. After the passage of this act no street or way in such town, shown on any plan filed as aforesaid, shall be laid out, located anew, altered or widened, and no such street or way, whether already or hereafter laid out, shall be constructed by any public authority, except in accordance with the provisions of this act. If any person or corporation shall hereafter open for public travel any private way the location, direction, width and grades of which have not previously been approved in writing by the board of survey in the manner provided for in this act, then neither the town nor any other public authority shall place any public sewer, drain, water pipe or lamp in, or do any public work of any kind on, such private way so opened to public travel contrary to the provisions of this act: provided, however, that these provisions shall not prevent the laying of a trunk sewer, water or gas main, if it be required by engineering necessities.

Section 5. If any building shall hereafter be placed or erected in any town which accepts the provisions of this act within the boundaries of any street or way shown on any plan filed with the town clerk as herein provided, or on land adjacent to any such street or way the grade of which at the time of placing or erecting such building is other than the grade shown on said plan, or on land adjacent to any street or way the plan and profile of which have not been approved by said board of survey, no damages caused to any building so placed or erected, by the construction of such street or way as shown on said plan or caused to any building so placed or erected, or to the land upon which such building is placed or erected, by the subsequent change of grade of any street or way the plan of which has not been approved by said board of survey, shall be recovered by or paid to the owner of the whole or any part of the estate of which the land upon which said building so placed or erected formed a part at the date of the first publication of notice of hearing as aforesaid.

Section 6. Any town which accepts the provisions of this act may from time to time appropriate sums of money to be expended by the board of survey for carrying out the provisions of this act; but no expenditures shall be made in excess of such appropriations.

Section 7. Said board of survey, its officers and agents, may so far as they deem it necessary in carrying out the provisions of this act, enter upon any lands and there make such examinations and surveys and place and maintain such monuments and marks as they may deem necessary; and any person whose property is injured by such entry or by such placing or maintaining, who fails to agree with the town as to the amount of his damages, may have them assessed and determined in the manner provided by law in the case of land taken for the laying out of highways in said town, on application at any time within one year after such entry or after such placing and maintaining.

Section 8. This act shall not be construed to authorize any taking or condemnation of land, or to render a town liable for damages of any kind, except for making entries upon land and for placing and maintaining monuments and marks as authorized by section seven, nor to authorize a town to lay out or to construct any way located on any of said plans, until such way has been laid out as a highway under other provisions of law.

Section 9. This act shall take effect upon its passage so far as to authorize the submission of the question of its acceptance to the voters of any town, but it shall not take further effect in any town until it has been accepted by a majority of the voters of such town present and voting thereon either at a special meeting called for the purpose, or at an annual meeting.—[Approved March 12, 1907.]

LIGHTING TROUBLES IN WAKEFIELD.

One of the arc light dynamos at the Municipal Light Plant "burned out" Wednesday night, and a part of the street lighting service has been out of commission since then. As many circuits as possible were connected with other machines but not all could be so arranged without overtaxing their capacity.

The dynamo which broke down has been in service 17 years and that particular type is not manufactured now, making it difficult to repair it. A new part was finally secured.—[Wakefield Item.]

Had a private corporation been furnishing the lighting what a howl would have arisen over the delay in getting the service in order. Under municipal ownership it would have been useless to kick. Think of it, a dynamo 17 years in service, when electrical machinery becomes obsolete in but a few years. The test of public opinion in Wakefield's plant will come when it is modernized.

INCREASE IN TAX RATE.

One does not wonder at the increase of our tax rate so much after looking into the way our appropriations are being increased. For instance, the State tax last year was three and one-half millions of dollars and Watertown's proportional part was $13,230. This year's state tax was $4,000,000 and Watertown's share $14,720. This is only one of the items that go to make our tax rate high. If the legislators will expend so much money for Metropolitan parks, sewers and water board expenses, the people must expect to pay larger taxes all around.—[Watertown Enterprise.]

COMMENDATION FOR LIEUT. GOV. DRAPER.

The words of commendation that are being handed out to Lieut. Gov. Draper were not unlooked for by those who have been associated with him in years past. For a number of years, Mr. Draper has been first and foremost in about every undertaking of a public character. His services at the head of the Volunteer Aid Association, during the Spanish War, displayed the real character of the man. His incessant work in raising funds, purchasing and fitting up a hospital ship to care for the Massachusetts soldiers, and the relief work at Montauk will never be forgotten by the unfortunate sufferers who received the best care and attention that money could afford. It is well known that it was through Mr. Draper's foresight that the hospital ship was disposed of at the close of the war, and the money that was received has been used to care for those who were afflicted permanently, and their dependents. It was a humane work for a humane purpose. In this, Mr. Draper applied the same business methods as he always does in every undertaking that is committed to his charge.—[Fitchburg Sentinel.]

People are beginning to discover that the last legislature enacted a lot of laws which will prove expensive and troublesome. Massachusetts already has about four times as many laws as are really necessary or pleasant and is therefore being governed not wisely but too much.

GET ALL THAT IS COMING TO THEM.

Burlington's tax rate of $3.60 beats out North Reading's $3.00 which heretofore had been about the lowest announced. Burlington is quite a noted place for what it doesn't have. No electric or steam road crosses its borders, and it has no place on railroad maps; there is no doctor, lawyer, police, dentist, no street lights, nor town water, or else the place has been misrepresented in print at various times for years past. New fangled ideas and things, in the opinion of Burlingtonites, do not evidently add to the sum of human happiness, and like as not they're right. It's all in the point of view.—[Woburn Times.]

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portions of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed, you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces. We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

DID NOT FIRE A SHOT

Why Thousands of Indians Melted Away Before Forty Men.

A STORY OF PIONEER DAYS.

Captain McCabe Knew the Sioux Better Than They Knew Themselves, and the Indians Knew the Captain's Men Were Dead Shots and Scalp Takers.

In the pioneer days to reach Montana from Cheyenne, in Wyoming, required a roundabout journey that involved a double crossing of the Rocky mountains, with a change of base at Salt Lake City. The United States government brought about a better condition of travel by constructing a trail through the Gallatin valley along the course of the Gunpowder river, reaching around the base of the mountains in a curvilinear form, which avoided the heights of the Rockies. To protect this route from marauding Indians three forts were built—Reno, Phil Kearny and C. F. Smith.

In 1806 the murderous Sioux from the Yellowstone valley pursued a sanguinary course up through the Gallatin valley and into Montana. It was marked by rapine and plunder. They besieged Fort Reno and killed many of its garrison. They enveloped Fort Phil Kearny and wiped from the face of the earth every human being whose walls it failed to protect. Then they surrounded Fort C. F. Smith, where 200 soldiers found themselves surrounded by more than a thousand death seeking Indians. Escape seemed impossible. A courier got word of this condition of affairs to General Hancock, who was then stationed at St. Paul, and he sent a messenger to the governor of Montana at Bozeman.

The chief executive of the territory of Montana at that time was Green Clay Smith. He had been a member of congress from Kentucky, but President Lincoln made him territorial governor of Montana. He was seated on the porch of his residence in Bozeman when Hancock's message was handed to him. To a visitor he said:

"What in the name of heaven can I do? Fort C. F. Smith is 250 miles away. The country between here and there is filled with Sioux Indians. Our militia force consists of exactly 427 men. Not a man of them could reach Fort C. F. Smith alive. I am absolutely powerless. However, I will send for Colonel Howie."

At that time Colonel Neil Howie was United States marshal for the territory of Montana.

It was to this man that Governor Smith addressed himself, handing him General Hancock's dispatch and saying: "Colonel, we can't do anything for those poor devils in Fort C. F. Smith. Am I not right?"

"No," said Colonel Howie quietly, and with the gentle voice of a woman.

"There is no trouble about that, governor. We can arrange that matter and still leave the Montana frontier protected. I will need some picked men and a good leader for them. I think Captain McCabe is best fitted for this undertaking. I will find him."

McCabe was another gentle voiced man, with blue eyes. He didn't make much noise. He acted. He said to the governor: "Oh, yes; it is easy enough. But I'll need forty of the best men I can select. You can keep the rest of your volunteer force here."

Governor Smith looked at him in amazement. So did the visitor from the fort. They both thought he was either insane or a braggart. Governor Smith said to him: "How in the name of heaven do you expect to raise the siege of Fort C. F. Smith with forty men when you know that it is surrounded by more than 1,000 blood-thirsty Indians and that the country between here and there is covered with thousands more of murderous Sioux?"

Said McCabe quietly: "Why, governor, it is easy enough. The Indians know us and know that we know them better than they know themselves. You folks from the east have an idea that what you call Indian atrocities are simply unmeaning exhibitions of brutality; that scalping, for instance, is simply a form of torture. In that you are mistaken. The Indian believes that no man can go to the happy hunting ground—heaven we call it—who has been deprived of his hair. Their motive in scalping a victim is to carry out fiendish hatred to its utmost by preventing him from having a happy hereafter. Therefore to deprive an Indian of his scalp is to rob him of his hope of a happy hereafter. My men never kill an Indian without scalping him, and the Indians know that. The forty men I will select for this expedition are unerring in their aim with the rifle. They can shoot sixteen shots in sixteen seconds, and every ball means a dead Indian, and every dead Indian means a scalp, and every scalp means a warrior deprived eternally of a chance of ever reaching the happy hunting ground. My forty men will walk from here to Fort C. F. Smith without firing a shot."

"Incredible," said Governor Smith.

"True," said Captain McCabe.

What was the result? Forty men walked the 250 miles from Bozeman to Fort C. F. Smith. Indians watched them on every side. By day their progress was signaled by circling columns of smoke and by night by fire from mountain tops. But not a shot was fired. When they got within sight of Fort C. F. Smith the thousand whooping Sioux who held the garrison in siege fled, and the forty frontiersmen from Bozeman marched in and escorted the 200 soldiers back to the territorial capital without the loss of a life. Not a shot had been fired. Not a scalp had been lifted.

CALLING IN PARIS.

The Concierge is a Peculiar Institution in Several Ways.

You leave your card at the door of the person to whom you desire to present yourself, and there it is taken in charge by that peculiarly French functionary, the concierge, says Professor Barrett Wendell in Scribner's. At least in Paris, the greater part of French people live in large houses containing a number of apartments with a common entrance and staircase. Close to the entrance door, on the level of the street, are some stuffy little rooms inhabited by the concierge, or porter, with his family. Their duty, among other things, is to keep strict watch on whoever goes in or out, and at least one of them, often the porter's wife or half grown daughter, is always at hand.

The chief peculiarity of their temperament seems to be insatiable appetite. At whatever hour of day or evening you call on a concierge you are sure to find somebody eating or just risen from table, and the atmosphere inhabited by this bustling personage seems immortally laden with the fumes of something recently boiled.

No matter whether you call on a friend who lives in some unpretentious out of the way place or on one who inhabits something like a palace, the concierge is always about the same. You can detect little difference between those in charge of important doors and of insignificant. They are as like as house flies. Of course there are private houses in Paris, with regular domestic servants such as you would find anywhere, but these, grand or simple, are so unusual that you remember the concierge as everywhere standing between you and further human intercourse.

In response to your card, which the concierge duly sees delivered, comes a card, often with a note, in return. If, as is generally the case, this acknowledgment of your existence contains an intimation of when your French acquaintance may be found at home, either habitual or for your special benefit, you make your second visit at this appointed time and thus enter into real personal relations.

Otherwise, your intercourse has limited itself to a polite exchange of cards. Generally speaking, you never expect or attempt to see French people socially except when they have asked you to one of their regular days of reception or have made a definite appointment. To call on a person at any other time—to do more than leave your card with the concierge—would be an intrusive pretense to intimacy.

POINTED PARAGRAPHS.

The Value of Diamonds.

The value of the diamond is at so much per carat, and up to a certain limit the value per carat increases as the size of the stone increases. When a carat diamond is quoted at $125, a diamond weighing a half a carat is counted at the rate of $75 per carat, three-quarter carat diamonds at $100 per carat, one and one-quarter carat diamonds at $140 per carat, one and one-half carat diamonds at $150 per carat, one and three-quarter carat diamonds at $180 per carat, and two carat stones at $200 per carat. Stones weighing more than two carats sell at about the same rate as that quoted for two

STATE POLITICS

Rottenness in Boston City Hall
Slowly Being Uncovered

STARTLING DISCLOSURES

Whitney and Quincy Invade Dominion of Canada—Gerry Brown is on the Anxious Seat

The sensational disclosures brought out by the finance commission which is investigating the department affairs of the city of Boston have astonished a good many people, although those on the inside as to political matters have long known that there was a state of absolute rottenness existing at Boston city hall.

Those who have watched the course of events at the hall for a good many years and have seen the grafting right and left, have been astounded at the openness with which this kind of business was being conducted under the present administration, although they have doubted if the finance commission would be able to uncover much of it. It has been generally understood by those conversant with proceedings at city hall the past two years that under no previous administration had there ever been such wholesale plundering of the city as during the present term of office.

When Fitzgerald was elected mayor he gave his solemn pledge publicly, on many occasions, that he would protect the city and safeguard her interests in every quarter and under all circumstances. During his campaign for nomination and election, he reiterated over and over again, his unswerving purpose to conduct the affairs of the city on a business basis, and save the taxpayers in every possible way. He pledged himself to be a credit, not only to the city, but to his supporters and friends. From his attitude and utterances, one who did not know him might have been led to believe him indeed a statesman rather than a politician. Those who knew him simply grinned and said: "Oh, that is Fitz's bluff; the same old gag he has worked from time immemorial, and with which he has fooled the people first, last and all the time."

Boston's Dire Need Now

The finance commission evidently has arrived at the conclusion that the only thing against which the city needs to be protected is Fitzgerald himself. Every department so far investigated by the finance commission has been proven guilty of grafting, and the end is not yet. In the coal purchases made for the city, experts figure that more than 30 percent of all the money paid out was graft. Who got it? Did it all go into the pocket of the coal dealer, or did some of it reach persons higher up than the purchasing agent? These are questions which interest the taxpayers of Boston.

And yet these are the methods which the Democratic party would like to install at the state house by the election of a Democratic state administration to replace the present Republican regime. Fitzgerald himself is even credited with having a high ambition to run for governor later on, when the city of Boston, with its constantly increasing Democratic majorities, shall be sufficiently Democratic to overcome the Republican pluralities in the outside cities and towns of the state.

Those who look forward to the time when city hall methods will be rampant at the state house do so with many forebodings for the future of the commonwealth.

In connection with the coal scandal, uncovered by the finance commission, the sudden resignation of Michael J. Mitchell as superintendent of supplies is extremely significant. Mr. Mitchell purchased the coal at the instance of the mayor, as he testified, and could not tell whether the kind of coal contracted for was delivered or not. He made no effort to see that the quality of coal purchased was furnished to the various city departments, trusting all this entirely to the concern furnishing the coal.

Whitney and Quincy Go to Canada

The Democratic gubernatorial campaign is progressing. Recently Mr. Henry M. Whitney and former Mayor Josiah Quincy were heard at a gathering in Toronto, Can., on the subject of reciprocity.

These eminent gentlemen had evidently constituted themselves a high commission to push along a treaty between the United States and Canada, thus to forestall the president and his advisers. As a high commission, therefore, they went to Toronto and came back happy. Mr. Whitney announced that he was delighted at the success of his mission.

All this is rather mystifying to the ordinary mind. There had been a general superstition that treaties of reciprocity were negotiated by commissioners appointed by the president, and that they made a proper report to the appointing power before publishing to the outside world the results of their deliberations with the Canadian commissioners. It would certainly have been kind in Mr. Whitney and Mr. Quincy to have consulted with the president before negotiating any treaties, and to have notified him of their action after the work had been done.

Meanwhile, General Bartlett believes he is gaining ground rapidly, and his friends claim that he will rout the Whitney forces, horse, foot and dragons, at the caucuses to be held shortly. General Bartlett snickers in

HOW THEY DINED.

Methods of the English at Table in the Seventeenth Century.

The old English had three meals a day, of which the chief meal was taken when the work of the day was finished. The first meal was at 9 o'clock, and supper was taken just before bedtime. The Normans dined at the old English breakfast time or a little later and supped at 7 p. m. In Tudor times the higher classes dined at 11 and supped at 5, but the merchants seldom took their meals before 12 and 6 o'clock.

The chief meals, dinner and supper, were taken in the hall both by the old English and the Normans, for the parlor did not come into use until the reign of Elizabeth. Breakfast did not become a regular meal until quite lately, and Dr. Murray in the Oxford Dictionary gave 1463 as the date of the earliest quotation in which the word occurred. The meal did not become recognized until late in the seventeenth century, for Pepys habitually took his draft of half a pint of Rhenish wine or a dram of strong waters in place of a morning meal. Dinner was always the great meal of the day, and from the accession of Henry IV. to the death of Queen Elizabeth the dinners were as sumptuous and extravagant as any of those now served.

Carving was then a fine art. Each guest brought his own knife and spoon, for the small fork was not introduced into England until Thomas Coryate of Odecombe published his "Crudities" in 1611. Pepys took his spoon and fork with him to the lord mayor's feast in 1663. The absence of forks led to much stress being laid upon the act of washing the hands both before and after meals and to the rule that the left hand alone should be dipped into the common dish, the right hand being occupied with the knife.

The perfect dinner at the best time of English cookery consisted of three courses, each complete in itself, and terminated by a subtlety or device, the whole being rounded off with yuccas, after which the guests retired into another room, where pastry, sweetmeats and fruit were served with the choicer wines. The English were essentially meat eaters, and it was not until the time of the commonwealth that pudding attained its extraordinary popularity. Indeed, the first mention of pudding in the menus of the Buckfeast at St. Bartholomew's hospital did not occur until 1710, and in 1712 is an item of 5 shillings for ice.—London Times.

When It Rains in India.

While Jupiter Pluvius reigns in India nothing can be done out of doors. The rain at times is simply a white liquid sheet dropping straight down from the heavens, so that no very great stretch of imagination is required to convince one that a deluge is not an impossible event.—Wide World Magazine.

Boards of Surveys in Towns.

We print in full on second page the act passed last year by the Legislature authorizing the establishment of boards of surveys in towns. This is an important measure and should be read by readers of the STAR as the question of accepting this act may come up at the next town meeting, or steps taken in that direction. The measure appears to be one that will likely prove of benefit to towns, and one that will remove many vexed questions that are constantly arising.

Republican Caucus.

A caucus of the Republicans of Winchester will be held Tuesday evening, Sept. 24, in the Town Hall, at 7:30 o'clock, for the purpose of electing six Delegates each to the Republican State, Councillor, County, District Attorney, and Senatorial Conventions of 1907, and fifteen Delegates to the Representative Convention; also to choose a Republican Town Committee for 1908, to consist of nine members; also to see if the provisions of law for the use of official ballots at future caucuses shall be adopted and to transact such other business as may properly come before the caucus.

The call is signed by George Chandler Coit, Chairman of the Republican Town Committee, and Frank Eugene Barnard, Secretary.

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

Another comic opera, and one of the most popular in recent years, is due at the Castle Square next week. "The Wizard of the Nile" it will be remembered, came again and again to Boston some years ago, with Frank Daniels in the title role, and it always found a hearty welcome awaiting it. Its plot is droll beyond expression, its music is pretty and tuneful and its scenery has an alluring charm with all its picturesque views of the Egyptian country and Egyptian palaces. "The Wizard of the Nile" is the work of C. Victor Herbert and Harry B. Smith, both of whom were also the creators of "The Serenade" and it is in every way as funny and as clever as it is possible for a comic opera to be.

The leading part of Kibosh, created by Frank Daniels, will be acted at the Castle Square by Jack Henderson, who has elsewhere found favor in the role, and the entire company will rally around him in their humorous and musical interpretation of the opera.

During the week of Sept. 23rd, Verdi's grand opera "Rigoletto" will be the attraction at the Castle Square. Matinees are given each week on Tuesdays as well as Wednesdays and Saturdays.

DANCING THIS WINTER.

The coming season promises to be an active one in dancing circles in town and we are able to announce that Miss Martha E. Langley of Newton will be in Winchester this winter for both social and aesthetic dancing. This will be pleasing news to many dancers.

TREMONT THEATRE.

Klaw & Erlanger's Advanced Vaudeville at the Tremont Theatre might appropriately be likened to some tremendous machine, and all machinery needs to work for a while to be operative at its best. The success of Klaw & Erlanger's latest amusement enterprise is without a precedent. Seventeen theatres were thrown into commission at practically the same time, and at each place the bill has been declared the most novel, attractive and high-class ever known under the name of vaudeville. It is the purpose of Klaw & Erlanger to improve each succeeding bill if it is within the bounds of possibility. Acts and artists will be transferred from one bill to another until, over the entire circuit, the bills presented will contain the most distinct variety of acts, and the offerings will be in the nature of a complete and symmetrical performance. Every act will be a headliner, and the people will have two hours of real entertainment instead of having to wait the greater part of the time for a few minutes of real enjoyment. Klaw & Erlanger have set and will maintain the highest possible standard of achievement, which means a remodelling and uplifting generally of vaudeville in America.

OBSERVATIONS.

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

The L started laying rails on Mystic avenue at Sullivan Square for the Fells line last Saturday and the contract for building the reserved space on the westerly side of Forest street through the Fells in which the cars are to run has also been awarded, so it now looks as if the cars would be running through to Stoneham next summer.

If Boston does not brace up and straighten her affairs out it will serve her right if the legislature should appoint a commission to run them. Extensive graft and gross mismanagement has been known to exist there for a long time and the special committee has only begun to show it up. It runs through almost every department and both of the political machines are rotten.

The New York Herald after a very exhaustive investigation has figured out that the Philippines have cost us up to date four hundred million dollars and has also obtained opinions from a large number of members of congress as to what they think should be done with the island and few believe in retaining them. As Senator Lodge was one of the chief pushers for acquiring them it would be very interesting to know what he thinks about it.

The Selectmen should insist upon the rebuilding of the street railway turnout near the Baptist Church. It is in very bad condition for use and also looks badly in that prominent place. When the work is being done the turnout should be lengthened and widened some for safety and convenience. Some of the rail joints on that line also need attention.

The Republican party voters should turn out in force at their caucus and nominate for representative that candidate who stands out so far ahead of all others yet or likely to be mentioned that there is no comparison, and the fact is so well known that there is no need of naming him. He would be a credit to the town.

Those property owners about the Centre who will not agree to any basis of settlement for their damages from the grade crossing abolition are liable to have some other plan than the Selectmen's adopted under which they could collect no damages for the closing up of the crossing where it is now. I believe the estimates of damages are very wide of the mark and that the fairest way will be to let all the property owners get their awards through the court. There will be decided betterments as offsets. The fatal accident at the Winchester station Thursday night of last week may be charged to that crossing at grade, probably.

LIEUT. GOV. DRAPER'S PUBLIC SERVICE.

While Republicans are complimenting Lieut. Gov. Draper upon the success that he has obtained while serving the State as Lieutenant Governor, they should not overlook the fact that his more recent service is not the only service he has rendered to his party or his State. We recall the eventful days preliminary to the Presidential election of 1896, when many of the leaders in the Republican party were in doubt as to the stand the party should take upon the great financial problems of that time. Mr. Draper was then chairman of the Massachusetts Delegation to the National Republican Convention, and it was he who called the numerous conferences of the strongest men in the party, and insisted that the party should take no backward step, but on the contrary, should take a bold stand in favor of the gold standard, and later accomplished his purpose after a most stubborn fight. The soundness of his position and the effort he made to bring success to the cause of sound finance, is his greatest achievement. Today those who were opposed to his views admit the soundness of his position, and the alluring question of finance is no longer a disturbing factor in politics.—[Lynn Item.]

COOLER DAYS ARE COMING

Cooler days—and nights—will soon be here.

Then will come the time when you will appreciate the advantages of a gas radiator for heating purposes.

With the gas radiator you can heat up a room in a few minutes—and there is no waste of fuel, for as soon as the room is warm enough you can turn off the heat.

A small gas radiator in your bedroom will make the room as comfortable as though you had kept a big fire going all night—and at a very small proportion of what a coal fire would cost.

The gas water-heater, too. Hot water—boiling water—at the moment you want it, with no wasted fuel.

Let us tell you about these things. A postal card or telephone request will bring you full information.

ORPHEUM THEATRE.

For next week's bill at the Orpheum Conway's famous bird, from Ithaca, which was the musical sensation of Atlantic City, has been secured. Mary Ann Brown, the English comedienne, who broke in like a meteor on New York with her character impersonations, and carried the vaudeville patrons by storm, will make her first Boston appearance at the Orpheum.

For the children, and grown-ups as well, Marzella, the queen of the feathered world has been secured. This is without question one of the greatest acts ever imported, with performing cuckoos, pigeons, parrots and giant ravens, a whole stage full.

Others on the bill are Howard and North, of "those were happy days" fame. Munroe, Mock and Lawrence, in their sketch called "the Mother in Law." Dixon and Anger, in uproarious comedy. James and Jenny Lee, a remarkable pair of performers on the tight wire. Bicycling acrobatic specialties, and a number of others make up one of the biggest vaudeville bills ever offered.

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It.

How To Find Out.
Fill a bottle or common glass with your water and let it stand twenty-four hours; a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys; if it stains your linen it is evidence of kidney trouble; too frequent desire to pass it or pain in the back is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

What To Do.
There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed, that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy, fulfills every wish in curing rheumatism, pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passage. It corrects inability to hold water and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best. Sold by druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes.

You may have a sample bottle and a book that tells all about it, both sent free by mail. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention this paper and don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y.

Houses at Horn Pond

really a brick house incased in wood—a fort house it was called. It was built in this way to protect the dwellers against rude Indian assaults. There were many such houses in the old colonies, but one by one they grew gray with moss and vanished. The Minot house itself was burned about twenty years ago after standing about 230 years.

The old people of Dorchester and Neponset must remember it. It rose solemn and stately at the foot of the high hills overlooking the sea meadows. The high tide came into the thatch margins near it and went out again, leaving the abundant shellfish spouting in the sun. The fringed gentians grew amid the aftermath of the hayfields around it. The orioles swung in the tall trees in summer time, and ospreys circled and screamed in the clear sky over all.

But the orchards! Here were the fullness and perfection of the old New England orchards! The south winds of May scattered the apple blossoms like snow over the emerald turf and filled the air with fragrance. The earliest bluebirds came to them, and there the first robins built their nests. How charming and airy it all was in May, when the days were melting into summer, and how really beautiful and full of life were all of these venerable New England homes!

After the old house was burned I visited the place and brought away a few bricks as a souvenir of a home of heroic memories—of happy memories, too, if we except a single tragedy of the Indian war. The great orchards were gone, the old barns and their swallows, only the well remained and a heap of burned bricks and the blackened outline of the cellar wall.

It was a house full of legends and stories—wonder stories that once led a stranger to look upon it with a kind of superstitious awe. It had its historic lore, and like all great colonial houses, its ghost lore, but the most thrilling legend associated with the old walls was known as "The Two Brass Kettles."

The legend may have grown with time, but it was well based on historic facts and was often told at the ample firesides of three generations of Dorchester people.

The dinner, like Uncle Zebedee's prayer, seemed never to end. After the many courses of food there was an "and"—and pies and apples and nuts and all sorts of sweetmeats.

"Uncle Zebedee," I piped.

"Aunt said that you would tell us the story of the two brass kettles after dinner."

The Walking Kettles.

By FLOYD INGALLS.

Copyright, 1907, by James Schreiber.

I WAS introduced to them in an unexpected way, and I did not soon recover from the intense curiosity excited by my first impressions of them.

I had gone to the old Minot house, in Dorchester, Mass., to take dinner with my aunt. We two, my aunt and I, had wandered over the house, up the huge stairway and down into the cellar. Suddenly aunt opened the door of an old pantry on the floor of the porch and said, "Child, look here!"

"What, aunt?"

"The two brass kettles."

Two enormous brass kettles met my eyes. They were turned over on the floor, and each would have held the contents of a half barrel.

"Those are the ones, my dear."

"What ones, aunt?"

"The ones that saved the two children from the old Indian straggler."

"What Indian straggler?" I asked, with intense interest.

"Oh, the one in King Philip's war. Didn't you ever hear the story?"

"No, aunt."

"Well, I'll get Uncle Zebedee to tell it to you after dinner. Come."

"But what could any one do with such kettles as these? Where did they hang them?" I continued.

"Come here, and I will show you."

She swept away, and I shut the door of the dark room, which was lighted only by opening the door, and followed her. We went into the kitchen. She pointed to an enormous fireplace and said, "There, child."

"But, aunt, how did the two brass kettles save the children?" I asked again.

"Oh, they crawled about all over the floor here, there and yonder," pointing.

"Which crawled about, the kettles or the children, aunt?"

"A dln here fell upon the air and echoed through the great, fortress-like rooms. It was the huge bell for meals."

"Come, child, let's go. Uncle Zebedee will tell you all about it."

In a moment we were in the dining hall. How grand it all seemed! The sideboard was full of baked meats and steaming pies. Over it hung a fiddling gun or a blunderbuss. The room had been decorated for the occasion with crepeing Jenny and boughs loaded with peaches that had been broken off by a September gale. There was a whitewashed beam across the room on which were great hooks and staples. The table was oak, and the chairs were of a curious old pattern. At the head of the table was a great chair, and in it sat Uncle Zebedee, a good old man, now nearly ninety years of age.

After the family were seated Uncle Zebedee was asked to say grace. He had a habit of saying "and" after ending a sentence, and this made another sentence necessary, often when he had nothing more to say. It was so even in his prayers and was very noticeable in his story telling. There usually followed an "and" when the story was done.

It was a queer structure, the old Minot house in Dorchester. It was of hayricks in the air, and the bobolinks, I suppose, toppled about in the grass and red winged blackbirds piped among the wild wayside roses just as they do now. I wish that you could have seen the old hayfields in the long July afternoons, all scent and sunshine. It makes me long for my boyhood again just to think of them. But I shall never now again.

"Let me see. The two children were sitting on the floor near the two kettles. Experience was preparing dinner and had made a fire in the great brick oven, which heated the bricks, but did not heat the room."

"Well, on passing between the oven and the window she chanced to look toward the road, when she saw a sight that fixed her eyes and caused her to throw up her hands with horror, just like that."

Uncle Zebedee threw up both hands, like exclamation points, and let his crutch drop into his lap.

"Well, the maid only lost her wits for a few moments. She flew to the window and closed it and bolted the door. Then she put one of the children under one of the brass kettles and the other child under the other kettle and took the iron shovel and lifted it so and waited to see what would happen, and—"

Uncle Zebedee lifted his crutch, like an interrogation point, and we could easily imagine the attitude of the excited maid.

"And—where was I?"

"The children were under the two brass kettles, and the maid was standing with the fire shovel in her hand so," said aunt. "La, I've heard that story ever since I was a little girl."

"Yes, yes; I have it all now," said Uncle Zebedee. "She was standing with the fire shovel up so, when she discovered that the Indian had a gun—a gun."

"You see that old flintlock there over the sideboard? I used to fire it off every Fourth of July, but the last time I fired it kicked me over once. Don't you never fire it, children. It always kicked, but it never knocked me over before. I don't think I am quite as vigorous as I used to be, and—"

"What did the maid do with the gun?" asked aunt.

"The gun—yes, that was the gun, the one up there. The gun was up in the chamber then, and she dropped the shovel and ran upstairs to find it. But it was not loaded, and the powder was in one place and the shot in another, and in her hurry and confusion she heard a pounding on the door, just like that."

Uncle Zebedee rapped on the old oak table with startling effect, and then, after a moment's confusion, continued: "She loaded the gun and went down to the foot of the stairs and looked through the late hole of the stair door, so—and—yes, and the Indian was standing at the window—that window. His two eyes were staring with wonder on the two brass kettles. He had probably never seen a kettle like these before, and he did not know what they were."

"While he stood staring and wondering the kettles began to move. Two little hands protruded under the bail of each of them, like turtles' paws, for the kettles stood on their ears, which lifted them a little way from the floor. One of the children began to creep and to cry, moving the kettle. The other began to do the same. The cries caused the kettles to ring. Two creeping kettles! They looked like two big beetles or water turtles, and such the Indian might have thought them to be, but

The dinner, like Uncle Zebedee's prayer, seemed never to end. After the many courses of food there was an "and"—and pies and apples and nuts and all sorts of sweetmeats.

"Uncle Zebedee," I piped.

"Well, dearie."

"Aunt said that you would tell us the story of the two brass kettles after dinner."

"Why, dearie, yes, yes, I've been telling that story these eighty years, come October. Didn't you never hear it? I thought all little shavers knew about that. The two brass kettles—yes."

"They're in the old cupboard now. Bring them out, and I will tell you all about 'em. I shan't live to tell that story many more years. Maybe I shall never tell it again."

The servants brought out the two kettles into the kitchen where we could see them through the wide dining room door.

"Put 'em in the middle of the floor before the window," said Uncle Zebedee. "There, that will do. That is just where they were when the Indian came. You see the window?" he added.

It had a great, deep set casement. Grapevines half curtained it now on the outside, and the slanting sun shone through them, its beams glimmering on the old silver of the table.

It was past the middle of the afternoon of the shortening days of autumn.

"You have all heard of Philip's war," continued Uncle Zebedee, leaning forward from his chair on his crutch. "Everybody has. It destroyed thirteen towns of the old colony and for two years filled every heart with terror. Philip struck here, there and everywhere. No one could tell where he would strike next. The sight of an Indian lurking about in the woods or looking out of the pines and bushes usually meant a massacre."

"One Sunday in July, in 1675, the family went to meeting, leaving two small children, a boy and a girl, at home in the charge of a maid named Experience. The kitchen then was as you see it now. The window was open; the two brass kettles had been scoured on Saturday and placed bottom upward on the floor just as you see them there."

"It was a blazing July day. The hayfields were silent. There was an odor of hayricks in the air, and the bobolinks, I suppose, toppled about in the grass and red winged blackbirds piped among the wild wayside roses just as they do now. I wish that you could have seen the old hayfields in the long July afternoons, all scent and sunshine. It makes me long for my boyhood again just to think of them. But I shall never now again."

"Let me see. The two children were sitting on the floor near the two kettles. Experience was preparing dinner and had made a fire in the great brick oven, which heated the bricks, but did not heat the room."

"Well, on passing between the oven and the window she chanced to look toward the road, when she saw a sight that fixed her eyes and caused her to throw up her hands with horror, just like that."

Uncle Zebedee threw up both hands, like exclamation points, and let his crutch drop into his lap.

"Well, the maid only lost her wits for a few moments. She flew to the window and closed it and bolted the door. Then she put one of the children under one of the brass kettles and the other child under the other kettle and took the iron shovel and lifted it so and waited to see what would happen, and—"

Uncle Zebedee lifted his crutch, like an interrogation point, and we could easily imagine the attitude of the excited maid.

"And—where was I?"

"The children were under the two brass kettles, and the maid was standing with the fire shovel in her hand so," said aunt. "La, I've heard that story ever since I was a little girl."

"Yes, yes; I have it all now," said Uncle Zebedee. "She was standing with the fire shovel up so, when she discovered that the Indian had a gun—a gun."

"You see that old flintlock there over the sideboard? I used to fire it off every Fourth of July, but the last time I fired it kicked me over once. Don't you never fire it, children. It always kicked, but it never knocked me over before. I don't think I am quite as vigorous as I used to be, and—"

"What did the maid do with the gun?" asked aunt.

"The gun—yes, that was the gun, the one up there. The gun was up in the chamber then, and she dropped the shovel and ran upstairs to find it. But it was not loaded, and the powder was in one place and the shot in another, and in her hurry and confusion she heard a pounding on the door, just like that."

Uncle Zebedee rapped on the old oak table with startling effect, and then, after a moment's confusion, continued: "She loaded the gun and went down to the foot of the stairs and looked through the late hole of the stair door, so—and—yes, and the Indian was standing at the window—that window. His two eyes were staring with wonder on the two brass kettles. He had probably never seen a kettle like these before, and he did not know what they were."

"While he stood staring and wondering the kettles began to move. Two little hands protruded under the bail of each of them, like turtles' paws, for the kettles stood on their ears, which lifted them a little way from the floor. One of the children began to creep and to cry, moving the kettle. The other began to do the same. The cries caused the kettles to ring. Two creeping kettles! They looked like two big beetles or water turtles, and such the Indian might have thought them to be, but

The dinner, like Uncle Zebedee's prayer, seemed never to end. After the many courses of food there was an "and"—and pies and apples and nuts and all sorts of sweetmeats.

"Uncle Zebedee," I piped.

"Well, dearie."

"Aunt said that you would tell us the story of the two brass kettles after dinner."

"Why, dearie, yes, yes, I've been telling that story these eighty years, come October. Didn't you never hear it? I thought all little shavers knew about that. The two brass kettles—yes."

"They're in the old cupboard now. Bring them out, and I will tell you all about 'em. I shan't live to tell that story many more years. Maybe I shall never tell it again."

The servants brought out the two kettles into the kitchen where we could see them through the wide dining room door.

EVIL OF POLITICS.

How It Shows Itself in the Conduct of City Waterworks.

Paper Read by John M. Diven, Secretary of the American Waterworks Association, at the Meeting of the Organization Held in June of the Present Year.

That politics does in many cases—probably a large majority of cases—enter into the management of waterworks owned and operated by cities and towns will not be denied. And that this is not right, is absolutely a menace to the health and welfare of the citizens in many cases, as well as a great financial loss, will not, I think, be denied. Too much depends upon the proper management of a public water supply to make it safe or right to allow politics to control or affect it.

To be a good waterworks superintendent or manager requires, in addition to ability and adaptability, long study and practice. If these managers are to be changed every time the city administration changes, it is evident that they can never have the experience that they should have to perform their duties properly. No matter how good men they may be they will still lack the proper training and experience.

This follows throughout the entire staff—office force, inspector, street foreman, meter readers and repairers, engineers and firemen—in fact, the entire force.

Again, will men who only expect to hold the "job" for two or three years give it the study and attention that it should have? It is not natural that they should; there is little incentive for them to do so; they know that the next election is likely to go the other way, so that they will have to go at some other work.

Then they have other duties to perform, other masters to serve—the men or party that put them in the position. Party allegiance must be observed at no matter what cost to the citizens. The men are employed for their politics, not for their worth or fitness for the particular position.

Under these circumstances, are the best men always or even usually chosen, the men fitted for the work?

The public water supply is a matter too all important to be made subservient to politics or any consideration except that of the very best possible supply of the purest water obtainable. All must use water. If it is pure and good, the health of the people will be good and the community will be prosperous. Because it is a healthy city with a low typhoid death rate home seekers will be attracted to it. But without proper supervision and management the purity of the water will in most cases always be in danger.

These political changes are often brought to the writer's attention in his capacity as secretary of this association, one of his duties being to try and keep track of the waterworks people of America. How frequently he finds these changes—of purely political reasons—going on! How many changes have to be made in our list of members for this reason! In looking back over the years of his connection with the association the number of such changes that come to mind is almost as long as the present list of members.

A man drops out, is not heard from. One of our associate members calls and in the course of conversation tells of a visit in "Grafton." Asked about Smith, the old superintendent, he says: "Why, hadn't you heard? At the last election there was a complete change in the political complexion of the city. Smith and all the old commissioners are out. Jones is the superintendent now." The commission is new, the superintendent is new, just because there has been a change in the political control. Smith was a good man for the position, had had long experience, thoroughly understood the work in every detail, was familiar with the works, knew all their weak points. In his long years of service he had gathered about him a corps of able and trained assistants. The works were well managed, the quality of the water above suspicion, the quantity ample. The management was economical; waste was kept at the lowest possible point. The plant was in first class condition.

But Smith didn't belong to the right political party. He was not an active politician, but he hadn't helped the party now "in" had, in fact, voted against them; hence he must go. No matter if the quality of the water is not kept up, if the quantity is lacking when a big fire occurs because waste had not been watched; no matter if typhoid fever breaks out because the water supply has not been properly guarded and sickness, suffering and death follow the active politician, the men who helped the party, must be rewarded.

Jones is an "active politician." He came in fact, did—carry the Seventeenth ward for the party in power. He is a good man, sober, industrious and intelligent. There is nothing against him; no fault can be found with his appointment so far as character goes. He was a clockmaker and a good one, but had absolutely no knowledge or experience with waterworks management.

Then O'Sullivan had a strong pull in the Seventh and controlled many votes, which he pulled for the dominant party. He had run an engine in Alderman Riley's wood yard—he knew the difference between the throttle and the exhaust; hence he was put in charge of the expensive machinery at the pumping station.

Stoppelbein was a clerk in Meisner's drug store; hence knew all about chemistry, water analysis, etc., and he controlled a large German vote. He was put in charge of the filter plant, though he had no experience in managing either filters or men.

So down through the line the entire force is new and inexperienced, holding the positions because of the political work they had done, not because of their fitness or training.

To start with everything is in the best of condition in all departments, and things run on smoothly enough for a time. The pumping engines respond to the throttle, and the exhaust is clear. So they run smooth and pump water with no increased expense; no difference is perceptible. But in time the boilers through neglect become badly incrustated and require more coal to keep up steam. The packing of the engines becomes worn, the plungers worn, the pump valves broken. There is a loss of steam and vacuum, a big "pump slippage," and more coal is required.

Water is being freely wasted, and more has to be pumped and filtered. The filters are overworked, and with unskilled management soon fail to properly perform their work. Impure water is delivered to consumers, and a typhoid epidemic breaks out.

Then there is trouble, inquiry and investigation. Maybe the state board of health is called in. Anyhow, the trouble is remedied for the present; but the city and state being controlled by the same party, the matter is smoothed over.

Stoppelbein has had a lesson, has had experience and would probably give efficient management as long as the party "kept in," after which more inexperience would follow.

AGAINST CONFISCATION.

Sound Arguments Put Forward in the Famous Hughes Veto.

Referring to the two cent fare bill which he recently vetoed, Governor Hughes of New York gave utterance to his views on the subject of confiscation legislation as follows:

"It is of the greatest importance not only that railroad corporations should be compelled to respect their public obligations, but also that they should be permitted to operate under conditions which will give a fair return for their service. Upon this depends not simply the security of investors, but the security of their employees and the protection of every form of industry and commerce through the maintenance and extension of necessary transportation facilities. Nothing could be more opposed to the interests of the community as a whole than to cripple transportation corporations by arbitrary reductions of earnings."

"I fully appreciate the fact that those who have promoted this bill believe that such a rate would be fair. But I deem it most important that the policy of dealing with matters of this sort arbitrarily, by legislative rule of general application without reference to the demands of justice in particular cases, should be condemned."

"Every workman, every tradesman and every citizen believing himself to have a stake in the prosperity of the country should determinedly oppose it, for it not only threatens the stability of business enterprise which makes our prosperity possible, but it substitutes unreason for sound judgment, the ill considered demands of resentment for the spirit of fair play and makes impossible patient and honorable effort to correct abuses."

THE CYCLONE.

How This Wonderful and Destructive Air Fury is Formed.

To get an idea of a cyclone's formation imagine a large circular pan or tub with quite a large hole in the middle of the bottom. With this hole plugged, fill the vessel with water, then draw out the plug and watch. There is first a rush of water from all directions toward the hole and a turbulent effort to get through; then the water surface above begins to sink and swirl, the particles gradually circling around and around and rushing ever faster, toward the center. At last there is actually a hollow space through the center, around which all the water in the tub is whirling sluggishly near the rim, but with more and more violent rapidity toward the middle until it rushes downward through the bottom. Now, if that water were air you would be watching a little cyclone turned upside down, for the air rushes upward instead of downward.

In the cradle of cyclones during the summer months, when the land and the water grow hotter and hotter because of the longer days than nights, a layer of air, hot, light and full of vapor, is for a time held down by denser air above it. Restless, expanding, tumultuous, it moves about like a beast at bay until a thinner place in the air above is found; then up it madly rushes, and into the vacuum left behind the lower atmosphere hastens from all directions, pushing and twisting and pouring upward until it has fallen into a regular spinning around a common center.

The cyclone, once formed, rushes away from the tropics toward the pole and begins its career of destruction, bruising, wrecking and sinking the luckless ships which happen to be in its path. More and more of the surrounding atmosphere is drawn into the whirl until the storm often covers an area nearly 1,000 miles in diameter. Sometimes it dings itself upon our Atlantic coast and tears fiercely through forests, fields and cities. Then, again, it sweeps away across the broad ocean and dashes itself upon the coasts of Europe. Once in awhile it so adroitly avoids the land that we never know it has passed until ships come in torn and broken.—St. Nicholas.

Spasms St. Vitus' Dance

Many persons who suffered untold agonies from epilepsy, fits, spasms, and St. Vitus' Dance are today well. The strengthening influence of Dr. Miles' Nervine upon the shattered nerves having restored them to perfect health.

"I endured agony that words cannot express from St. Vitus' dance, which followed a very severe spell of rheumatism. I doctored with a physician, but the more I took of his medicine the worse I got. My mother's devotion saved me. After she had become almost heart-broken, as well as physically exhausted from constant care, she advised a neighbor she procured a bottle of Dr. Miles' Nervine. From the first dose to the last a continual change for the better was noticeable, and when I had taken eleven bottles I was well, and in robust health."

EDWARD D. REAM, North Manchester, Indiana.
"Our little boy Harry, had spasms for three years, and although we doctored with many physicians, he continued to grow worse until he had ten spasms in one week. About that time our attention was called to Dr. Miles' Nervine. We began giving it to him. His improvement seemed slow, but when he had finished the fourth bottle the spasms had disappeared, and have not been seen now for years. We would always recommend Dr. Miles' Nervine."

Snake Myths.

Snakes have no medicinal qualities, and the following popular notions are myths. That galls of snakes are an antidote for snake bites; that their oil is good for rheumatism, baldness and deafness; that wearing their skins will cure rheumatism or stiffness; that a snake heart, oil or blood is good for consumption or other ills; that snake flesh should be eaten for blood disorders; that a second bite of the snake in the same place will cure or counteract the first bite; that rattlers of snakes are charms.

A COMMUNICATION.

DELINQUENTS.
A new departure has been made for those who are over 60 days in arrears for water rate taxes. The police department deliver the summonses, without cost, whereby the water takers have to pay 25 cents each in addition to their water bills or have their water service cut off. There is a new order of things in the Collector's department, everybody is used alike and according to law. About 250 water takers were served with notices to pay their water rates and 25 cents extra last week by the police. What a travesty on high tonedness of Winchester to have 250 persons in arrears for water taxes, and they did not all live on the "Plains" either, very few lived there, but in other parts of the town.

BAND CONCERTS.
I wish to thank everybody that had anything to do with the band concerts on Manchester Field this summer including the clerk of the weather. The music was excellent. I do not mean equal to the Municipal band or the Pop concerts, but I mean very good indeed. The programs were tip top, notwithstanding some wanted more ragtime music. The band stand suits me exactly, although some people want it an inch and a half higher and others think it should have been stained a darker color. There is, however, proper criticism outside of the musicians. The people of Winchester did not appreciate what was done for them, or the attendance would have been more than four times larger.

When over 200 people assembled in a hot day there should be cold drinking water provided. For a temporary thing a barrel of ice water should have been placed near the band stand and Mr. Skillings and Mr. Downs should have taken turns at the spigot in serving the people with cold water.

The Chief of Police has the charge of the issue of permits for games on the field, and he allowed a base ball game to go on at the same time that the band was playing.

When we take into consideration that he is musical and formerly played the big brass thing in the Woburn Band, and sometime ago that he sang in a glee club, and was for some years a member of the choir in the Episcopal Church in Woburn, he ought to be indicted for allowing the hoodlums to play base ball on the same field and at the same time that there was a first class band concert going on. He should be tried before the appropriations committee and the fines paid into the town treasury and credited to the gypsy and brown tail moth account. H. F. J.

A PRETTY FLOWER STORE.

Mr. George F. Arnold, the florist, has an exceedingly pretty store at his place of business on Common street. During the dull summer season when the town had practically gone to the seashore or country, he put a force of men at work overhauling the entire premises. The old natural wood has been painted a glossy white which is now the prevailing color of all the fixtures. A huge refrigerator with a capacity of 1000 pounds of ice has been installed, thus displacing one that the business had outgrown. The large variety of cut flowers are placed in the refrigerator where they are kept fresh until wanted, and he can get a great lot of them in it, too. A pretty little office has been added. Three of the handsomest stores in town are now located in this building side by side—Arnold's flower store, Scales' jewelry store and Larabee's insurance office.

Mr. Arnold has received his fall stock of many varieties of ferns, including the Boston fern, palms, cactus, rubber plants, etc., and the display is well worth looking at. He also carries constantly in stock a large line of cut flowers in their season.

Mr. Arnold is an adept at making floral designs, having been engaged in this line for many years, and his creations are not only beautiful but artistically arranged. He makes a specialty of quick order work for receptions, weddings, funerals or for any other occasion. He has built up a large business in Winchester since he opened the original flower store, owing to his accommodating disposition, his ability and his desire to please all tastes. His store is well worthy of a visit.

COUNTY CONVENTION.

The Middlesex county Republican convention for the nomination of county officers will be held at Institute Hall, East Cambridge, Tuesday, Oct. 1, at 10 o'clock when candidates for sheriff, county commissioner and associate commissioners will be nominated.

Following the county convention, a district attorney convention will be held in the same place and date. There are no contests for the county nominations. Sheriff Fairbairn, County Commissioner Bigelow and Associate Commissioners Thompson and Strange will be renominated probably by acclamation.

There is, however, a lively contest on for the district attorneyship there being a number of candidates.

BAPTIST CHURCH NOTES.

The chapel of the First Baptist Church has been furnished throughout with handsome folding chairs, a gift of one of the members. The chairs were put in place on Wednesday afternoon, and were a most pleasant surprise to the congregation which assembled that evening for the mid-week prayer meeting, for scarcely a person knew that the gift was contemplated. Expressions of surprise and gratitude were heard on all sides during the evening, and many observed that the chairs added greatly to the beauty and attractiveness of the chapel. Also a number of new singing books have been given, that every one may have a book. The Sunday evening services for the present will be held in the chapel, which on last Sunday evening was well filled.

The Rev. and Mrs. John M. Moore have recently taken up residence in Winchester. Mr. Moore is the newly appointed secretary of the Young People's Forward Movement of our denomination. Four of our young people leave this week for four educational institutions: Miss Laurine Stillwell Osgood for Bradford Academy; Miss Lucy Spaulding for Wheaton Seminary; Miss Frances Spaulding for Wellesley College and Mr. Herman Haskins for Brown University.

Fifteen of our people attended the far-west missionary meetings in Cambridge on Monday evening.

STRUCK BY ELECTRIC.

Peter Flaherty, the night switchman for the electric cars at the crossing was fatally injured last Friday night by being struck by an electric on Church street. He received a broken ankle, fractured skull and concussion of the brain. After being taken to Dr. Cummings' house and later to the Winchester hospital, where he was operated on, he was removed to the Mass. Gen. Hospital, dying there early Sunday morning.

It seems that Flaherty boarded the 11.10 car for Arlington, he not having any car to pass through the centre until the next Stoneham car, upon which he intended to return, boarding it at the turnout on Church street. As the Arlington bound car reached the turnout the Stoneham car was waiting and it passed without stopping. Flaherty was on the rear of the car, and he evidently intended to step off and board the waiting car. He waited too long however, and stepped directly in front of the Stoneham car, which had commenced to get under way. He was struck and dragged some distance.

Flaherty was a single man, living with a sister at No. 53 1-2 Prospect street, Woburn. He was unconscious when picked up by the car crew and remained so until his death.

PROGRESSIVE WHIST.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward M. Messenger gave a progressive whist party to their Hillcrest neighbors last Saturday evening, the occasion also being the anniversary of their marriage, although few of the guests were aware of that fact. As is always the case with gatherings held at the handsome home of this estimable couple, the event was a most pleasing social success. Eight tables were occupied by the guests, who entered into the enjoyment of the game with keen pleasure and anticipation of big scores. At the finish of the card playing prizes were awarded to Dr. and Mrs. Philip Hammond, Mrs. Moody and Mrs. Theo. P. Wilson.

Throughout the evening refreshments were served, and it was not until nearly the stroke of twelve that the guests took their departure.

DISPLAY THE FLAG.

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

Why is it that our national colors are displayed on all the school houses in town except our handsomest building—the High. I am one who likes to see our flag displayed, and wish that more was made of this than there now is, but I have noticed that while the other schools display their flags, the High does not. Is it because it does not have a flag?

PATRIOTIC.

MELVIN M. JOHNSON
Who is a promising candidate for District Attorney for Middlesex County.

The Mayor of Waltham, President and all Republican members of the Board of Aldermen, members of Republican City Committee, heads of city departments, bank officers, other present and past city officials and representatives have issued the following appeal to Middlesex County:

We, Republicans of Waltham, beg to present for your consideration as a candidate for District Attorney of our County, MELVIN M. JOHNSON, of this City. Born in Waltham in 1871, he attended our public schools, was graduated by Tufts College in 1892, and after a year's study in a law office, and two years at Boston University Law School, he received his degree with highest honors.

Mr. Johnson was admitted to the Massachusetts Bar in 1895 and practised law with his father until four years ago, when he became a member of the Boston firm of Rogers, North & Johnson. He is now a practising attorney before the Bar of the United States Courts for the Districts of Massachusetts and Connecticut and the United States Supreme Court. He is one of the charter members of the Middlesex Bar Association. Mr. Johnson has long been retained in various important and intricate matters of public interest.

In our City, Mr. Johnson has been a member of the School Committee and Trustee of the Public Library.

We know Mr. Johnson to be a man of sterling character, brilliant attainments and of proved ability as a trial lawyer, and we believe him to be well fitted for the position of District Attorney. Many lawyers living and practising in our County have unqualifiedly endorsed his candidacy for this position, among whom are the Hon. George L. Mayberry, the Hon. Samuel J. Elder, the Hon. Charles Q. Tirrell, the Hon. Samuel K. Hamilton, President of the Middlesex Bar Association, and many others of no less standing at the Bar.

We believe the position of District Attorney to be one which demands a thorough knowledge of the law, ability to try cases, sound discretion and tact; that the office should be used for the enforcement of the law in the interest of no particular person, but of the people, and we, therefore, present for your earnest consideration a successful lawyer qualified by experience and professional skill—MELVIN M. JOHNSON—and believe that his election would reflect honor upon the County and upon himself.

SELECTMEN'S MEETING.

September 16th, 1907.

Board met at 7:30 p. m.

All present.
Voted to write Mrs. Fannie P. Rust in answer to her communication, that cost to her for a concrete walk as asked for, would be $27.00 and on deposit of that amount the Board would order the work done.

Voted that the Supt. of Streets be instructed to lay a 30 foot curbing and a concrete sidewalk in front of C. H. Symmes' grain mill on Main street, he paying one half the cost.

Voted that the Supt. of Streets be instructed to place a catch basin in front of Richburg's store on Main street, and also one on Walnut street between the Boulevard and the railroad tracks.

Received application for a common victuallers license from Mrs. Katherine Thurston, at the Tremont House, so-called, on Main street. Referred to the Chief of Police to report.

Voted to write the Boston & Northern St. Ry. Company and request them to repair and relay the switch in front of the Baptist Church on Washington street as soon as possible.

Warrants drawn for $954.43 and $1077.39.

Adjourned at 10:40 p. m.

G. H. LOCHMAN, Clerk.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY.

A promising candidate for District Attorney for Middlesex County is Melvin M. Johnson, Esq., of Waltham. He has all the qualifications for the successful administration of the affairs of this office and is considered one of the strongest candidates mentioned. He has the unqualified endorsement of our townsman, Hon. Samuel J. Elder, in addition to all the prominent men of Waltham, and many members of the bar of Middlesex County.

TO CAMP IN MAINE.

Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin T. Morgan left Winchester this week on a camping trip in Maine with a party of friends. They will make their headquarters near Bangor.

DEATH OF MRS.

J. C. STANTON.

Mrs. Sarah Symmes Stanton, widow of the late Jacob C. Stanton, passed away at her home on Main street Friday evening after an illness covering many weeks. She was 67 years of age. For the past year she had been in poor health, being confined to her bed for six weeks prior to her death, which was due to bright's disease.

Mrs. Stanton was a daughter of Edmund A. and Elizabeth A. Symmes being born in this town in the old homestead, which stood at Symmes Corner between Bacon and Grove streets. Her life was spent in Winchester. She was married to Mr. Stanton in Dec. 26, 1864. He died about five years ago and was for many years previous to his death the leading grocer in this town. Mrs. Stanton left no children. A nephew, Harry P. Ayer of Newton Highlands, and two nieces, Mrs. J. E. Holway of Spring Hill and Miss Minnie G. Dunbar of this town, survive her.

Funeral services were held from her late home on Main street on Monday afternoon, attended by a large number of the old residents who were warm friends of the deceased. The service was conducted by Rev. William I. Lawrence of the Unitarian church. The selections, "Lead Kindly Light," "Eternal Goodness" and "Little by Little," were sung by the Mendelssohn Quartette of Boston. The burial was in Wildwood. Many handsome floral tributes testified to the esteem in which Mrs. Stanton was held by her large circle of friends.

BOWLING SEASON OPENS.

The bowling season will open at the Calumet Club on Saturday evening, when a tournament for two men will be held from 2 in the afternoon until midnight. The highest three string total of the teams entered—which will be made up of two men—will capture the prize. Prizes are also offered for the two next best totals.

The winter tournament will begin this year about the 14th of October, or possibly sooner, and a large entry is anticipated.

A ten day individual tournament will begin at the club on Sept. 25th, continuing until Oct. 5th when there will be a roll off between the five highest men in two classes—A and B. These classes are—A, all rated over 88, and B, all rated under 88, the ratings being taken from the averages in the last tournament. Prizes in cigars and bowling tickets are offered to the winner in each class to the extent of 50 per cent of the entrance money, this fee to be 25c a man. The prizes will be for the highest selected three strings.

The club has not yet decided to enter a team in the Boston Pin League, but the captaincy of such a team has been offered to Dr. H. J. Olmsted, who is to look over the material which the club offers for such a team and report on the matter.

A new innovation in bowling has been proposed for the coming season. This is holding a night of mixed bowling at the club once every two weeks, when both ladies and gentlemen may bowl. This has proved very successful in other clubs and will doubtless meet with approval by many members. The exact nature of the bowling on these evenings is yet to be determined.

FUNERAL OF GEORGE

A. GUERNSEY.

The funeral services of the late George A. Guernsey, whose death occurred last week Wednesday, were held from his home on Eaton street on Saturday afternoon, being largely attended by friends and relatives. The services were conducted by Rev. John A. Chaffee of the Methodist church, assisted by Dr. Charles F. Rice of Newton, presiding elder of the district.

During the services the selections "Face to Face," and "Home of the Soul," were sung by Miss Daisy MacLellan. The honorary bearers were Messrs. Thomas Morris, John N. Mason, Edward L. Dunning and Robert M. Armstrong. The floral tributes were abundant and beautiful, pieces being sent by the official board and Epworth League of the Methodist church. The remains were laid at rest in Wildwood cemetery.

MRS. ELIZABETH HUDSON.

Mrs. Elizabeth Hudson of Irving street died at the Homeopathic Hospital, Boston, Wednesday. Three weeks ago she received a bad fall at her home injuring her hip and receiving other injuries. She was 55 years of age and leaves besides her husband, Edward, ten children—six sons, John T., William G., Edward, James, Albert and Walter, and four daughters, Mrs. Ellen Squires of Providence, R. I., Mrs. Annie Farlow of Toronto, and Lucy and Mary of this town. She was born in Newfoundland. The interment will be at the Holy Cross Cemetery, Sunday at 1:30 p. m.

HORSE RAN AWAY.

Last Saturday forenoon a horse attached to a democrat wagon, driven by Austin Hawes, son of D. W. Hawes of Stevens street ran away, and after smashing the wagon and a blind on a house went into the woods on the west side of the town, not being captured until Monday. Austin Hawes was driving the team down Mr. Vernon street when the horse stumbled and fell. The boy and a companion jumped out, but before they could reach the animals head he had gained his feet and bolted. He ran across the lawn in front of H. J. Shattuck's estate the team colliding with the side of L. W. Ham's house, wrecking the wagon and also a blind on the house. Freed from the wagon the horse ran down through the centre and over Church street being finally lost track of on Andrews hill, where he was caught Monday by two boys. The animal was somewhat cut and lamed by his run. Considerable excitement was caused through the centre of the town by the runaway and it was fortunate that no one was injured.

ENTERTAINED WITH PICNIC.

Mrs. Louis Claffin entertained a company of ladies from Stoneham at her pleasant home on Reservoir street last Monday afternoon.

The party, eleven in number, arrived soon after ten o'clock, and after depositing their lunch baskets in the house, took their seats on the lawn overlooking the quiet waters of the reservoir. It was an unusually sultry day, and the occasional breeze which was vouchsafed them was thoroughly appreciated by the ladies who were weary with their walk up the hill from the electric.

At noon time a basket luncheon was served, coffee for the same being thoughtfully provided by the hostess.

During the afternoon an entertainment, consisting of readings, and vocal and instrumental solos, was furnished by some of the ladies present, and much enjoyed.

At six o'clock the company left for their homes, thanking Mrs. Claffin most heartily for her hospitality, and voting this the third annual picnic which had been held at her house, a great success.

MR. PARKHURST A STRONG CANDIDATE.

EDITOR OF THE STAR:
I quite agree with "Observations" who, though a Democrat, voice the sentiment of practically all the citizens, independent of party lines, that Mr. Parkhurst is the strongest possible candidate that can be nominated for Representative to the General Court. His well known interest in everything that pertains to Winchester, and his broad way of looking at all matters of public interest has proven his fitness to properly represent us in the Legislature and he certainly would be a credit to the town.

INDEPENDENT VOTER.

MUSIC AT THE UNITARIAN CHURCH.

At the Unitarian Church Sunday the music will be:

Organ Andante Cantabile Widor
Anthem "From every earthly pleasure," Shelley
Quartette, "Lighten our darkness," Tuckerman
Trio "The wings of Morning," Scott
Miss Cole, Mr. Hodsdon and Mr. Shufelt
Organ Postlude in D Tours

PUBLIC BEQUESTS.

By the will of the late Mrs. Sarah S. Stanton, died in the Probate Court yesterday, one thousand dollars is given to the Winchester Unitarian Society, to be held as a permanent fund, in memory of her deceased husband, the late Jacob C. Stanton, the income of the fund to be expended in providing flowers for the regular services of that church. Five hundred dollars is given to the Home for Aged People in Winchester.

JOYCE—SMITHERMAN.

George Henry Joyce and Johanna Theresa Smitherman, both of this town, were united in marriage on Tuesday evening by Fr. Roach at the parochial residence.

The bridesmaid was Miss Carrie L. Smitherman, sister of the bride. Mr. Albert A. Joyce was best man. The bride was gowned in blue silk and carried bride roses. The bridesmaid wore pink silk.

DANCING THIS WINTER.

The coming season promises to be an active one in dancing circles in town and we are able to announce that Miss Martha E. Langley of Newton will be in Winchester this winter for both social and aesthetic dancing. This will be pleasing news to many dancers. 513,2W

McCALL NOT AFRAID TO SPEAK OUT.

Massachusetts men, irrespective of party, who have a hope of a country of the future stronger, broader and more rational than ever must feel proud of the speech which Cong. McCall delivered at the Marshfield fair. No one has ever charged Mr. McCall with being an emissary of the money devil, and if he has bent the knee to any power in defiance of his own judgment it has not yet reached the public ear. He has had to fight for his modest competency. He has no retainers from great corporations and has no desire for them. Alone amid the entire Massachusetts congressional delegation he has kept close to earth during the agitations of the past two years, and he has gained strength by doing it. Two years ago when the railroad rate bill was frisked through congress he was one of a very few men who stood forth and denounced the measure. He held that the Elkins law and the Sherman anti-trust law were sufficient for all needs; that the rate bill was a socialistic move and that the next step would be the ownership of railroads. He was howled at then as a prophet of disaster, but he had the courage to come back to his district and campaign over it without a word of apology for the position which he had taken. All that he prophesied has come true, for now the country is involved in financial distress which bears out his every word. In his recent Marshfield speech there was no gloating, for McCall is too big a man to be led into any practice of that sort, but he calmly, and with a precision which carries conviction, sounded the warning to the people that this is too great a country to be imagined in any one man, and that dangers are ahead. It is not a far guess that he feels that the dangers of one man, drunk with power by reason of the extension of executive influence, is pretty near the state existing now. Cong. McCall, by reason of this speech, and despite his rather curious company, comes very near being the biggest republican candidate for the governorship who has lifted his voice in a good many months.

Mr. McCall said in part: "One of the United States judges has just imposed a fine of such proportions that it allies itself with the tribute which a victorious nation imposes upon a vanquished one, a fine that probably is not greatly exceeded by the aggregate of all other fines imposed by our federal courts since establishment of the government. The offense was the receiving of a discriminating rate from a railroad company. Whether the fine was right or wrong or whether an ordinary shipper would have been even subjected to prosecution upon the exact facts of this case I shall not argue."

"As Mr. Bonaparte is not engaged in sinking the Constitution this year, but announces that he is after 'game,' he might be willing to take whatever came. But I alluded to the matter simply for the purpose of calling your attention to our railroad legislation."—[Practical Politics.]

THE MASS. SAVINGS INSURANCE LEAGUE.

This autumn the activities of the Massachusetts Savings Insurance League, of which many Winchester residents are members, will recommence. Despite the successful termination of the campaign of last spring, which resulted in the passage by the Massachusetts Legislature of the bill presented by Representative Norman H. White, the work of the Savings Insurance League is only partially accomplished. As savings insurance is a new thing it will probably for some time be necessary to keep people apprised of its practical advantages; though, no doubt, those savings banks which first establish insurance departments will present their proposition to the public in the customary way through display advertising.

The stock argument against the project during the period of agitation was that while the facts regarding the costliness of industrial life insurance, under the present system, are undeniable, average people will not take the trouble themselves to insure their lives or purchase annuities as a form of old age pensions unless they are talked by persuasive solicitors into so doing. Those who believe in Mr. Brandeis' plan think this argument has already been weakened by the evidence of great public interest which were shown last winter and spring when more than 100,000 citizens enrolled themselves as members of the Massachusetts Savings Insurance League. To keep this interest alive in order that there may be special incentive for savings bank trustees to consider the advisability of establishing departments of insurance is a main reason for the continued activity of the league. Once the savings insurance system has been firmly established it is expected that popular interest will be kept alive by the obvious benefits received by individuals—in just such a way as the savings banks have never lost favor since first these institutions proved themselves successful.

The seven trustees of the General Insurance Guaranty Fund who were appointed by Governor Guild in July will shortly appoint a state actuary, a state medical director, and make other arrangements in order that savings banks wishing to avail themselves of the privileges of the new law, which becomes operative next November, may find the comparatively simply machinery in readiness. Mr. White, who has completed his first term as a Representative from Brookline in the Legislature, will continue to be secretary and treasurer of the Massachusetts Savings Insurance League, whose headquarters are at 2 A Park street, Boston.

GOV. JOHN JOHNSON OF MINNESOTA, HENRY WATTERSON'S "DARK HORSE"

The October American Magazine prints the whole romantic story of this man, whom Colonel Watterson compares with Abraham Lincoln. He was elected governor by 72,000—the first Democrat who ever won in Minnesota. His father was a drunkard, and his good mother was a washerwoman.

W. C. T. U. NOTES.

At the meeting of the W. C. T. U. Friday the following persons were appointed delegates to the Middlesex Co. annual convention to meet in the Baptist Church Malden, Thursday, Sept. 26, at 10 a. m.: Mrs. E. Oliver, Mrs. G. M. Hamilton, Mrs. L. L. Blood, Mrs. A. Polley, Mrs. H. N. Hovey, Miss E. M. Elliott, Mrs. F. E. Rowe, Mrs. Nickelson. The state annual convention is to be in Salem Oct. 22 to 24. Mrs. H. N. Hovey was chosen delegate, Mrs. A. A. Rowe alternate.

From "World Wide Glimpses" given by Louise C. Purrington, M. D., World's superintendent of the department of Co-operation with Missionary Societies we give one of the many interesting items.

"A significant event of 1907 in this country has been a conference at Pittsburgh of 100 church leaders from twelve different states, representing sixteen great denominations and 15,000,000 members, to discuss united endeavor against the liquor traffic and to plan an aggressive movement. The sentiment of the conference was that which Senator Henry Blair voiced when he said, years ago, that when the churches unite against the saloon and give their gifts to support the work, as for missionary and other objects, the liquor traffic is doomed."

In regard to Africa it was testified at Northfield that the American missionaries in Africa without known exception are total abstainers from alcoholic drinks and their mission churches stand solidly opposed to them. But this is where the danger is, when the gospel goes the vices of civilization go also. Trade and greed of gain are responsible for the devastation of rum and gin in Africa. This is true of every port of entry, but is "tenfold more a scourge in Africa where the races are undeveloped and wanting in restraint."

Anarchy Pure and Simple.

What would be the final result if Judge Dewey's new rules of upholding the unwritten law should prevail other than anarchy pure and simple. No man's life would be safe if he fell under suspicion of evil doing to his neighbor and his family. Better enforce the law as it is than to offer an opening for the god of misrule to enter the ring and make life as cheap as it was during the reign of the Commune in France, when blood flowed as free as water. We want no such experiences as that in our country. Let the law against murder and crime stand as it is, but be sure that it is enforced everytime, and the people will be satisfied.

Sentiment Don't Count.

Of what use is it for the state of Massachusetts women to collect funds for the rebuilding of the Constitution only to have the naval authorities take possession of her and move her out of the state.

The people might just as well have allowed Mr. Bonaparte to have had his way when he was going to use the old frigate for a target a few years ago. She belongs to Massachusetts, and here she should stay, but in all probability the Constitution will ultimately be taken to Annapolis, protest or no protest from the State. Sentiment don't count, apparently, nor the fact that Massachusetts is the birthplace of the old frigate.

A CUMBERSOME CODE.

A new discovery has been made in our election laws. The county convention cannot nominate a district attorney, in Middlesex, but a separate convention must be held for that purpose. Suppose somebody should now raise the point that District Attorney Sanderson was not legally elected, because he was nominated by the county convention? Well, he is a judge now and doesn't care. Undoubtedly a lot of other illegal things have been done under our election laws, which are more cumbersome and less understandable than any other election code ever framed.—[Cambridge Chronicle.]

WILLIAM COLLIER AT THE PARK THEATRE.

Boston, Sept. 17—You must see William Collier, the foremost comedian of the day, in his new play "Caught in the Rain" at the Park Theatre. I saw him last night and I am not through laughing yet. Funny? Simply the funniest ever. I suppose you know that "Caught in the Rain," which by the way was written by Mr. Collier and Grant Stewart, ran all last season at the Garrick Theatre in New York. It could run all the season here in my humble opinion. Mr. Collier is simply inimitable.

What I especially liked about "Caught in the Rain" was its clean, wholesome fun. You should see the real rain storm in the first act. I felt like stepping up on the stage and lending the loving couple my umbrella. How do they do it? It is simply marvelous. Take my advice, see "Caught in the Rain" at once. It will cure the blues and you will agree with me that Collier is simply captivating.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portions of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed, you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and the tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces. A LESSON IN LAW.

Several Things the Philadelphia Drummer Didn't Know.

"Most of us think we know the law pretty well," said the Philadelphia drummer, "but I had a little experience to show me that there are several things in the statute books that I don't know. I was in a New England town and dropped into a barber shop to get shaved. There was only one barber, and he didn't look as if he knew putty. He turned out to be a pretty good shaver, however, and as I had had a drink just before entering the shop I fell asleep in the chair. I slept for half an hour, and when I awoke he was through with me. The first thing I missed on getting out of the chair was my roll of money, next my watch, next my overcoat, next and lastly my scarfpin. I went for that barber for all I was worth, but he denied robbing me, and his face wore a smile. Then I got a gait on me and went to a lawyer's office.

"Can you prove by a credible witness that you had $50 in cash when you entered the barber shop?" he asked.

"I couldn't."

"Can you prove that your watch was taken in the shop instead of being lost on the street?"

"I couldn't."

"Are you sure that you had your pin on as you opened the door to enter?"

"I wasn't."

"As to your overcoat," continued the lawyer, "have you a bill of sale of it, or was any one with you when you bought it? In other words, can you swear to the ownership in law of any particular overcoat?"

"I couldn't."

"Then I can do nothing for you," he said, and I went to a second lawyer to be told the same thing. I had left the shop without paying for my shave, and I was even told that the barber could arrest me for beating him out of 15 cents and have me fined $5. I believe I can quote Shakespeare correctly and distinguish between tea and sugar, but when it comes down to the law I am not in it. It's too kinky."—Rochester Democrat and Chronicle

A PRIVATE DENTIST.

One Luxury This Man Will Have When He Gets Rich.

"If ever I get really rich," said the man with a toothache, "I shall have a private dentist. What do I want of a private dentist? Well, I'll tell you.

"It's bad enough anyway to suffer from your teeth, but to me this suffering is made doubly distressing by the circumstances attendant upon my visit to the dentist's office.

"I arrive there to find the dentist working away upon the teeth of some patient in his chair, and that always sort of disturbs me—to find somebody else being worked over and cared for while I wait in distress. I think I am entitled to all the care and sympathy. And maybe I find somebody else waiting, perhaps a friend of the person in the chair, or somebody waiting his turn, come ahead of time, and that disturbs me, for I like to wait with my pain in solitude.

"But the dentist gets through with the patient in the chair on time for me, and I take my place under his hands. And I don't doubt that I get his concentrated and complete attention and skill while he is operating upon me, but I can't get away from the idea that he is working as rapidly as he can so as to be ready for the next patient.

"And then, with all my pain, I can't forget either that person in the waiting room waiting his turn after me, and waiting without a particle of sympathy for me, and, in fact, rather impatient of my presence and thinking of himself alone. This is rather wounding to my self esteem.

"In fact, however I regard it, a visit to the dentist's office is always a jarring experience. My dentist is a man of the highest professional skill, and, as I said, I am sure I get his best care, but still all these familiar things that I have mentioned to you jar me, and I would avoid them all if I could. So when I get real rich I shall certainly have a private dentist."—Washington Post

Samuel Warren's Vanity.

The vanity of Samuel Warren, the author of "Ten Thousand a Year," in his early years of authorship at least, was remarkable, and there is a story told of him to the effect that on one occasion at a friend's house he had to take down to dinner a lady whom he had not met before, and as soon as they were seated at table asked her if she had ever heard of Samuel Warren. "Oh, certainly," was the reply. "My husband prefers Warren's blacking to any other. We always use it."—Westminster Gazette.

Music and Digestion.

I have often spooned up my soup to wait time and carved a steak, while "Waiting at the Church" appropriately symbolized my vexation at the delay of the waiter in bringing the table sauce. But perhaps the most thrilling experience is to eat a mutton chop to the foreword song from "Carmen." That even rivals eating squash pie and cheese to Liszt's "Second Hungarian Rhapsody." There are two gastro harmonic combinations I have not yet met with, however, but which I live in hopes of meeting, as a climax to my musical career. One is to eat roast goose to the waltz of "Parsifal," the other to find honey and the dance of Salome from the Strauss opera in happy conjunction. Somehow I could take a grim sort of satisfaction in the irony of these combinations. But I am still waiting.—Atlantic.

A Waitress Too Optimistic.

"A mistake was made when I ate at this place five years ago," said a man to the waitress at the lunch counter in the Union depot.

"Suppose I gave you too much money in making change," said the young woman.

"No, that's not the trouble. I was short 20 cents."

"Well, I wasn't here five years ago," she snapped as she left to wait on another customer.—Kansas City Star.

BOSTON LETTER

Bartlett and Whitney Spending Much Money In Contest

FIGHT IS EXTREMELY WARM

Finance Commission Opening Up Big Stealing In City Hall Investigation—
Terror Reigns Among the Looters

The political situation as it exists today in this commonwealth is extremely interesting. No one who is not right in the midst of the fray realizes the tremendous fight which is being made for the Democratic nomination for governor nor the enormous amount of money which is being spent to secure it. Both sides are spending it in liberal quantities.

The Bartlett men have thus far been able to secure enough money for the legitimate purposes of the campaign, but they confess themselves swamped in the effort to keep up with the Whitney people, and they say their only fear is that at the last moment there will be such an opening up of campaign funds by the Whitney push as will engulf them.

It is common talk among politicians that seldom if ever before in this state has money been spent with such utter disregard for the aggregate expense as in this present contest. Banquets have been held all over the commonwealth where Democrats in general were welcome to feed without money and without price. The Bartlett men believe that Mr. Whitney intends to have the nomination, no matter what the expense. They do not intend to let him get it, if they can defeat his purpose. Both sides have many canvassers at work all over the state at great expense.

Mr. Whitney usually starts out with the intention of winning. He did that when he undertook to put an elevated railway bill through the legislature 15 years ago, and a little later, when he undertook to secure the passage of a pipe line gas bill. The cost was enormous, and the ruin of reputations was widespread.

Whitney in the Lead

The situation today may be said to favor Mr. Whitney. If it were a square fight between two men, his friends say General Bartlett would win by a decided vote.

That is an interesting joint debate which is at present being conducted on separate platforms between George Fred Williams and Henry M. Whitney. Mr. Whitney is something of a campaigner. He is not a particularly interesting speaker, but he makes a plausible argument, and impresses his hearers as being honest and sincere. Mr. Williams presents a fine appearance on the stump, is an eloquent speaker, and has a fine voice. Nobody who knows him intimately doubts his honesty of purpose and his personal integrity.

No man ever had a greater opportunity politically or made less of it than George Fred Williams. His inordinate vanity and love of flattery have alienated him from most of the old leaders, and he is now a man almost without a following. What he says about Mr. Whitney appeals to many, however, and he is doing a public service in stating the facts, although it may possibly add still further to his political undoing.

Canada Careless About Treaty

A number of gentlemen who have been touring the Dominion of Canada returned with very distinct impressions that the Canadians do not care for reciprocity with the United States. They are perfectly satisfied to go along in the way they are now proceeding, and sell their products in the best market, and buy in the best.

These impressions are borne out by the report in the "Iron Age" of Sept. 12 of Mr. Whitney's visit to the Canadian National Exhibition at Toronto. The "Iron Age" says Mr. Whitney was one of the guests of the exhibition at a luncheon of its directors, and that he made a short speech on his favorite subject of reciprocity between the United States and Canada. The "Iron Age" adds that, "as some notice had been given that he proposed to speak in favor of reciprocity, the president of the exhibition took the opportunity to say, by way of introducing Mr. Whitney, that there was no longer a desire in Canada for reciprocity with the United States. The remarks of Mr. Whitney did not appear to make a strong impression on the party, a company representing varied interests, at this luncheon."

Probers Make Boston Busy

When John F. Fitzgerald was a candidate for mayor of Boston, he promised to make it "bigger, better and busier." Since he got in, the city debt is very much bigger, the pickings for the grafters have been very much better, and the thieves and looters have been so busy as to make the tax payers groan under the added burdens.

But the mayor is reported to be "astounded" at the revelations which the finance commission is making as to the thieving which is going on in the city departments of Boston. He says he knew nothing about it, notwithstanding the fact in regard to the coal scandal that it was he who gave Mitchell authority to buy without competition or bids in every instance.

He was elected mayor over a man about whose honesty there never was

Crawford

Cooking-Ranges

What Our NEW TYPE of Range Means

Maintaining the Crawford reputation for progress, we have constructed a new type of range which is better than even our heretofore best. In this new design the useless and awkward End Hearth is omitted. The ashes are disposed of by falling into a HOD far below the fire, which makes their removal easier and the grates to last longer. The Coal and Ash Hods are side by side, of the same size, and the Ash Hod being emptied can be returned full of coal. There is also more room on top of these ranges. The "Palace" is extra large size and the "Castle" smaller.

All the famous Crawford features are present: Single Damper, Patented Grate, Cup-Joint Oven Flues, Asbestos-Backed Oven, Improved Oven Indicator. Send for our booklet.

Coal. COAL. Coal.

Many of our customers are now taking in their next winter's supply of coal. We believe it wise for those who can to do so, as prices are as low as they will be this year. From past experience, we are lead to believe that we cannot always procure a sufficient supply. By placing your order early you are insured.

the slightest question, and entered upon his career of office loudly proclaiming his intention to be a credit to himself, to his friends, and his party. He has yet to win any enduring credit. Today his administration is in disrepute. Scandals have been unearthed greater than any which have disgraced the city in more than a quarter of a century, if not in its history, and the probing has scarcely begun.

It would look as if the mayor were so thoroughly discredited that he could never hope to succeed politically again, but he is not a man to get out when crookedness is shown.

City Hall Is Scared?

There are other departments in the city of Boston beside that which has charge of the purchase of coal, and those who claim to be in a position to know say that the deepest scandal is still to be uncovered. There is no doubt that consternation reigns at city hall. Many there see plainly the handwriting on the wall and understand what it means. Every year the city is robbed of millions, and it goes into the pockets of grafters, high and low, and some of them, when brought to the witness stand, will tell what they know. Evidence has been placed in the hands of the finance commission which will cause a tremendous sensation when it is forthcoming.

Canned Paintings.

Painting under glass may now be preserved indefinitely. Had the man of old known this the pictures of Apelles might still live in the first freshness of their colors, and the work of Raphael and Michael Angelo would look today as it looked when it left the painters' hands. The method of preservation is simple. The canvas is placed in a vacuum. It is preserved, like fruit. It is sealed up from all the destructive influences of the atmosphere. Since metal figures in the operation the canvas might indeed be said to be canned. There is no reason why paintings kept in this manner in a vacuum should not endure indefinitely.

The soothing spray of Ely's Liquid Creams Balm, used in an atomizer, is an unspeakable relief to sufferers from Catarrh. Some of them describe it as a Godsend, and no wonder. The thick, foul discharge is dislodged and the patient breathes freely, perhaps for the first time in weeks. Liquid Cream Balm contains all the healing, purifying elements of the solid form, and it never fails to cure. Sold by all druggists for 50c, including spraying tube, or mailed by Ely Bros., 36 Warren Street, New York.

Building Quiet.

Because of the increased prices of material and labor, there is but little building being done in Winchester. This does not apply solely to this town, but to all places. Rents have not kept pace with the advance, and consequently those having money to invest in new houses prefer to put their money in other channels. Because of the increased expense of building there is beginning to be a scarcity of houses in town.

Street Work in Stoneham.

Stoneham men have been laying a piece of sewer work on Franklin street, that town, since early last spring. The amount of work done since first commenced is ridiculously small, only about a few hundred feet, and must be costing the town a mint of money. The most objectionable feature is that electric car passengers during all that time have been obliged to change cars and walk a distance of about one quarter of a mile. Boston evidently can't beat this for slowness and a complete disregard for the comfort of the travelling public.

Ballots at Caucuses.

The Republic Town Committee in their call for the caucus to be held Tuesday evening, Sept. 24, have inserted a clause, "To see if the provisions of the law for the use of ballots at future caucuses shall be adopted." In those towns that have adopted this law, its workings have been found very satisfactory. It removes all complaints of "packed caucuses," and all aspiring to become delegates to conventions are given an equal opportunity. This form of ballot has been in successful operation for several years at the citizens' caucus for the nomination of town officers, and its adoption has not only removed many causes for bad feeling, but has been the means of bringing out a larger attendance. It will no doubt do the same for the caucus of the Republicans, and also for the Democrats if they should agree to it. Any system that will bring out a large attendance of voters is to be commended.

But Little Interest.

There appears to be not the least interest in the approaching Republican Caucus. Mr. Lewis Parkhurst will, without a doubt, be the nominee for Representative, as there seems to be no opposition to him whatever. There is about as much interest being shown in the Democratic caucus to be held this evening. The only question that is likely to arise is over delegates to the State Convention, but every indication points to the selection of men favorable to Mr. Whitney as the gubernatorial candidate. More interest should be manifested in the caucus for the selection of delegates to the various conventions, but this will hardly take place until the time comes when this town forms a Representative district of its own. Then there will be considerable rivalry and this will bring out the voters.

OBSERVATIONS.

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

The only poor looking thing in our cemetery is the bird in the little pond, and it ought to have a new coat, as it evidently has not moulted for many moons.

Our grade crossing abolition, which looked like such clear sailing at one time, has run against several complications. Two of the largest property owners have died and another is too sick to transact any business. These happenings will delay the matter a good deal, unless the railroad is willing to go ahead and let damages go to court.

Under proper restrictions the trolley freight and baggage service will be a good thing, and as it will always be subject to changes as conditions arise, there is no sense in any place opposing it. Undoubtedly it will brace up the steam roads service, which is sadly needed.

It is frequently said that Labor Day closes the season, but Revere beach last Sunday did not look much like it, with the largest crowd of the season. It is too bad that the Metropolitan Park board does not provide more attractions.

The suggestion in last week's STAR that water meter rates should be the same as the fixture rates of each house would not be an equitable way to sell water any more than fixture rates is, because the number of fixtures in a house does not show how much water is used and a meter shows just that and the charge is not for fixtures but for water. It is also well known that far more water is used through the first faucet than through any other fixture, perhaps more than all the others. Perhaps the minimum with a meter should be less than ten dollars a year however.

I hope the work now going on of repairing the macadam streets will be continued until all the bad places are evened up, as in no way can the money be spent to better advantage on the streets. All the side hill streets should be rounded up to prevent further gullying next winter. Some of the sidewalks are very rough and uncomfortable to walk upon and should have the sharp stones picked out and be resurfaced. Those on Washington street from Dunham to Lebanon are very bad.

Railroad horrors continue because life is so cheap. It is the cheapest thing in this country, and even in Winchester none of the property owners will do anything to help along the abolishment of the grade crossing, although they know the present crossing will kill one or two people every year. Safeguards of many kinds also which are in use abroad are not used here because it is cheaper to pay for those killed and injured, and very few care. Our legislature did however increase the penalty on railroads and railways for killing people from five to ten thousand dollars this year after many years fight.

With the serious damage to macadam streets caused by automobiles, towns should consider using the street railway watering car. In our town we could cover most of the main streets that way and keeping them wet would prevent any damage from the autos and also make the streets more comfortable from being free of dust. This question should be brought before the town at the annual meeting. The street railway and the abutments ought to pay a part of the cost perhaps.

Some true stories—A member of a jury which was discussing a case in its room pending its decision, said he did not see any sense in talking any more about it as the judge said the evidence was prima facie and that settled it. A juror in a case where one side had brought some copper retorts into the court room, said he supposed the other side would furnish the retorts, whereupon a fellow juror said if they were we would have to try the case out of doors to have room enough. A girl about twelve years old was a witness in a case before Judge Sherman and it was very plain she was lying. She continuously chewed something and finally the judge said, "Sis what are you chewing?" "Gum," came the answer. "Take it out," said the judge, "and perhaps you can tell the truth better."

PARISH OF THE EPIPHANY.

The Sunday School resumes its sessions next Sunday at the usual hour. It is hoped that all teachers and scholars will be in their places, to take up promptly the work of the new year.

TIME FOR STUDY

AND SLEEP.

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

In his address last June to the graduating class of the Wadleigh School Mr. Metcalf spoke on the desirability of the pupils entering the High School this September having a regular time set apart by the parents for home preparation of lessons. The accompanying article seems to make much of the value of proper sleep and should be taken into consideration in following out the suggestions of Mr. Metcalf, and I would ask you to publish it if you can spare the space.

Yours very truly,

F. E. ROWE.

Mothers know that the new-born infant must sleep about twenty-two hours, and that this amount is so slowly lessened that the child still demands twelve hours when it is about 12 years old. It is quite likely that the normal amount is not reduced to ten hours until about 18 years of age, or perhaps until 25 years. Nine hours may be required until well along in years.

To let boys of 14 sit up until 10 o'clock and then rout them out at 6, is nothing short of criminal, but it is a long established custom. Lower animals can be quickly killed by depriving them of sleep—the boy is not killed, but, perhaps he is so exhausted that he loses resistance to disease.

Medical students not infrequently make the same mistake, forgetting that a tired brain never absorbs anything. The midnight oil frequently represents wasted time and money, and the student sleeps during the next day's lectures when he should be wide awake.

A good test of exhaustion is the tendency to sleep during a dry lecture—and this is no joke.

Experience has proved that those who retire in time to sleep at least nine hours, and occasionally ten, get far more out of the course than the "grinds." Some of the best men habitually take ten hours. Theoretically a student should be as fresh at the end of the term as at the beginning—the vacation is for another purpose than sleep.

The whole subject though very old, is so new to the laymen who do the damage to schoolboys, particularly in boarding schools, that there is urgent need of wider publicity and much discussion for enlightenment. Not only will proper sleep permit more to be gained for less effort but it will prevent the exhaustions which so frequently follow school courses.

Physicians might teach mothers that it is harmful to waken children in the morning naturally. If they are not in time for school they do not retire early enough. If they are sleepy-heads it is either the fault of the parents or the result of ocular defects.

There is much comment upon the large number of midshipmen who fail at the naval academy in a course not worse than in many colleges. It is suspected that they would do better if they had ten hours sleep daily.—[American Medicine.]

TREMONT THEATRE.

Klaw & Erlanger's advanced vaudeville has caught on mightily at the Tremont Theatre, where the audiences at every performance have been limited only by the capacity of the house. Everything has been to the very best and will continue to be, as is evidenced by the phenomenal list of entertainers who make up the great bill for the current week. Arthur Prince is the greatest ventriloquist the world has ever seen.

Grace Hazard in her "Five Feet of Comic Opera," the famous Perkin Zouaves, the best drilled corps in the world; Ed Blondell and company in "The Lost Boy"; the Four Lukens, casting acrobats; M. Desbroches and Mlle. Bianca; the Italian Trio; Rawson and June, experts with the boomerang; Clifton Crawford, in a most interesting monologue, both comic and serious, and a new lot of animated pictures especially selected for patrons of the Tremont Theatre. This, it can easily be seen is a remarkable bill, but Klaw and Erlanger promise even better for the week of the 23rd inst.

ORPHEUM THEATRE.

Great interest has been manifested among electricians over the announcement that Volta, the electrical marvel, is to be one of the features at the Orpheum next week. Volta absolutely defies the electrical fluid, and does some remarkable things on the stage. He is the man who created a sensation by going to Sing Sing and offering to sit in the death chair while the full current was turned on. Volta lights a gas jet with his tongue, welds iron with his both hands, and lights a handkerchief with flames from his hair, his body being charged with electricity. A feature of another kind, and of even greater importance, is the engagement of Edward Davis, the former clergyman, who will present one of the most remarkable one act tragedies ever written. It is called "The Unmasking," beautifully set in two scenes the last one of which shows Rosworth Field, with the duel scene between Richard and Richmond. Other features of this strong bill are Edward Clark and his "Winning Widows," Wells and Hassan, a remarkable team of acrobats: Paul La Croix; Montgomery and Moore; and a number of others, making what is unquestionably one of the strongest bills the Orpheum has ever presented.

FALL DISINFECTING.

Is there anything more important to the health of the family than putting the home in a perfectly sanitary condition for the coming winter? Sanitary cleanliness by which the process of bacteriologic life harmful to health, is arrested and overcome, is occupying a very prominent place in the up-to-date housekeeper's mind. A little Sulpho-Naphthol, one of the strongest bactericides known to science, in every pail of water used for cleaning, gives a condition of cleanliness and purity which is the highest point reached in home sanitation to-day. Sulpho-Naphthol has revolutionized modern ideas of house cleaning.

WIRE THEFTS.

A Serious Menace to all Users of Electricity.

Thefts of copper wire, which supplies electric current to this section, have become so numerous that the Edison Illuminating Company have decided to take stringent measures against the offenders. In the hope of securing evidence the Company is offering a reward of $5000 for information which will lead to their arrest and conviction. When seen by a representative of this paper regarding these thefts, Mr. W. H. Atkins General Superintendent of the Edison Illuminating Co., said:

"This matter of wire thefts has become a very serious one and the Edison Illuminating Company has decided a stop must be put to it. Within the last year 50,000 feet of wire has been stolen in the suburbs of Boston. The thieves work without any regard to the possible consequences and evidently do not care how serious the results might be.

"Suppose, for instance, a big fire were to break out in some locality just at the time the thieves had cut the wire. There would be no light either in the street or in the houses. In the street it might result in the fire apparatus colliding with trees, or poles, or vehicles that might happen to be in the street, and in the houses the inmates would be left in absolute darkness, at critical time, when light would be very essential to them. Worse still, supposing the wire thieves were to cut electric wire which furnishes light to either some hospital or some private residence, where a surgeon was performing some difficult and dangerous operation, where a moment's time or the slightest slip of a knife means life or death. How horrible it would be to have the light go out at that instant, leaving the surgeon in utter darkness, until other means of illumination could be obtained.

"Little do the thieves think or care of the danger and inconvenience which could and do result from these wire thefts, therefore, the Company, following out its usual policy in the care of its customers, have determined to put a stop to these wire thefts and the possibility of these occurrences, as far as lies within the Company's power.

"We propose to have no stone turned to stop the work of these miscreants, and in this connection we are offering a reward of $5000 for information that will lead to the arrest and conviction of these thieves. In return for the assistance in behalf of our customer, we would be pleased to have their co-operation as we know how valuable their assistance will be in this work and we would request that anyone, whether a customer or not, give us such immediate information should they see any men working along the wires whom they may have reason to believe are not authorized employees of the company, and in this connection it might be well to state that no person who sees men cutting wires need be afraid of making a mistake by notifying us. We would rather receive 999 false alarms and secure one true case than miss that single instance through a hesitance on the part of a householder to notify us for fear he could be making a mistake. There is also the possibility that by so notifying us the person may be the means of securing the arrest and conviction of the thieves and we would be only too glad to pay the reward we offer. Again the fact that by so helping us the suburbanites are protecting themselves leads us to confidentially rely on their assistance."

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

"Rigoletto" is a grand opera that is given in Boston all too infrequently. It never fails to receive the appreciation due all of the great Verdi's works, and it shares with "Il Trovatore" a place in the warm affection of music-lovers. Its revival at the Castle Square next week therefore bids fair to be an event of the season.

For the cast of "Rigoletto" Manager Masson has drawn discriminatingly upon the wide resources at his disposal. The role of Rigoletto, the jester, will be shared by J. K. Murray and Forrest Huff, while to the Duke of Mantua, Harry Davies and Henry Taylor have been assigned, and George Shields will have the bass role of Sparafucile, with all the other characters equally satisfactorily assigned. Following "Rigoletto" the week of Sept. 30th, Offenbach's famous comic opera "The Grand Duchess" will be given at the Castle Square.

ATTEMPTED HOLD-UP.

Early Tuesday morning an attempt was made to hold up a Winchester market wagon. Newell Purrington of 105 Cambridge street was attacked by two men near Oak Grove cemetery, on Winthrop street. Purrington was driving a load to market, and he was half asleep on his market wagon. He was aroused by a man jumping on to the team and endeavoring to strike him. Purrington grabbed the whip and beat him off with the butt of it. The fellow on the street took to his heels.

Old Glory Humiliated.

One instance is known in which Old Glory's shame is the crown of a family's prestige. At the battle of Bladensburg the American troops were defeated by the British under the command of an Irish officer named Ross. In recognition of his services in winning this victory his sovereign granted him the title of Ross of Bladensburg, and to his crest was added an American flag, reversed, with the shaft broken. The title is hereditary. In our generation the possessor is a colonel of the Irish fusiliers. And this Ross of Bladensburg uses as his crest today our stars and stripes turned upside down, reversed, with the shaft broken in two.—Chicago Record Herald.

Metallic Metaphors.

"It is most amazing," said a metallurgist, "how the world relies on metals for its metaphors and similes. Thus, an orator is silver-tongued or golden-mouthed. An explorer is bronzed by African suns. A resolute chap has an iron will. A sluggish moves with leaden feet. An ostrich has a copper-lined stomach. A millionaire has tin. A swindler is as slippery as quicksilver. A borrower has brass."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

The Rescue

By C. AUSTIN JOHNSON.

[Copyright, 1907, by C. Austin Johnson.]

So you would like to hear how I, a poor sailor, chanced to marry a pretty wife, possessed of thousands and without exception mistress of the finest estate in Santos? Well, come out on the piazza. We have a fine view of the bay there, and I love to listen to the roar of the surf. It reminds me of old times, you know. Light a fresh cigar. You have nothing like them in the states, I can assure you of that. And now for my yarn.

Many years ago I was chief mate on board of a down east brig engaged in the South American trade. The captain was good enough at heart, but he did love a gold dollar so much that the passion of avarice at times warped the better and prevailing instincts of his nature.

I was young, careless and free, without a soul living I could claim as kin, and as happy in my lone state as you can well imagine. I had but little responsibility on my shoulders, the skipper taking entire control, even to details.

We were to the southward of the line, outward bound, and upon the eventful night in question, which was truly an era in my life, I had the first watch. The wind was light and the ocean as calm as though asleep.

We had all our light kites set to woo the gentle breeze, running through the water not over three knots an hour. Absorbed in my own thoughts and reflections, I was leaning idly over the taffrail watching the bubbles and phosphorescent light playing about the restless rudder when a touch on my arm from the man at the wheel brought me to myself.

"What do you call that, sir?" he inquired, pointing over the quarter. I gazed in the direction pointed out by the man and, to my intense surprise, saw a bright light, not unlike a ball of fire, which threw a lurid, tremulous light across the dark waters.

"It can't be the moon, sir?" said the seaman, with an inquiring look.

"The moon rising in a quarter bearing south-southwest? No; that is some craft on fire as sure as my name is John Watkins, and I'll rouse out the captain at once."

In another instant I was rapping in no gentle manner at the skipper's stateroom, who turned out in a hurry.

"What-what is the matter?" he stammered, rubbing his eyes. "Is there a squall coming?"

"No, sir; it's as pretty a night as I ever saw. But, Captain Thompson, there is a vessel on fire to leeward of us, and I will, if you say so, run down to her assistance."

"I'll be on deck in a moment. Don't be in a hurry. Don't like to run the vessel off her course—prolongs her voyage." And, leaving the sleepy skipper grumbling to himself, I regained the deck.

In a few moments the old fellow was by my side.

"It will cost money to take all hands off your craft and feed them till we make a port."

"True, sir; but is human life to be reckoned or valued by money? In all probability there are poor fellows there in danger of their lives who, if we leave them to their fate, would place us on a footing with pirates." And, turning abruptly, I walked aft, having expressed my indignation in a voice tremulous with anger.

"WHAT DO YOU CALL THAT, SIR?" HE INQUIRED.

"Bless my soul, Mr. Watkins, I would not leave any one to perish. I was only calculating the chances in a commercial point of view. You can hoist the longboat out if you like and take four of the boys for a crew to pull you to her. She will burn down to the water's edge if you wait for us to get there. It is growing calmer all the time, and to tell the truth, Mr. Watkins, I would advise you to bear a hand and get back as soon as possible, for I don't like the looks of the weather. The air is hot and oppressive-like."

In ten minutes I had the longboat over the side, and a stout, weatherly craft she was too. A bag of biscuits, with a beaker of water, was stowed away in the stern sheets, and, bidding the lads to give way with a will, we shoved off from the sides of the old brig. I saw the tall, bent form of Captain Thompson peering down upon me for a moment, but the next instant the boat rose on the bosom of a swell, and that was the last I ever saw of my old skipper.

The brig quickly faded from sight, hid by a thin mist of haze which had suddenly arisen, and, in fact, I was conscious of a strange change in the appearance of the weather. The stars had entirely disappeared from the firmament, hid behind the gauzy veil which had so mysteriously arisen, and low down on the horizon I noted a dark bank of clouds. The heat was intense, the stout seamen wiping the perspiration from their streaming brows as they tolled at their oars. Not a breath of air disturbed the glassy waves. All nature appeared to be hushed into a terrible calm.

I must confess I felt rather apprehensive as I glanced about the horizon and looked back in the direction where I knew the old brig must be, rolling and pitching idly on the long swell, which every moment was increasing. But my fears and apprehensions were soon chased from my head by matters of more exciting interest.

As we neared the burning craft I read the name of La Hembrills in letters of gold on the huge stern. The light cast by the burning spars and rigging aloft afforded ample power for me to form my conclusions.

The ship was a Spaniard. The empty davits and dangling falls told their own story plain enough to a seaman's eye.

The burning wreck had been deserted.

Shooting under the broad, heavy counter, we caught at the iron works of the mizzen channels, and, directing two men to remain in the boat, I clambered on deck, followed by the other two seamen.

The ship had evidently been on fire some time, the flames having full control of the forward portion. The foremast had gone by the board. The topgallant forecabin was a sea of fire. The mainmast was already tottering, and I knew there was no time to lose. The smoke was dense and stifling, but as yet did not affect the extreme after portion of the vessel. The decks were strewn with remnants of provisions, half open cases and articles of clothing, but no trace of a human being could be seen.

Diving down into the main cabin, which was half filled with black twisting smoke, I took a hasty glance about. The rich hangings, appointments and ornamentation surprised me, showing that the unfortunate ship had been designed to carry passengers. The sharp, shooting gleams of writhing flames from aloft penetrated through the broad skylight, tingling every object with a ruddy glaze.

From stateroom to stateroom I hurried, but found them all empty until I came to the after one. There I experienced some difficulty in opening the door, the smoke every moment becoming more dense and respiration more difficult. Exerting my strength, the woodwork gave way, revealing a confused mass of white drapery lying on the stateroom floor. The very sight made my heart beat quick with apprehension, and, stooping, I soon ascertained that it was a woman.

Placing my hand over her heart, I felt it throb, and without further delay I rushed on deck with her in my arms. Through the companionway I staggered, with a strange dizziness in my head, gasping for breath, but still retaining my grasp on her I had saved. The fresh air revived me, and the pain left my head, so that I was enabled to pay proper attention to the woman who lay helpless in my arms.

Then, for the first time, I looked at the face of my burden, and by the bright light of the wreck I discovered she was both young and handsome. At that moment the mainmast went crashing over the side, sinking with a hiss in the black water. A shower of cinders and sparks, a column of roaring flames, shot on high, followed by the excited shouts of the men, who had leaped, panic stricken, into the boat, urging me to follow.

Clasping the lady with my left arm, I used my right in gliding down the ship's side. The men's oars were poised. I gave the word, and the next instant we were clear of the vessel, which was now wrapped in flames from stem to stern.

Dashing some water into the lady's face, I began to chafe her hands. The treatment, though rough, had the desired effect. She opened her eyes, closed them again as if the awakening was painful, but in a few moments was fully herself. In a few words I told her how she had been saved and assured her that in a short time she would be in safety on board the brig.

In return she told me that her father was the Senior Jose Gonzales of Santos, the wealthiest planter in the country. She had been on a visit to Spain, where her father had a large number of relations, and had taken passage for home in the Spanish ship. The ill fated vessel, by some means to her unknown, had caught fire during the night. A panic ensued, and, overcome by terror, she fainted away. Probably, in the excitement and alarm which followed, her absence was overlooked, and when the boats shoved off from the ship the Senorita Marie Gonzales was left unconscious in her stateroom to perish.

Glancing round the horizon, I could see no sign of the brig. Not the flash of a light betrayed the position of the vessel. But I had a compass with me and noted the course I had steered while pulling for the burning wreck.

It was not the fact of the brig being invisible that caused me uneasiness, but the startling knowledge that a great convulsion of the elements was about to burst upon us.

The dark bank I had at first noticed low down on the horizon had risen rapidly until the entire heavens were obscured. The atmosphere had grown dense, and the darkness was simply intense, relieved only by the now dismantled hull, which occasionally threw out a gleam of light.

A strange, indefinable, rushing sound pervaded the air, a slight ripple ruffled the stagnant waters, a cold breath of air fanned my cheek, while under the black, frowning clouds I saw a white line rapidly rushing upon us.

Louder and louder grew the sounds. The men gazed at one another aghast. With a wave of my hand I motioned the seamen to pull the boat round so as to bear before it, and the next instant the hurricane burst upon us in all its fury.

The shriek of the tempest drowned my voice. The oars were dashed from the sailors' hands, while they in terror threw themselves down in the bottom of the boat.

In an agony of terror Marie clung to me, while I with all my strength and skill managed to keep the boat dead before the gale.

On rushed the frail structure through the murky darkness, enveloped in a whirl of foam which half blinded me as the salt spray filled my eyes. The water was torn up by barrells and buried with cutting force and violence through the air.

Drenched to the skin, with the delicate girl crouching by my side wrapped up in all the spare coats I could muster, I kept watch during the long hours of that eventful night.

How we ever escaped destruction a merciful Providence alone can tell, but with daylight the fierce gale showed signs of abating, and by noon we were sailing upon a summer sea. A rough temporary sail had been rigged and the boat's head directed toward the land, for, of course, we had given up all hope of seeing the brig, for awhile at least. If we would be saved we had got to rely upon our own resources. Carefully I dealt out a slim allowance of bread and water from the scanty supplies which were in the stern sheets, cautioning the men to make the precious fluid go as far as possible.

I could enlarge upon the sufferings we endured, tell you about the calm days which succeeded, how the scorching rays of the sun beat down upon our heads and how the men with noble generosity surrendered their few drops of water to the pale, suffering woman, who never murmured once, though her brain was all but on fire and her tongue parched and swollen in her mouth.

You can imagine my feelings when the last crumb of bread was exhausted and the beaker had been drained dry. Death in its most terrible form, with the attending horrors of hunger and thirst, stared us in the face, and I groaned in anguish as I gazed upon the now inanimate form of the poor girl. She was dying—perhaps dead already—and I stretched myself by her side to meet the fate I was powerless to avert.

Well, we were picked up shortly after by a Brazilian fishing boat, placed aboard a man-of-war cruising on the coast, and the surgeon soon had us under his care. Strange to say, none of us succumbed to the privations we had undergone, but we all recovered to congratulate one another upon our escape. The Senior Jose Gonzales fairly hugged me in his delight at the escape of his daughter and insisted upon my making his residence my home. The men were rewarded by him beyond their most sanguine hopes, and I, well, I rewarded myself by marrying the fair heiress, and when her father died a few years ago I assumed full control of the estates.

As for the old brig and Captain Thompson, neither was ever seen or heard from after the terrible storm which swept the coast of South America, strewn its shores with the wreck of many a noble craft.

Penalties.

"Wealth has its penalties," said the ready made philosopher.

"Yes," answered Mr. Cumrox, "many is the time that I have had to pretend I enjoyed chicken salad and ice cream when I was yearning for corned beef and cabbage."—Washington Star.

THE CHANGE OF LIFE

Sensible Advice to Women from Mrs. Henry Lee, Mrs. Fred Certia and Mrs. Pinkham.

MRS. HENRY LEE

MRS. FRED CERTIA

Owing to modern methods of living not one woman in a thousand approaches this perfectly natural change without experiencing a train of very annoying and sometimes painful symptoms.

"This is the most critical period of her whole existence and every woman who neglects the care of her health at this time invites disease and pain. When her system is in a deranged condition or she is predisposed to apoplexy or congestion of any organ, the tendency is at this period likely to become active and with a host of nervous irritations make life a burden. At this time also cancers and tumors are more liable to form and begin their destructive work."

Such warning symptoms as sense of suffocation, hot flashes, headaches, backaches, melancholia, dread of impending evil, palpitation of the heart, irregularities, constipation and dizziness are promptly heeded by intelligent women who are approaching the period of life when this great change may be expected.

Mrs. Fred Certia, 1014 So. Lafayette Street, So. Bend, Ind., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the ideal medicine for women who are passing through Change of Life. For several months I suffered from hot flashes, extreme nervousness, headache and sleeplessness. I had no appetite and could not sleep. I had made up my mind there was no help for me until I began to use Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, my bad symptoms ceased, and it brought me safely through the danger period, built up my system and I am in excellent health. I consider Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound unsurpassed for women during this trying period of life."

Mrs. Henry Lee, 60 Winter Street, New Haven, Conn., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"After suffering untold misery for three years during Change of Life I heard of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I wrote you of my condition, and began to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and followed your advice, and to-day I am well and happy. I can now walk anywhere and work as well as anyone, and for years previous I had tried but could not get around without help. I consider your medicine a sovereign balm for suffering women."

Women passing through this critical period should rely upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. If there is anything about your case you don't understand write to Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., for advice. It is free and has guided thousands to health.

When a medicine has been successful in restoring to health, actually thousands of women, you cannot well say without trying it, "I do not believe it will help me." It is your duty to yourself and family to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

MUNICIPALUNACY.

By JOHN KENDRICK BANGS.

Judging from the reports that reach us from various parts of the country as to the condition of civic lighting companies and water plants, we shall soon be relieved of the stigma placed upon us by the British visitor to this country who declared that we had no impressive ruins to attract the traveler. Would it not be a good plan for some munificent millionaire to buy up a few of these, transfer them to the banks of the Hudson and thus put that beautiful waterway into the running in the matter of legendary interest with the Rhine? A few moss and ivy covered ruins of this kind would add much to the scenic beauty of the picturesque river and doubtless inspire our literati with ghastly legends of the kind that make those old stories of the Rhine look like a mark and a half. Here indeed is a chance for Mr. Andrew Carnegie to do something to beautify his adopted native land and to fill the shelves of his many libraries as well with good reading at one fell swoop.

The increase of the public debt of Birmingham, England, from $4,000,000 in the early seventies of the last century to $75,000,000, according to the last available figures, shows how completely municipal ownership wipes out a debt of that kind. Alongside of $75,000,000, a paltry sum of $4,000,000 is not only wiped out, but actually annihilated.

The police of Chicago were assessed in the last elections to pay the expenses of the municipal ownership campaign. This is another point in favor of a comprehensive system of public ownership. After awhile, with the motormen, conductors, watermen, gasmen, ditch diggers, linemen, electricians, and so on, to assess for similar purposes, the public will doubtless enjoy free elections. One might almost hope that such a fund as this would be so great that after elections are over there would be a balance left to declare a municipal dividend with. The byproducts of the municipal ownership idea grow daily more and more interesting, not to say alluring.

It is nonsense to say that municipal ownership breeds socialism. On the contrary, it is driving people back to individualism. In some European cities people who used to patronize the trolleys now walk because they wish to get where they are going along lines of least official resistance. And in Valley City, N. D., the quality of the service of the public gas plant has driven a number of business men to install gasoline lighting systems of their own on their premises.

Muncie, Ind., has abandoned her lighting plant, but consoles herself with the thought that her bonds remain. As the poet said, or would have said if he had thought of it:

Old ties are hard to sever.
Other ties endure forever.

The city fathers of Brunswick, Mo., have just done a good stroke of business in selling its lighting plant for 35 cents on the dollar, taking pay in light and water. It is fortunate it wasn't a municipal bakery. It would be hard to pay for that by sending large drafts of rhubarb pie and cream cakes to the city treasury, to say nothing of the risk Brunswick would incur of a sudden attack of civic indigestion running into chronic appendicitis from overindulgence in doughnuts. Operations upon the body politic are dangerous things, since the patient is apt to experience ill effects from taking gas.

Can't Do It by Statute.
Any corporation is entitled to a fair return on all its legitimate investments over and above all expenses when these are carefully and economically administered. There are some corporations which are undoubtedly overcharging the public, but there are more whose stock has never paid any dividends whatever, and only an unfortunate aggravation of the present strained relations existing between the people and the public service corporations can result from the expectation of the former that they can through legislative action obtain a universal reduction in the charges made by such corporations.—Municipal Journal and Engineer.

A Danger to Be Avoided.
If a city is not well governed, municipal ownership is the most dangerous thing imaginable and should be carefully avoided. There is always the danger that the public utilities the city is supposed to own will become nothing more or less than the private property of the people at the head of the government, who will work to their own advantage and the enhancement of their private wealth.—William T. CUPID'S COURT.

An Adverse Decision, an Appeal and an Oral Argument.

The judge's daughter was perturbed. "Papa," she said, knitting her pretty brow, "I am in doubt as to whether I have kept to the proper form of procedure. In law one can err in so many little technicalities that I am ever fearful. Now, last evening George—"

The judge looked at her so sharply over his glasses that she involuntarily paused.

"I thought you had sent him about his business," he said.

"I did hand down an adverse decision," she answered, "and he declared that he would appeal. However, I convinced him that I was the court of last resort in a case like that and that no appeal would lie from my decision."

"Possibly the court was assuming a little more power than rightfully belongs to it," said the judge thoughtfully, "but let that pass. What did he do then?"

"He filed a petition for a rehearing," "The usual course," said the judge, "but it is usually nothing but a mere formality."

"So I thought," returned the girl, "and I was prepared to deny it without argument, but the facts set forth in his petition were sufficient to make me hesitate and wonder whether his case had really been properly presented at the first trial."

"Upon what grounds did he make the application?" asked the judge, scowling.

"Well," she replied, blushing a little, "you see, he proposed by letter, and his contention was that the case was of that peculiar character that cannot be properly presented by briefs, but demands oral arguments. The fact that the latter had been omitted, he held, should be held an error, and the point was such a novel one that I consented to let him argue it. Then his argument was so forceful that I granted his petition and consented to hear the whole case again. Do you think?"

"I think," said the judge, "that the court favors the plaintiff."—Chicago Post.

MONEY SYSTEMS.

The World's Coinage Muddle and the Range of Units of Value.

Twenty-six different monetary units are used by the forty-eight principal countries of the world. Thus Great Britain uses the sovereign or pound sterling, France and six other countries of Europe use a unit equal to the franc, and Canada and the United States use the dollar.

In value these different units range from 4.4 to 494.33 cents of money of the United States. They are represented in their turn by coins the values of which are either multiples or fractional parts of the value of their own chief units, and there are no doubt at least 200 such sufficient coins not one of which seems to have a value equal to that of any commonly known unit of weight, as the gram, for example, or the ounce of gold, although forty-three of these forty-eight countries have accepted gold as their standard measure of value.

This lack of logical relation of coins to any widely used unit of weight of the precious metals may be due to the fact that money systems seem to have grown up haphazard, under diverse conditions of life, in different parts of the world.

Such diversity in moneys may have been of little moment when millions of people spent their lives knowing nothing of the existence of other millions and there was little traffic. But these differences in monetary units are of importance now that international commerce includes millions of tons of products of the toll of all lands and billions of dollars each year to settle its bills, for such differences put upon trade a wholly unnecessary tax. No account is made here of the burden laid on domestic trade by like variation in the value of such units at home, as of the tael of China, which has sixteen different values within that empire.—Moody's Magazine.

"Old Hundred" Scares Birds.

It is a strange but well authenticated fact that the wild creatures of the woods dislike the sound of that solemn hymn "Old Hundred." Muir, the naturalist, proved the truth of this by singing it in the woods of the Sierras to the birds and squirrels, which were very tame from never having been frightened by the report of a gun or other alarming sound. They would come and sit near him upon the branches of trees and listen to any lively tune he might sing, blinking their bright eyes as though they liked it, but at the first sound of "Old Hundred" they would beat a quick retreat to their holes or nests and never appear again until he changed the tune. This experiment was made in different places on various occasions with exactly the same result.—New York Herald.

Dogs That Worry.

If you have ever seen a dog that has lost its master in a London street you will wonder whether even the lower animals have not the elements of worry to disturb them. But the man worries about many other things than bones or masters, and the dog never suffers from insomnia through fear of a future life or the state of his banking account.—Reader.

$5,000 Reward

Will be paid to any person who can find one atom of opium, chloral, morphine, cocaine, ether, chloroform, heroin, alpha and beta eucaine, cannabis indica, or chloral hydrate or any of their derivatives, in any of Dr. Miles' Remedies. This applies to goods in original packages, unopened, and not tampered with. Certain unscrupulous persons are making false statements about these remedies.

I have been troubled with a terrible headache for the last ten years; the doctors could do me no good. I saw Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills advertised in the Sunday magazine, so I thought I would try a sample. I did so, and they helped me wonderfully. I had headache so badly I could hardly see to work, so I sent to the drug store and got a box. In a couple of hours I was all right; it was the first medicine to do me any good."

W. L. LEE, Philadelphia, Pa.

Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills are sold by your druggist, who will guarantee that the first package will benefit you. If it fails, he will return your money. 25 cents. Never sold in bulk.

POINTED PARAGRAPHS.

Vanity in a woman is bad enough, but conceit in a man is worse.

You can't tell anything about a man by his looks. Like mice plus, some of them can look very innocent.

If you can't have your way, take consolation from the fact that every man encounters his stone wall.

When parents are old and poor and become a charge to their children the children often act like all persons act who have been paid in advance.

How prodigal we are with the hours of rest when it is bedtime and how we haggle over the flying minutes when it is time to get up in the morning!

Mark this in favor of father: The woman who is charging things to father at a dry goods store buys more freely and with less worry than the timid woman who charges to her husband.—Athenian Globe.

Winchester High appears to have been omitted from the foot ball schedules of schools of neighboring towns. Our boys will have to wake up, and remember that Winchester has one of the best playgrounds in the State.

Drivers of automobiles, as a rule, are living up to the speed regulations of the town. The one dangerous place is at the corner of Main and Pleasant streets. It would not be surprising if the many narrow escapes from teams and autos would be reversed and an accident result.

There is a great scarcity of houses in this town, hardly any being vacant, and there appears to be a good opportunity for builders who wish to rent or sell. It is estimated that there are about fifteen new houses in course of construction, but this will not begin to supply the demand of people who desire to locate here.

SCHOOL NOTES.

The School Committee met on Tuesday evening of this week and transacted considerable routine business.

In view of the fact that the fifth and sixth grades now in the Chapin, Gifford and Washington buildings have such a large registration as to render any relief impracticable, it was decided to open another sixth grade in the Prince building, to transfer to it the sixth grade now in the Chapin School and to make such transfers of fifth grade pupils as might be necessary. It will probably take a week or more to obtain and place the new furniture for the room, but after that date the rooms containing these grades will be more satisfactorily arranged.

In order to provide more time for study as well as to secure better quality in other work, the formal study of physical geography and of English history was dropped in the ninth grade. The former will be included as may be practicable with the regular work in geography and the latter will be placed with the supplementary reading. This action will enable the teachers to devote more time to arithmetic and English and will give pupils a better preparation for the High School work of the following year. It was directed that the gymnasium be placed in order for the work of the High School in physical training under Miss Chandler.

On recommendation of Principal Lovering, Mr. Alfred E. Little was granted a high school diploma, he having met the school requirements for the same. Mr. John L. Howard, supervisor of penmanship, began his regular work this week. He gave the first lessons of the year in each grade and met all the teachers on Wednesday afternoon for special instruction.

In the future the regular meetings of the School Committee will be held the first Friday evening of each month in their office in the High School building.

DEMOCRATIC CAUCUS.

Suggestion that T. W. Lawson be Nominated for Representative.

A caucus of the Democrats of Winchester was held in the Town Hall last Friday evening. Dr. Charles F. McCarthy read the call for the caucus, after which he was elected chairman and Mr. James H. Roach secretary. On motion of John H. Carter, the chair appointed the following committee to make up a list of delegates for the various conventions and also for town committee for 1908: Messrs. J. H. Carter, J. F. Holland and Geo. H. Eustis.

The committee reported the following list which was elected:

State Convention—Chas. F. McCarthy, Councillor—G. H. Eustis, County—J. F. Holland, District Attorney—W. J. Daly, Representative—J. F. Holland, H. D. Nash, Henry Bishop, Ferd F. French, Senatorial—C. F. McCarthy, J. F. O'Connor.

Town Committee for 1908—C. F. McCarthy, J. T. Cosgrove, J. H. Roach, J. H. Carter, W. L. Tuck, M. S. Nelson, H. J. Carroll, G. H. Eustis, J. F. O'Connor.

One of the gentlemen in attendance, remarked to these persons sitting around him that he believed it would be a good move to nominate Mr. Thomas W. Lawson as the Representative to the General Court. This gentleman said that he would be a winner, besides giving to the district a brisk campaign. The question was asked, if Mr. Lawson was a Democrat or a Republican, but this did not seem to matter so long as he was a candidate. Whether his name will come before the convention or not was not definitely learned.

SCARCITY OF MODERATE RENT HOUSES.

There is a pressing need of small and conveniently appointed houses renting from $20 to $30 a month in this town. The demand is probably felt here more than in any other town of like population this side of Boston, according to the opinion of real estate men. At this season hardly a day passes but that a family visits Winchester with a view of locating here, and it is a regrettable fact that many of these families are obliged to settle elsewhere because they cannot find houses within their means. To quote a man who has had some experience in renting and selling dwellings, it would be impossible to fill fifty houses renting within the foregoing figures in as many days and with desirable citizens. The increased cost of building material has put a damper on the building of small houses for renting purposes. Cement, it is believed, however, is but in an experimental stage, and this material may be used as effectively and at a cost much less than ordinary material.

NO MORE CRAPS.

Chief of Police McIntosh and Officer Kelley, were interested spectators of a quiet little game of penny ante and craps, which took place in an open field at the rear of the cellar for the new Second Baptist church Sunday forenoon.

The officers were not within the "charmed circle," but were concealed in a nearby house on Winchester street where they had an unobstructed view of the game, and being provided with powerful field glasses, were able to secure the names of twenty-eight of the players who were summoned into court Wednesday morning, on a charge of gaming and being present where gaming was going on, on the Lord's Day.

The police have known of the doings at this place for some time, but have been unable to catch any of the offenders. Sunday morning the chief and one of his officers secreted themselves in a nearby building and watched the gaming for more than two hours. They secured sufficient evidence for their purposes and quietly retired after making a list of those present.

In court nine of the young men who were third offenders paid a fine of $10 each and six who were second offenders paid fines of $5, and the rest of the crowd were placed on file. One young man from Arlington could not appear in court but sent his $5.

TOOK LEAD PIPE.

Last Friday afternoon officer Harrold noticed two men with a bag in the centre whose appearance was suspicious. Seeing one of them enter two of the plumbing shops he made inquiries and found they were trying to dispose of some lead pipe. When questioned the man who was trying to dispose of the pipe denied trying to sell it, so officer Harrold took him to the station.

It was found that he was Patrick McHale of Stoneham, employed by a Medford man. The lead was taken from a house where McHale was at work. He was turned over to the Medford police and later in the week was fined $5.00.

WON SATURDAY'S BOWLING TOURNAMENT.

Messrs. George W. Annin and Sewall E. Newman were the winners of the bowling tournament held at the Calumet club last Saturday with a total of 619 for three strings.

Second prize went to Messrs. H. Earl Richardson and Dr. Orion Kelley with 551, and the third prize was won by Messrs. George B. Lawrence and George A. Burgess with 550.

At the meeting of Wedgemere Colony, Pilgrim Fathers, Monday evening, these officers were elected: William H. Vayo, gov.; Mrs. Sarah E. Horne, lieut. gov.; Mrs. Sarah Doherty, chaplain; Miss Annie Haggerty, sec.; James H. Roach, collector; Miss Mary E. Holland, treas.; John H. Holland, sergt.-at-arms; Miss Katherine Kenney, deputy sergt.-at-arms; Miss Gertrude Donovan, inside sentinel; Miss Mary Donovan, outside sentinel; Miss Mattie E. Gillespie, pianist.

YOUNG LADIE'S SODALITY OFFICERS.

The Young Ladie's Sodality of St. Mary's Church, held a meeting for the election of officers on Tuesday evening. The following were elected:
Prefect—Miss Minnie O'Leary.
First Assistant—Miss Catherine T. Sullivan.
Second Assistant—Miss Alice O'Donnell.
Secretary—Miss Mary I. Hurley.
Mistress of Postulants—Miss Bessie Reed.

WILL ATTEND CONVENTION.

Town Treasurer Thomas S. Spurr, who is the Mass. Vice President of the American Association of Public Accountants, will attend the convention of that association with Mrs. Spurr early next month. The meetings are to be held at St. Paul and Minneapolis, Minn., and a very attractive program has been arranged for the large body of public accountants from all over the United States who will attend.

REPUBLICAN CAUCUS.

A Sharp Contest for District Attorney Delegates.

Congressman McCall's Friends Claim that He was Disciplined.

The caucus of the Republicans of Winchester Tuesday evening was well attended, the small Town Hall being filled with voters, and too, it was one of the most interesting caucuses held in recent years. The friends and supporters of Mr. Lewis Parkhurst were out in force to secure his nomination to the lower branches of the General Court, while the friends of John J. Higgins and Melvin M. Johnson were equally prominent in their endeavors to secure the nomination of one or the other of these gentlemen for the District Atty.

have stood a better chance, but the majority of the committee who were favorable to him brought in an almost entirely new list and thus seriously weakened the chances of their man.

It was the most mixed up caucus that we have attended for many a day, no one seeming to be able to untangle the snarl that prevailed, all the motions offered in this direction only adding to the complication, with the result that after the balloting had ceased it took the tellers about two hours to count the ballots. There is cause for satisfaction that this condition will not exist again as it was voted to accept the provisions of law for use of official ballots at future caucuses. Working under this law there will be no misunderstandings, a better feeling, and no cause for dissatisfaction, as any one desiring to be a candidate for any particular convention can have his name placed upon the ballot on application to the Town Clerk previous to the caucus. However, the meeting Tuesday evening was in no sense cut and dried.

Mr. Ralph E. Joslin in offering a motion favorable to the acceptance of this act, said that it would greatly simplify the proceedings of a caucus, and that in a town the size of Winchester it was a necessity. Under its workings there would

AN UNWELCOME VISITOR.

While sitting on the steps of the Town Hall Tuesday evening, waiting for the clerks to finish the count of ballots cast at the Republican caucus, Sumner Carr, custodian of the building, observed what appeared to be a cat coming up the stone steps. He was on the verge of calling the cat to him and petting it, when his nostrils were assailed with an odor that caused him considerable discomfort. Mr. Carr did not dare to move as he knew full well what the result would be—the spoiling of a suit of clothes and much bodily scrubbing. And so the two continued to look at each other, Mr. Carr fearing that the perfumed animal would go past him into the hall and thus cause no end of trouble, not only in getting it out again, but also the perfume that would certainly remain for many a day, if aggressive measures were taken. Finally after eyeing Mr. Carr for some time and keeping him on the anxious seat, the cat walked leisurely down the steps and into the darkness. Mr. Carr says that during his long connection with the Town Hall this is the first time he had seen a skunk about the premises, and is congratulating himself that he escaped so easily.

PLAYED CRAPS BY LAMP LIGHT.

It is said that last Sunday morning at three o'clock the crap fiends of the plains were playing the game by the light of a kerosene hand lamp in a field off Winchester street. These players were chased away at that time by an officer, and later in the day caught by Chief McIntosh.

QUARTERLY MEETING OCTOBER 5th.

The regular quarterly meeting of the Calumet Club will be held at the club house on Saturday evening, Oct. 5th.

RETURNS FROM AUTOMOBILE TRIP.

Mrs. Charlotte B. West of Washington street returned yesterday from a two week's automobile trip in New York.

CARTER—HAWES.

The first fall wedding of social prominence in this town took place on Tuesday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Reuben C. Hawes on Main street, when their daughter, Mabel Sallie, was married to Harry Edgar Carter of Pearson road, West Somerville.

The ceremony was of a private nature, the reception following being attended by a large assemblage of friends and relatives from most of the nearby towns, including Chatham, Bridgewater, Worcester, Roxbury, Watertown, Wakefield, Malden, Melrose, Charlestown and Camden, N. J.

Rev. John R. Chaffee, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church, was the officiating clergyman, performing the marriage at seven o'clock. The groomsmen was Mr. Byron G. Morgan of Melrose. Miss Edna F. Hawes, the bride's cousin, was maid of honor, and little Miss Ruth Davidson acted as flower girl.

The ceremony was performed in the reception room beneath a floral triangle of asparagus fern and white asters, the double ring service being used.

The reception followed the wedding ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. Carter being assisted in receiving their many friends by the parents of the bride, and Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Carter of West Somerville brother and sister-in-law of the groom. The house was handsomely decorated with asparagus fern, laurel and autumn foliage, while hydrangeas and other flowers were displayed in profusion about the rooms.

The bride was dressed in a white satin messaline princess gown, trimmed with oriental lace and ornaments. Her veil was fastened with lilies of the valley, and she carried a bridal bouquet of bride roses and lilies of the valley. The maid of honor wore a white lace pattern gown and carried a bouquet of roses.

The ushers were Messrs. Percy A. Dodge of Malden, J. Frank Tuttle of Camden, N. J., Charles E. Jameson of Charlestown and Fred S. Scales of this town.

During the evening music was given by Allen's orchestra, and the large attendance testified to the esteem in which the couple are held by their large number of friends. The groom's gift to the bride was a piano, while large quantities of silver, cut glass, china, pictures and two handsome art lamps and pretty linen made a very handsome display of gifts.

Mr. and Mrs. Carter left at ten o'clock for a trip to New York, Philadelphia and Washington, and on their return will reside at No. 57 Alliston street, West Medford.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES.

Russell Keelne has been appointed athletic editor of the Recorder from the class of '09 to fill the vacancy caused by Henry Mason leaving school. Mr. Mason is to attend the Allen school in Newton.

The girls' gymnasium classes are now held every Tuesday and Friday afternoons. This arrangement is better than that of former years when the work was done in school hours and but once a week.

Theodore Main has been appointed assistant manager of the base ball team. At a meeting of the Senior Class Thursday the following officers were elected: President, R. Charles Thompson; Vice-president, Miss Hester E. Young; Secretary, Miss Christine Newton; Treasurer, Sanford F. Petts, Jr.; Executive committee, the above officers and Miss Margaret Homer, W. Leslie Goffe and Stanley B. Weld.

As yet the other classes have not organized but will probably do so in the course of a week.

At a meeting of the A. A. held Thursday it was voted to play football this season. Guy Kinsley was elected captain but declined to serve. As yet no one has been elected to take its place.

TO HAVE TWO TEAMS.

Capt. H. J. Olmsted of the Calumet club's Boston pin bowling team has issued a notice calling the candidates for the league team out for practice. It is his desire to form a first and second team from the club bowlers this year. Monday evenings have been selected for trying out the men.

At the meeting of the Amateur Boston Pin Bowling League this week Captain Olmsted was elected treasurer.

Mr. Frank W. Philbrick, formerly of this town, and Captain of the B. A. A. was elected president of the league.

AUXILIARY MEETING OF THE WOMAN'S BOARD OF MISSIONS.

The annual thanks offering meeting of the Auxiliary to the Woman's Board of Missions was held on Tuesday afternoon at the First Congregational Church. The offering amounted to $60. The old board of officers was re-elected with the exception that Miss Elizabeth Richardson was elected President to take the place of Mrs. Chas. Harris who resigned after several years of service. The society has raised $175 the past year for missions. Mrs. Jane Herrick with her usual generosity has again made two ladies life members—Mrs. J. K. Murdock and Miss E. C. Richardson. Papers were read by Mrs. Dennett and Miss Pressey.

AUTOMOBILE CLUB.

One May Be Formed in Winchester, so it is Reported.

From present indications and the attitude of a number of automobile owners in Winchester, it seems highly probable that the town will soon have another club to add to its already fairly large list of organizations. This will be an automobile club.

For the past few weeks the automobile company, with its garage on Converse place, has been contemplating a change. Its quarters were not of sufficient size to give proper handling room for the cars kept there, which together with other matters caused the company to look for another building. Besides the scheme of a new building, it is said that the company also considered the advisability of discontinuing the business altogether.

On Tuesday evening Dr. Harold A. Gale called a meeting of a number of active automobilists in town at the Country Club. The matter was discussed at some length and committees selected to enquire further into the scheme. It is understood that some twenty-five or thirty automobilists are interested in the matter and another meeting is to be held in the near future to further promote the forming of a club.

Mr. E. J. Ray, an expert mechanical engineer, who came to Winchester from Richmond, Va., to take charge of the Automobile company, will, it is said, return to Virginia again in the employ of his old company, which has made him a most flattering offer.

It is understood that the automobile company has purchased a piece of land on Main street near Cutter's Village for the erection of a new and modern garage. Whether the new club, provided it is deemed advisable to form one, will build on this land or not is yet to be decided.

FLAG ON HIGH SCHOOL BUILDING.

EDITOR OF THE STAR.

In connection with the question by "Patriotic" in last week's issue of the STAR relative to the importance of flying the national flag on the High school building, I am glad to be able to say that the flag has been displayed as suggested, on every school day except when the weather seemed too unfavorable. To date there have been three such occasions.

We are fortunate in having unusually careful janitor service, and it is probable that the day which your correspondent had in mind was one when the wind and rain seemed to threaten. Under such circumstances a commendable regard for school property, but not a lack of patriotism, dictated the action taken.

We must all recognize the dignity of our finest building. Probably no expression of enthusiasm over the Winchester High school would be too sweeping to justify cordial assent and it is a particular pleasure to know that our citizens keep the educational properties so well in mind. In any instance of omission the school authorities will be glad to be informed.

At the same time let me suggest that my office is open from 8 a. m. to 5 p. m., that any inquiry by telephone or in person as to school matters will receive prompt attention, and that in this way definite knowledge as to the reason for any condition about which question may arise may be obtained with a minimum of effort. Also, this would prevent any misunderstanding.

Yours very truly,
SCHUYLER F. HERRON,
Superintendent of Schools.

MARRIED LADIE'S SODALITY.

At a meeting of the Married Ladie's Sodality of St. Mary's Church held last evening, the following officers were elected:

Mrs. Margaret A'Hern, Prefect; Mrs. Abby Foley, First Assistant; Mrs. Mary Hennessey, Second Assistant; Mrs. Alice Keen, Secretary; Mrs. Elizabeth Noonan, Mistress of Postulants.

$150.00 REWARD

The above reward will be paid by the Edison Illuminating Company of Boston to any individual who furnishes information resulting in the arrest and conviction of any person or persons stealing copper wire or any other appliances, the property of the Company.

On account of the many dangers which might result from the theft of wire along the Company's system the interest and co-operation of all residents of this and near-by sections in apprehending wire-thieves is requested.

Any person who has reason to believe that men working about the Company's wires are doing so without authority will confer a favor by telephoning Oxford 3300, reversing charges.

Information may be sent by letter or telephone to

WILLIAM H. ATKINS, Gen. Supt.,
Edison Illuminating Company,
39 BOYLSTON STREET, BOSTON.

TROLLEY EXPRESS.

Fourteen cities and towns, comprising nearly a third of the territory of Suffolk, Middlesex and Essex counties, are now being petitioned by the Boston & Northern Street Railway Company for the right to establish a long expected trolley freight system.

This move involves Malden, where this line joins the Boston Elevated, thence to Melrose, Wakefield and Reading, where the main line branches to Lawrence and Lowell, including, on the Lawrence division, North Reading, Andover, North Andover, Middleton and Danvers, and Wilmington, Tewksbury, Lowell and Dracut, on the Lowell line.

North Reading has unanimously granted the petition, while Andover unanimously refused it. Most of the other places have not taken action as yet, awaiting the results of the public hearings. The company will, after all the local authorities have acted, appeal to the Railroad Commission which has a right to overrule the places standing in the way of the through service.

Since the Old Colony street railway successfully operated their trolley freight system, this move has been anticipated in other districts.

Lawrence and Lowell at present are the only districts where the right has been asked, but it is expected a similar move will soon be under way, covering all the territory of the Boston & Northern, taking in such centres as Lynn, Salem, Gloucester, and Newburyport, Woburn, Winchester, Medford, etc.

The proposition of the railroad is substantially as follows:

To run baggage cars similar to the large convertible passenger cars now in use, the difference being that there will be no seats, fewer windows and large doors in the middle of the aisles. It is intended to maintain an office and store-room in the centre of each town, where people can either call for packages or the company would deliver them. The company does not propose to buy horses and teams, but to contract with some one in town, preferably the local express company, to make deliveries and collections.

It is the plan to collect and deliver some of the express, the same as passengers, along the line to the different centers. Reduction or cutting of rates are not contemplated, the establishing of a fair rate being the purpose. There will be a rate for goods brought to the office which are to be called for at the office in the town to which they are sent, another rate for goods collected by the company and carried to the office, the goods to be called for there by the person addressed, and still another rate for goods collected in one place and delivered after transportation to the cars.

HAS HE?

E. Moody Boynton thinks that he has discovered a method for preventing railroad collisions. If he has the sooner it is adopted by the large railroad systems the better.

The bicycle railway of which he is the inventor has been so long in the air, that the public have lost confidence in it. In a letter he says:

"I have completed demonstrations satisfactorily to 1000 engineers, to 16 committees of the Massachusetts Legislature and to the railway engineers now at the head of the largest systems, that accident by my single rail system is impossible. There can be no collision, as the trains run in one direction only. The overhead rail receives, by automatic electric signal, loud knowledge of the approach of any train in the rear in the distance to which it may be set, tens of miles distant, and also makes telegraph and telephone connection with all trains at all times, and must have prevented the New Hampshire slaughter. No accident has occurred with 100,000 experimental trains run through a series of seven years' experiments, with only the favorable criticism of all the engineers and of such schools as that of Technology."

Mr. Whitney appears to have captured the Democratic voters of Mr. Thomas W. Lawson's home town. Some people are considerably concerned to know whether Mr. Lawson will be invited to address the Democrats here, giving his well known views of Whitney.

HINT TO THE WINCHESTER IMPROVEMENT ASSOCIATION.

The following was taken from an old Boston paper and gives an idea of the popularity of the old Winchester Village Improvement Association and the interest in it by the citizens:

The Village Improvement Association of Winchester held its annual reception and dinner last evening. Nearly 300 of the representative citizens gathered in the Town Hall, where a reception was held in the early evening. The special guests of the association were Governor Brackett, Gen. John M. Corse and Mr. R. C. Metcalf of Boston. After dinner, during which music was discoursed by the Winchester Orchestra, an instrumental solo was given by Miss Annie Tolman, and greetings were extended by President S. W. Twombly. He referred to the organization of the association nine years ago and to the many improvements in this beautiful town since its inception. Among those of the last year reference was made to the new bell on the Town Hall, the electric lights and fire alarms. He trusted the future had also much in store.

Following President Twombly's remarks a vocal solo was charmingly rendered by Mrs. A. B. Coffin, wife of State Gas Commissioner Coffin. At the close of the encore she was given a handsome basket of flowers. Gov. Brackett was then introduced. As a citizen of an adjoining town, he said he naturally felt an interest in Winchester and its institutions. Both towns were good ones to be born in and to live in. He would cordially endorse the statement of their President that Winchester had furnished Boston with one of the best Mayors and Postmasters it had ever had. He further congratulated the town on its contributions to the public service in a Gas Commissioner, Registrar of Probate, Senator, and within a few years in two Representatives to the General Court. He could testify to the beauty of the town and to the progressiveness of its citizens. The Governor's remarks were in a most pleasant vein and very cordially received. Gen. Corse, the next speaker, alluded to the physical and moral influence of such organizations as their association on the community at large. He suggested some improvements that could be made, especially in the improvement of old and the opening up of the new highways into the neighboring towns. Miss Marion H. Whittaker of Boston contributed two pleasing whistling solos, after which a pleasant incident occurred in the presentation to President Twombly by Mr. E. Ginn on behalf of the association of a handsome painting of a pastoral scene after Rosa Bonheur, to which the former feelingly responded. Other responses were made by Representative Tuttle of Arlington and Mr. Robert C. Metcalf of Boston.

The Committee of Arrangements in charge of the entertainment consisted of Messrs. S. W. Twombly, S. W. Keynolds and S. C. Small, the Reception Committee being: Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Whitney, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Suter, Mr. and Mrs. T. S. Spurr, Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Barnard, Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Lunt, Mr. and Mrs. Preston Pond, Mr. and F. C. Manchester, Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Dorsey, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Emerson, Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Elder, Mr. and Mrs. B. T. Church, Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. S. W. McCall, Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Fitch and Mr. Geo. G. Stratton.

Imitation milk at 10 cents a quart, or even 8 cents, is an outrage on the public; and yet, it is coming that way in Greater Boston, if prophets know what they are talking about. Indeed, one dealer in Newton has already set the pace by putting the price up to 10 cents, and it is expected that his example will be universally followed in the Boston suburbs within a short time. We wait with bated breath the action of Woburn milkmen. Will they muster up sufficient courage to charge 10 cents this winter. It would seem to ordinary laymen that a better way would be, to add 25 percent. more water to the fluid and keep the price at 7 cents. If the advance comes, people will use less milk, and the retailers won't gain such a terrible sight after all.—[Woburn Journal.]

ORPHEUM THEATRE.

Studiously catering to the patrons of true and tried vaudeville, the Orpheum, for the week beginning Monday, Sept. 24th, has a powerful bill of perfected vaudeville to offer.

The distinguished English actor, William F. Hawtreys, and a supporting company of players, will be seen in the stirring dramatic playlet, "Compromised."

Another sketch on the bill, but totally different in character in that it is a roaring farce, will be presented by Geo. Abel and company, entitled "Three of a Kind."

Rossi's marvelous musical horse will fill an important position on the bill. This remarkable animal plays a variety of musical instruments. Matthews and Ashley in their Chinatown sketch will contribute 20 minutes of hilarious fun, while prominent among the other fun makers are Morrow and Shelburg, and Hanson and Nelson. The Exposition Four, one of the cleverest musical aggregations in vaudeville, and the St. Onge brothers, sensational bicyclists, are others on the great bill. New moving pictures will be shown by the Kinetograph.

TREMONT THEATRE.

Advanced Vaudeville as exemplified at the Tremont Theatre is now settled down to a smoothly running basis in America. Stars and acts of this country and stars and acts from Europe and the Orient are happily grouped into bills, and the bills are symmetrically blended into one great ensemble of picturesqueness, novelty and interest. True to advance promise, the bills are showing more of variety and of symmetry as each week comes.

Humorous stars, new to America but famous in Europe, have made debut in this country and with highest credit to themselves. The big ocean liners that come into New York port, are bringing in the imported stars each week, and they are being added right along to the advanced vaudeville schedule. Because it is the intention of Messrs. Klaw & Erlanger to send only the very best to Boston, it is seldom possible to announce the complete bill in advance but patrons can be certain that they will see only the highest class acts in the world.

The soothing spray of Ely's Liquid Creams Balm, used in an atomizer, is an unspeakable relief to sufferers from Catarrh. Some of them describe it as a Godsend, and no wonder. The thick, foul discharge is dislodged and the patient breathes freely, perhaps for the first time in weeks. Liquid Cream Balm contains all the healing, purifying elements of the solid form, and it never fails to cure. Sold by all druggists for 75c. including spraying tube, or mailed by Ely Bros., 50 Warren Street, New York.

OCTOBER SUBURBAN LIFE.

Suburban Life for October contains an unusual feature in a full page of anecdotes bearing the general title, "Do Animals Reason?" These are all well-authenticated stories of unusual intelligence displayed by dogs, horses and cats. It is a feature which is sure to attract widespread attention on account of the present interest in animals and their reasoning powers.

Agreed. Justice Pickford, when a barrister, was once speaking before a couple of judges when a disagreement arose. After a long discussion on a point of law one of the judges said: "We repeat that the statement you make is not good law, and this court does not sit to expound the law to you, Mr. Pickford. We have neither the wish, the time"—"Nor the ability, your lordships," interjected the barrister. "Quite so; quite so. Now, as to paragraph 3."—[London Tit-Bits.]

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

Address: F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, Ohio. Sold by druggists, 75c. Take Hall's Family Pills for constipation.

NEWSY PARAGRAPHS.

The Annual Meeting of the Massachusetts Sunday School Association convenes in Lowell, Oct. 8-10. A strong program has been issued. The theme of the Convention will be: "Freely ye have received, freely give." Self, Service, Substance. There will be exhibits of helps and supplies and material in use in the State of educational value. The music will be in charge of Lawrence Greenwood and Charles L. Estey. Reduced railroad rates have been granted in Mass. and the Local Committee will entertain delegates on the Harvard plan.

When you send news items to the STAR you become interested in the news columns; your guests delight in having their names in print, and the editor appreciates your aid.

BEWARE OF STRIPES.

Animals That Wear Them Are Said to Be Treacherous.

"Show me a striped wild animal, and I will show you one you want to keep your eye on," said the circus man. "I have had to do with wild animals now for a good many years—I won't tell you how many because I am getting old enough to feel the weight of these time posts—and I have never yet come up with a striped beast that did not show mean traits.

"Sometimes I wonder if this is not the way nature has of marking up the bad fellows so that they may be known, just as we put striped suits on the impossibly bad of the human kind. Take hyenas, for instance. They come under the head of a dog species. How seldom you ever hear of a dog snipping the hand that feeds it! These ugly things are liable to do it any time.

"Zebras are pudgy little horses with stripes that give away their temperament. Every now and then you hear of zebras broken to harness. Well, I have seen a few of these, but they didn't go far before something else was broken besides the zebra's mean nature. They are strong and good looking, but so infernally cussed that there is no doing anything with them.

"Sometimes a lion's mane is marked with uneven black circles. When this is the case, it is wise not to get too familiar. It is the sign of a bad streak somewhere in Leo's makeup, and there is no telling when this strain might turn his strength into savage danger.

"The elephant is good natured and obedient. The camel takes life easily and doesn't seem to worry about anything so long as he is left to munch by himself. A bear with a fur of several shadings is a bad one to take risks with.

"The tapir is a harmless beast and rather affectionate. He can even cry. Big rolling teardrops show this when his keeper cuts him out of a meal or goes away for a day or two. The llama is an animal sort that may be properly classed with the spotted animals. Brown and white and black and white in huge splashes lend to the good looks of its curling coat. It has big lamblike eyes and would run from a baby."—Boston Globe.

POINTED PARAGRAPHS.

There are a good many rabbits playing lion parts.

If you let others do your bragging for you, it isn't so apt to be overdue.

When authority spoils a man, it is also apt to be hard on those over whom it extends.

Careful comparison makes any other heritage look insignificant compared with common sense.

You often hear impolite children criticised. Ever realize that there are a good many impolite grown people?

Some houses are so prim and orderly they remind one of the systematic arrangement of the tombstones in a well kept graveyard.

If you want to know how people speak of you behind your backs, listen to the reckless manner in which they pitch into others.

We admire a patience that doesn't parade it. The hen, for instance, when sitting doesn't look as if it felt that no rooster could ever be such a martyr.—Acheson Globe.

Pocahontas and John Smith.

The pretty story of Smith's rescue from imminent death by Pocahontas when he was in the clutches of her redoubtable father, Powhatan, has been rather blown upon by later historians. It has been shown that Smith in his earlier narrative only mentions the princess incidentally as a child, and it was not until she came afterward to England and Smith wrote an account of her for the edification of the court that he described vividly how she hazarded the beating out of her own brains to save his. By that time the romantic Pocahontas had been metamorphosed into Mistress Rebecca Rolfe, wife of a Virginia settler of standing, and her portrait, with plumed hat, ruff and fan, has been duly handed down in this capacity.—London Times.

Wife Appreciated It.

They have just "blown themselves" for a new bed, an old fashioned, colonial sort of bed, that looks as though it might have been in somebody's family for a hundred years or so, and they think a great deal of it. They have discussed its many merits time and again, but it remained for the young wife to discover one feature of the new bed that had never appealed to the husband.

"There's one thing I like about the bed," said she, "about the sideboard, and the way it's put on."

"What's that?" asked he.

"It's so low I don't believe a man could crawl under it," said she.—Indianapolis News.

The Taps on the Wall.

His mother was superstitious afore 'im and always knew when 'er friends died by hearing three loud taps on the wall. The only mistake she ever made was one night when, after losing no less than seven friends, she found out it was the man next door hanging pictures at 3 o'clock in the morning. She found it out by 'im hitting 'is thumb nail.—Strand Magazine.

They Didn't Know Paper.

Scholars have wondered why it was that the ancient Roman genius never achieved the art of printing. The secret of the failure lies probably in the fact that the Romans never discovered how to make paper, for recent investigations prove that they had in general use wooden and metal stamps for marking wares, packages, etc.—Pittsburg Post.

WHITNEY'S FIGHT

Tremendous Democratic Opposition to His Nomination

CAUCUS RETURNS FAVOR HIM

Bartlett Men Issue Scathing Statement Declaring Whitney a Menace to the People and Democratic Party

The political situation as it exists today is probably without parallel in the history of the commonwealth.

The Democrats have been, for the last three months, fighting the battles of the Republican party with vigor and persistence.

The candidacy of General Charles W. Bartlett of Boston for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination has brought to the attention of the people of the commonwealth in most conspicuous and telling manner, what a large element of the Democracy consider the constitutional unfitness of Henry M. Whitney of Brookline to be governor of this commonwealth.

It must be conceded at the start that this has been the most vigorously waged contest for the governorship made on the Democratic side since the famous days of General Benjamin F. Butler, a quarter of a century ago. Both Bartlett and Whitney have been worthy antagonists, and each of these men has fought with a tenacity and grimness of purpose so strong as to make the contest memorable in the annals of the Democracy.

There has been very little that the Whitney men have been able to say against General Bartlett, except that he parted his hair in an unconventional way and was defeated for the governorship two years ago.

The Opposition to Whitney

But with Mr. Whitney the case has been different. It was felt by many prominent Democrats that his nomination would be a party misfortune, from the fact that in his connection with several affairs of great moment his methods had been subject to the sharpest criticism and condemnation. It has been emphasized that if he were nominated the Democratic party would be instantly placed upon the defensive, and would be unable, by reason of that fact, to wage an aggressive and successful campaign.

His connection with the investigation of the scandalous methods employed by the West End Street Railway company, of which he was the head, in attempting to secure the passage of an elevated railway measure, was felt by Democrats with a high sense of public duty, to unfit him for the governorship. Probably with the masses of the party this matter cut a small figure. There are, however, in the Democratic party many men whose standard of public morality, and corporate morality for that matter, was high enough to enable them to see the incongruity in such a nomination as that of Henry M. Whitney to the highest office in the gift of the people of the great Puritan commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Early in the fight Mr. Whitney secured enough of the prominent Democratic leaders to probably insure his success in the convention. He has spent money lavishly during the nominating canvass, and much more so than General Bartlett, although it is quite possible that the Bartlett men might have spent more if they had been able to secure it.

Lawson's Advice Is Offered

Thomas W. Lawson has advised Mr. Whitney to withdraw from the field as a candidate. Lawson has said some very strong things in regard to Mr. Whitney and his connection with legislation at the state house, and declares himself ready to wage war on Mr. Whitney if he is nominated by the Democratic state convention. Mr. Lawson says in case the Democrats nominate Mr. Whitney he will personally "before the polls close on Nov. 5 have made, not only the practices of Mr. Whitney but the great crime of the Democratic party, a byword in every household in the commonwealth, a crime of a great political party deliberately selecting for its leader a public corruptor of citizenship."

The Bartlett men have not given up the fight yet. They claim that the Boston newspapers have misrepresented the returns from the caucuses greatly, and that the general is no doubt in the lead. The convention must decide the question Oct. 5.

One of the most striking documents issued in any recent nominating campaign has been prepared by the Bartlett men, and distributed among the Democratic voters. It is a powerful arraignment of Mr. Whitney as a politician, a seeker of legislation, and generally. It sums up the opposition to him in the following "Twenty reasons why Mr. Whitney is a menace to the people and to the Democratic party."

Menace to the People

"1. He is a Democrat only by profession; he is a self-constituted candidate who stands for Republican policies and his own profit only.

"2. His platform consists of reciprocity with Canada and tariff reforms; reciprocity with Canada when Canada has repudiated the policy and tariff reform by postponing any real reduction for 10 or 20 years.

"3. He betrayed Mr. Bryan in 1896 and 1900 and Mr. Moran in 1904.

"4. He admits himself to be a corruption man.

Crawford
Cooking-Ranges

What Our NEW TYPE of Range Means

Maintaining the Crawford reputation for progress, we have constructed a new type of range which is better than even our heretofore best. In this new design the useless and awkward End Hearth is omitted. The ashes are disposed of by falling into a HOD far below the fire, which makes their removal easier and the grates to last longer. The Coal and Ash Hods are side by side, of the same size, and the Ash Hod being emptied can be returned full of coal. There is also more room on top of these ranges. The "Palace" is extra large size and the "Castle" smaller.

All the famous Crawford features are present: Single Damper, Patented Grate, Cup-Joint Oven Flues, Asbestos-Backed Oven, Improved Oven Indicator.

Blanchard, Kendall & Co.

"5. He has trafficked for years in public franchises and his demands for legislation have always been attended by corruption.

"6. He attempted Mr. Moran's defeat last year and his leaders are those who outrageously attacked Mr. Moran.

"7. His success means the control of the Democratic party by the anti-Bryan forces.

"8. He openly advocates the merger of the Boston and Maine which would complete the tyrannical monopoly of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad company in New England and its future domination over the politics of the state.

"9. He asks to be governor that he may veto the efforts of the people to prevent a monopoly of transportation in Massachusetts.

"10. He seeks success by giving money to politicians and not by appeals to the people.

"11. He spent $45,000.00 in an attempt to elect himself lieutenant governor and failed; no amount of money will elect him governor; the sale of the Democratic party to him will therefore prove unprofitable.

"12. He has no sympathy with organized labor or the social reforms which it advocates; he represents capital only.

"13. His success would defeat labor's efforts for the initiative and referendum and legislation against government by injunction.

"14. His success would secure a delegation to the National Democratic convention hostile to the policies advocated by William J. Bryan.

"15. His nomination would drive progressive Democrats out of the party.

"16. The Republicans who would vote for him are corporation Republicans and a Democratic party so constituted would cease to be the party of the people.

"17. He traffics in politics for the benefit of the corporations he represents. Mr. Bryan says such men should be spewed out of the Democratic party.

"18. He opposes Mr. Bartlett who is a soldier of the Civil war, an able lawyer, an honest man and a loyal Democrat.

"19. His nomination would split the Democratic party in twain, while Mr. Bartlett would unify the party forces and bring victory.

"20. Mr. Whitney's success means party discord, corporation control, the defeat of labor measures, a monopoly of transportation, a dominion of corrupt politicians; public approval of the West End and pipe line scandals, anti-Bryan victory and the breaking up of the Democratic party in the state."

A Graceful Act.

The action of Mr. Fred Symmes in withdrawing from the contest for Republican Representative at the caucus so that no obstruction should be placed in Mr. Lewis Parkhurst's way, will be remembered when Winchester's turn again comes around. Mr. Symmes had many supporters and was a strong candidate.

Double Tracks To Winthrop Square.

The Woburn electric road should be double tracked from Woburn to Winthrop square, Medford, where it joins the Elevated. This would cut down the time between Boston and Winchester considerably, by avoiding the present vexatious waits at tournaments. This matter has been brought up many times, and everyone recognizes the need of double tracks. Immediate steps should be taken to bring about this public improvement.

An Act that Would be Appreciated.

There is an excellent opportunity for the Democrats of this town to show their appreciation of one of our most prominent townsmen by laying to one side party lines this fall and nominating Mr. Lewis Parkhurst as their candidate for Representative. It would be a gracious act to do so, and would give expression to the feeling that prevails throughout the town of the esteem in which this gentleman is held among all classes. The Legislature is a strictly business body in which politics do not enter, and Winchester is concerned only in being well and ably represented, as she will be by Mr. Parkhurst. He is willing to freely give of his valuable time in the interests of the town and State, and thus benefit Republicans and Democrats alike, and all who are acquainted with him know full well that he is no partisan. Let us make his election unanimous, and thus show our appreciation of the sacrifice he is making in working for your interest and everybody's interest in Winchester.

Winchester to be Congratulated.

Winchester Republicans are to be congratulated in their choice of Mr. Lewis Parkhurst for Representative to the lower branch of the Legislature. He is admirably fitted for the position and unless we are greatly mistaken he will be heard from in the coming sessions of the Legislature. He is a painstaking worker who would disdain to shirk his duty, and as a forceful and convincing debater he will, no doubt, have but few equals in that body. His opinions on important matters are as a rule well grounded, judging from what we know of him in his long connection with and active participation in town affairs. That he was willing to accept this position, is only in line with his strong convictions that a citizen should give at least a portion of his time, when called upon, for the public good. He is one of Boston's busiest business men, yet when he was asked to accept this office he consented, only stipulating that there should be no contest in securing his nomination. There was none, all other aspirants withdrawing and he now becomes a candidate by the unanimous action of the Republican voters. It is said he will have the support of practically the entire Democratic voters of this town who recognize in him a man superior to party lines.

A COMMUNICATION.

HIGH PRICES.

Living expenses keep going up, and what are we going to do?

Our first class laundry has raised the price on collars one half a cent or twenty-five per cent increase. We must wear paper collars or no collars except when we go to meetin'.

The price of milk is to be increased. We must use chalk and water when we have company and condensed milk when we don't.

Fruit is so high we must buy less. Although at our house we never throw away any bread, meat or cake, our family expenses are now higher than we can afford.

The prices of living are such that boarders ought to pay 15 to 20 per cent. increase for board.

The Boston and Maine Railroad ought to increase their 25 trip tickets between Winchester and Boston from 96-100 cents, to 10 cents, and other places in proportion. The railroad is poor and growing poorer.

The prices of automobiles ought to be increased 200 per cent as this might help the grocers and provision men.

Wages do not increase in proportion to increase of living expenses. Our economic system is out of joint. There is to be a great tide of unrest which makes for a bad condition of society.

ABOLISHMENT OF GRADE CROSSING.

It looks as though the Railroad had bought off the selectmen and town council in the matter of abolition of the grade crossing, but I happen to know that all the selectmen of this year and last year and the town council are absolutely honest men, and I earnestly refute any idea of graft.

The trouble of delay in this matter is that we sent boys on men's errands.

H. F. J.

WATER METERS.

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

"Observations" in your last issue says that basing water meter rates on the number of fixtures used would not be an equitable way to sell water, because the number of water fixtures in a house does not show how much water is used. Yes, Mr. "Observations," that is true, but a meter will. If for instance a house is paying a yearly rate of $6, give it credit for that much water based on present meter charges, all in excess to be paid for. Why should a person who is now paying $6 a year be charged $12 just because a meter is installed. The gas company does not have such a high fixed charge, neither does the electric light company. A few years ago when the latter company introduced a small capacity charge what a howl there was that went up because of its doing so, and yet the town is outdoing the lighting company in this regard many times over. A fixed charge based on the number of fixtures will return to the town the same revenue it now receives, all excess water will be paid for additional, and the end sought, to prevent waste of water, will be accomplished. What more can be desired, unless it be a substantial increase in the cost of water.

SMALL WATER USER.

TOO CAUTIOUS.

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

There is danger of the gate tenders at the crossing being too cautious in their duties. There is no need of keeping the gates down for five minutes for approaching trains as was the case late last Friday afternoon. Plenty of time is a wise safeguard, but too much time is needless and an inconvenience to electric cars and vehicles, and gets people in the habit of walking around the gates rather than waiting.

TEAMSTER.

ELECTRICITY.

As the nights grow longer there is a stronger reason why the light you use should not be one to burn up the oxygen in the air. The electric light burns up no oxygen: it doesn't do anything to spoil the air and make it unfit for human breathing.

Have you learned
to be light-wise?

If waste is avoided the electric light is not costly. Our Sales Agent can tell you how to avoid waste if you will write him, or call, or telephone "Oxford 3300, Collect?"

HOLLIS STREET THEATRE.

Boston has been selected by Grace George as one of the first cities to see her in her New York and London success "Divorçons." She will appear at the Hollis Street Theatre for two weeks only beginning Monday. This light comedy from the pen of the master French dramatist, Sardou, is unquestionably the best play in which Miss George has ever appeared.

In support of Miss George will be Frank Worthing, who is most pleasantly remembered for his excellent work with many prominent stars. Max Freeman, for years regarded as the most successful stage director of the New York Casino, is another member of the cast. Douglas Gerrard, an English actor who has lately appeared in support of Beerbohm Tree, Lewis Waller and Arthur Bourchier have been engaged. Many other well known stage favorites are also in the cast, including A. H. Stuart, Chas. Stanley, Edward Fielding, Laura Lemmers, Justine Cutting, Ruth Benson, and Angela Ogden.

This engagement will probably be the last appearance in Boston of Miss George for some time, for at the conclusion of her present tour, she returns to London for an indefinite season.

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE.

"The Grand Duchess" is one of the liveliest and merriest of operas that have ever come to us from Europe. It is to be revived at the Castle Square next week, and it is in every way a perfect type of opera bouffe. The drollness of its story, the originality of its music, the gaiety, the dash and the geniality of its dialogue, mingled with a seriousness that adds not a little to their humor, all combine to make a continuously amusing and laughable production.

At the Castle Square Miss Clara Lane and Miss Blanche Edwards will appear in the title role, with Forrest Huff, Harry Davies, Louise Le Baron, Fritz Von Buesing, Jack Henderson, Geo. Shields and W. H. Pringle in other leading parts. "The Beggar Student" will follow "The Grand Duchess" at the Castle Square during the week of October 7th.

POSTMASTER RICHARDSON ON VACATION.

Postmaster J. Winslow Richardson, who has been attending strictly to business during the hot weather this summer is now enjoying a vacation. Orange, Mass., is the first place on his itinerary and other places will be visited before he returns.

OBSERVATIONS.

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

For many years we have had a street cleaning gang constantly employed throughout the year, excepting in winter, and that work has been profitable to the town, but it would seem as if a street repair gang constantly employed would give more profitable results. A stitch in time, so to speak, in stopping the wash and gully of streets will save nine or more every time, and our sidehill streets particularly clearly show it.

The "Great Objector" objects to base ball games when the band concerts are going on upon Manchester Field. Well, that can be easily remedied by having the concerts at night which it has been made clearly evident is the time the people want them.

If it should ever become the fashion to have the candidates of political parties nominated by their opponents, the tickets would be more grotesque even than Our Town's political ads, if such a thing is possible. But presenting a "nasty job" to women and children is about the limit.

There has been most all kinds of automobile contests and stunts, but if a new one is wanted, and judging from experience it would be the most difficult one yet, have a contest to see who can come nearest to different rates of speed. According to testimony in court the autoists would be all at sea in such a contest.

The town of Winchester is a corporation. Supposing it is punished by a money fine, who pays it? How would it be raised? You own ten shares of stock in a railroad corporation, it is punished by a money fine, who pays it? How would it be raised?

A letter in the Boston Herald Monday hit the nail squarely on the head when it said the people of New Hampshire were responsible for the Canaan slaughter. Of course they are and the people of Massachusetts and other states and the people of Winchester and other towns and cities are responsible for all such happenings. But who cares, it is easier to pay for lives than to take the trouble to guard against their loss, so let the slaughter go on. Who cares?

While there was but one contest at the Republican caucus there was muddle enough for a dozen, so it would seem that it was good judgment to adopt the official ballot scheme for the future.

Up to his acceptance of the nomination, but after that he attacks the candidate of the Democratic party for governor, which is a very different proposition.

The practice of stopping trains near the station when another train is there and starting up again without warning, was in vogue for years before, and has been continued since the fatal accident there Sept. 5th to Mrs. Huston. The railroad commission calls special attention to this thing in its annual report dated Jan. 1904 (page 7). It is a bad and dangerous operation, but like much more on railroads and railways, it goes on. The trouble is there is no inspection that inspects.

A middle aged lady deliberately ran across the tracks at Winchester station Wednesday afternoon only a few feet in front of an approaching train and then stood talking to a man for sometime, evidently in no hurry to go anywhere. It was probably nervousness, but if she had tripped and fallen on the track that would not have saved her.

A NEW PARTY NEEDED.

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

Congressman McCall of your town has done the country a patriotic service in his rebuke to Roosevelt at the Jamestown Exposition. He was even more forcible and to the point than Judge Parker.

I am a Democrat myself, but must say that where Republicans like Mr. McCall speak out as he has done it indeed seems as if there was some prospect of the real patriots of both parties coming forth and forming a new party, which will oppose all the centralization, all the paternalism and all the socialism, which from Bryan and Hearst to Roosevelt we now see both parties largely standing for.

Canadian Furs at Canadian Prices.

The high quality of Canadian Furs is well known to Americans. A custom's duty of 35 per cent prevents Americans who do not visit Canada from buying Furs there. Our American house, 167 Tremont Street, Boston, will interest American buyers of Canadian furs. Here we receive our supply of raw skins from our own Canadian houses where they are collected direct from the trappers and admitted to the United States duty free in the undressed state.

All garments for our American business are manufactured by skilled American designers and finishers, and in selling direct to the wearer we eliminate intermediate profits.

Owing to its rigorous climate Canada produces the finest furs known to commerce. Silver Fox, Hudson Bay Sable, Mink, Otter, etc., are seen at their best. In dealing direct with us you secure the advantages that flow from a large and influential business following in our own stores in four Canadian cities, and a feeling of security and reliability that is always present when dealing with a house whose reputation has been merited by a constantly increasing patronage extending over a period of forty-two years, and whose products have been awarded five gold medals in different Canadian Expositions.

In comparing prices remember that quality is of first importance. Canadian Furs average 35 to 50 per cent higher grade than those of more temperate climates, because nature produces the quality; the furriers make only the garments, and the dyer's art can make a southern mink to imitate the Canadian article. To insure reliability and value, buy Canadian Furs from Canadian furriers.

REPUBLICAN CAUCUS.

be no mix-up like that now prevailing, neither would the voters be obliged to sit and look at the blank walls of the hall for a half hour or more while a committee was out selecting a list of delegates. It would prevent surprises, manipulation, dark horses, etc., and would bring out a large vote and more interest. It later the citizens did not like it the vote could be reconsidered, but he was satisfied when once tried, the voters would not be content to go back to the old way.

There was no contest for Representative, Mr. Parkhurst receiving a unanimous vote, the other candidates having withdrawn from the contest. If this gentleman had not been in the field there is no doubt that Mr. Fred Symmes would have been the choice of the caucus, according to the outlook.

There was quite a little interest aroused when it was seen that Congressman McCall's name had been left off the list of delegates to the State Convention. It has been customary in years past to place the congressman at the head of the list, but for some reason it was not done, the statement being made, that he would be abroad when the convention was held. This statement did not satisfy Mr. Henry F. Johnson, who claimed that Mr. McCall had been snubbed and disciplined for his actions as a Republican congressman. This slap in the face, Mr. Johnson said, would not hurt Mr. McCall, and while he did not approve in all cases of the stand taken by him on many important matters affecting the Republican party, especially his hostility to President Roosevelt, of whom he (Mr. Johnson) was a great admirer, yet he considered the dropping of his name from the list of delegates in his home town an outrage, that should not be allowed.

Mr. Johnson was told that the committee had considered Mr. McCall, but when it was learned that he would be abroad when the convention was being held, it was decided not to present his name.

Mr. Mahlon Taplin was not entirely satisfied with this statement, and he said he believed it was the intention of the committee to slight and discredit Mr. McCall for his actions as a Republican Congressman.

He also said that it had always been customary to elect him as the head of the State delegation.

Mr. Fred Joy of the committee denied that there had been any such custom, as often before Mr. McCall's name had been left off the list and nothing was thought about it. Both Mr. Joy and Mr. Herbert Underwood stated emphatically that there was no intention on the part of the committee to discredit Mr. McCall, and that the sole reason for not bringing in his name was the fact that he was to go abroad.

Without any effort to place Mr. McCall's name on the list the matter was allowed to rest, but nevertheless there was a prevailing opinion that his name had been dropped as a rebuke to his present course.

THE PROCEEDINGS.

It was 7:30 when George Chandler Coit, chairman of the Republican Town Committee, called the caucus to order and read the call. He was then nominated for permanent chairman, but he declined to serve, whereupon Mr. Fred V. Wooster was chosen. Mr. John L. Ayer filled the position of secretary. On motion, the chairman appointed Messrs. George C. Coit, Fred Joy, Herbert Underwood, F. L. Ripley, Allen Chamberlain a committee to bring in a list of delegates to the several conventions. The committee reported the following list which was elected:

COUNTY AND DISTRICT ATTORNEY DELEGATES.

As is stated above there were three tickets in the field for delegates to the district attorney convention, two of the lists being on printed ballots and the third brought in by the committee and which the voters wrote on the large blank ballots distributed in the hall. Two of the lists contained the names of candidates favorable to John J. Higgins of Somerville and the other bore the names of supporters of Melvin M. Johnson.

The Higgins printed ballot had the names of John L. Ayer, Frank E. Barnard, Marshall H. Dutch, Fred Joy, Daniel W. Pratt, Roland W. Sherman.

The committee list for Mr. Higgins was: Herbert Underwood, Frank E. Barnard, Fred Joy, Roland W. Sherman, Emmons Hatch, Allen Chamberlain.

The printed Johnson ballot—George L. Huntress, Addison R. Pike, Daniel B. Badger, William M. Belcher, Theo. P. Wilson, Charles H. Eastwick.

The result of the balloting was three for Johnson and one (Mr. Barnard) for Higgins, as follows:

George L. Huntress
William M. Belcher
Theo. P. Wilson
Frank E. Barnard
*William B. French
*Ralph E. Joslin

*The last two names were added by the delegation, as there was a tie vote among four candidates at the caucus.

All of the delegates are favorable to Mr. Johnson, excepting Mr. Barnard who will probably cast his first vote in the convention for Mr. Higgins, after which he will line up with his colleagues, if his candidate should have no chance.

At a meeting of the four delegates held at the office of George L. Huntress, Esq., Wednesday afternoon to fill the two vacancies in the District Attorney delegation, Mr. Huntress was elected chairman and Mr. Frank E. Barnard secretary. The delegates after going over the entire matter, decided not to elect men who were known to have a preference for any particular candidate for District Attorney, therefore the caucus candidates were ignored, and William B. French and Ralph E. Joslin, who had not expressed themselves as being in favor of any particular man, were elected to the vacancies. The delegates may present the name of Ralph E. Joslin, Esq., for district attorney, should the opportune time arrive, or in case of a dead lock, as they do not consider that they are pledged to any particular candidate.

Often The Kidneys Are Weakened by Over-Work.

Unhealthy Kidneys Make Impure Blood. It used to be considered that only urinary and bladder troubles were to be traced to the kidneys, but now modern science proves that nearly all diseases have their beginning in the disorder of these most important organs.

The kidneys filter and purify the blood—that is their work.

Therefore, when your kidneys are weak or out of order, you can understand how quickly your entire body is affected and how every organ seems to fail to do its duty.

If you are sick or "feel badly," begin taking the great kidney remedy, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, because as soon as your kidneys are well they will help all the other organs to health. A trial will convince anyone.

If you are sick you can make no mistake by first doctoring your kidneys. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy, is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases, and is sold on its merits by all druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles. You may have a sample bottle of Swamp-Root by mail free, also a pamphlet telling you how to find out if you have kidney or bladder trouble. Mention this advertisement when writing to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

Chief's Ruse

By HOWARD FIELDING.

Copyright, 1907, by C. W. Hooker.

WHEN I was chief of police of the city of Bradbury I had a somewhat remarkable case that began with a very peculiar incident. A lawyer named Eugene Pollard called me up by telephone at headquarters about 11 o'clock one evening and told me rather excitedly that he had just been in communication with Frederic Clinton and that in the midst of the conversation he had heard a sound as of a blow and another as of a heavy fall. Failing to get further speech with Mr. Clinton, he had appealed to "central," who had tried in vain to help him and had said that the receiver of Mr. Clinton's telephone must be off the hook so that the bell would not ring.

I told Mr. Pollard that I would meet him in five minutes at the Clinton residence. My light wagon was at the door of the station house, and I immediately jumped aboard, accompanied by a special officer named Devlin. As we came alongside the Clinton house, which is on the corner of our best residence street and is surrounded by lawns and gardens which take up the full depth of the block, I thought I saw a moving figure amid the shrubbery. I sent Devlin to investigate.

I was about to ring the bell when the front door was suddenly but softly opened and Robert Clinton, nephew of Frederic, emerged in haste, mingled with caution. He was greatly startled at the sight of me, but my explanation was interrupted by the appearance of Pollard, who came panting up the walk. Robert, however, had made out that I thought something was wrong with his uncle, and he turned and ran into the house. We followed to the only lighted room that I had observed in any part of the structure.

There was a roll top desk open, with an end against the farther wall. Close against the front of the desk stood a chair, behind which lay the body of Frederic Clinton, face downward. There was a dreadful wound on the back of the head, but the man's soul still lingered, and when I turned him over and looked into his face there was a gleam of intelligence in his eyes.

"Robert!" he uttered in a tone of much affection, and the next instant he was gone.

During this scene I had been considerably impressed by the bearing of Robert Clinton. I can hardly say why. "You and I must begin to look into this affair," said I. "Of course the method of the crime is clear enough. That golf club is the weapon, and I suppose there is no doubt that the murderer stepped out from behind that curtain across the doorway into the passage. Where does that passage lead?"

Instead of answering my question Clinton pressed his hand to his forehead and exhaled a shuddering groan. "I could have prevented this," he said.

"What do you mean?" I demanded. "I saw somebody there," he answered. "I came home a few minutes before 11. Just as I was at the gate I saw the lights turned up in this room, but the curtains were drawn. I came slowly up the walk and paused on the veranda, debating whether I should go in and speak to my uncle. Finally I decided to do so. I knocked at his door. After a very brief interval he said, 'Come in.' I entered, and the draft caused that curtain to swing into the passage there at the back of the room. I thought I saw it press against the figure of some one standing behind it.

BEHIND THE CHAIR LAY THE BODY OF FREDERIC CLINTON

"And you didn't tell your uncle?"

"No; I thought he knew. Practically the same thing had happened before. I'll tell you all about it. I thought it was Mr. Pollard behind the curtain. My uncle had some dealings with him and didn't wish me to know, so one evening when Pollard was here and I knocked my uncle asked him to step into the passage."

"How did you find out about it?"

"I asked Pollard, and he told me."

"Did he tell you what his business was with your uncle?"

"No, but I found out."

"What was it?"

"I can't tell you."

"Do you realize," said I, "that your evidence is not very nice for Mr. Pollard?"

"But—but Pollard wasn't here!" he gasped. "We know where he was."

"We know where he says he was."

"But surely the girl—central—will remember what happened."

"Perhaps she will, and yet—"

I was interrupted by the sudden entrance of the officer whom I had sent to search the grounds. A small corner of my mind had been wondering for some time what had become of my man, but I had not dreamed that he would appear with a prisoner, far less that that prisoner would be a woman.

"Robert!" she cried. "How dreadful!"

He put his arm around her.

"Where did you get her?" I asked Devlin in a guarded tone.

"She was outside there. I chased her clear to Willow street. Pretty near home she was when I caught her."

"You know who she is, then?"

"Sure. She's Celia Burton, the girl that's made the trouble between Bob Clinton and his uncle."

I asked him what Miss Burton had said in explanation of her presence, and Devlin answered that she told him that she had come to see Clinton. "He was to have met her this evening, and he didn't," said Devlin, "and along about 11 o'clock she got to wondering why, so she came over and waited under his window, and he looked out and said he'd be with her in a minute."

This extremely unconventional behavior was quite characteristic of Miss Burton. She was a clerk in a candy store and had been "written up" in the local papers as the prettiest girl in town. Such fame as that must necessarily have prejudiced her in the eyes of a rigid aristocrat like Frederic Clinton. Indeed, it was for a love affair with a girl of very similar antecedents and condition that Clinton had disinherited and banished his only son.

Miss Burton repeated to me the story she had told Devlin, and she made no excuses.

"I wanted to see him," she said, as if that were quite sufficient.

On his part, Robert said that he had spent the evening in Greensford, about twenty miles from Bradbury, and had returned by the last train, but he refused to tell me what errand had called him there. Pollard would not disclose the nature of his business with Mr. Clinton, pleading professional privilege.

On the morrow, however, there came a startling revelation. The cashier of the First National bank told me that Pollard had obtained during the last few days over $80,000 in cash from Mr. Clinton's account and had also visited the safe deposit vaults with Mr. Clinton, presumably to get securities.

This disclosure seemed to justify me in questioning Pollard more sharply. To my surprise, he threw aside his reticence completely.

"My business with Mr. Clinton," he said, "has related to a settlement with his son."

"I thought he was dead," said I.

"He is not dead," replied the lawyer. "His father has seen him several times of late. Mr. Clinton desired to keep this matter from the knowledge of the nephew, Robert, and therefore the son, Edward Clinton, has been living in Greensford."

"Greensford?" said I. "Did Robert go to see him last evening?"

"He did. They were together up to the time that Robert took the last train home."

"Then Edward, the son, has an alibi in Robert's testimony."

"He has," replied the lawyer. "I have talked with Robert today about it."

"Did Robert fear that the son would be restored to favor and he himself cast aside?"

"I think so."

"I have always understood that Mr. Clinton had made Robert his sole heir by will."

"That was true, but it is not true now," answered Pollard. "There is no will. Mr. Clinton destroyed it three days ago, intending to draw another. The son is the natural heir. Robert gets nothing, but," he added significantly, "Robert does not yet know of this. Neither does Celia Burton."

"Do you mean to intimate that one of them killed him?"

"Who else could it have been?" said he. "Who had a motive?"

"But Edward's safety depends on Robert's evidence."

"Which I have induced him to put in the form of an affidavit," said the lawyer grimly.

"You don't believe that Robert killed him," said I, "yet this is not a woman's crime."

"Miss Burton," I resumed, "was a special providence in this case. Without her I don't know what we should have done. You see, the point is right here: Your father undoubtedly called up Lawyer Pollard by telephone. The girl in the central office settles that, and she says that she rang Pollard's telephone fully five minutes, or not ten, before she got any answer. Now, your father's telephone was beside his desk, so that he could use it sitting down, but he was standing—bending over—when he was struck. The position of the chair, pushed well under the desk, and the nature of the wound show these things. Do you think a man of his age would have stood in that position five or ten minutes with a chair right handy? Do you think the murderer would have waited so long?"

"Well—but I don't quite see—"

"I tell you, sir, your father was struck down as soon as he called Pollard's number. The girl in the central office did not hear his voice again. She heard only Pollard's. Very well, Pollard lives in a lodging house. The lodger in the room over him was awake at 11 o'clock that night and did not hear Pollard's telephone bell. Why not? That lodger often had heard it, but not that night, though the house was still. Why not? I ask you again. Because the bell was muffled. Pollard muffled it before he went to your father's house that night. He knew that Mr. Clinton was going to call him up. It had been arranged that he should do so. But Pollard went over there first, before Mr. Clinton got home. He got in by a back window and secreted himself in that curtained passage, holding one of your cousin Robert's golf clubs in his hand. Your father entered and turned up the lights and went straight to the telephone. Pollard crept out of the passage, crouching behind the desk. He waited till the number had been called, and then he struck and struck again. A moment later he had fled through that passage and out of the house and through the garden and so home. The muffled bell was ringing. He answered the call. A beautiful alibi established, and, to make it neater, he called me up and told his excellent story of overhearing the tragedy in your father's home."

"But this is conjecture," said Clinton. "You can't know."

"That's where my pretty little special providence comes in," said I. "The fair lady of our story was in your father's garden, and she saw the red handed murderer flee through the shadows."

"And now," I continued, "I've had Pollard from the first, through the motive was a little obscure. You must furnish that. How much money has Pollard paid you on your father's order?"

He named the sum, and it was right so far as I knew, but I couldn't afford to say so.

"Just about half," said I. "He's stuck you $100,000. I know that, but I can't prove it, your father being dead. However, Pollard will undoubtedly confess."

And at this I touched an electric button and one of my men entered.

"Beg pardon, sir," said he. "We've got him, and he's all broken down. He'll tell you everything he knows."

"Wait for me here," said I and left the room.

Edward Clinton waited about half a minute, and then he climbed out of a window that I had left conspicuously open. This, of course, was good proof that my theory was right. We let him get away a mile or more and then brought him back. I had him put into the worst cell we've got, and I read to him through the bars a bogus confession of Pollard's wherein it was related that the plot to kill Frederic Clinton had been devised by his son, who had promised to share the fortune which he would inherit with Pollard as payment for the murder and the destruction of the will.

Edward's nerves couldn't stand that. He confessed that he had agreed to share the fortune with Pollard, but he declared that from first to last every step of the plot had been devised by the lawyer, in whose hands he had been as so much putty

BACKACHE AND DESPONDENCY

Are both symptoms of organic derangement, and nature's warning to women of a trouble which will sooner or later declare itself.

How often do we hear women say, "It seems as though my back would break." Yet they continue to drag along and suffer with aches in the small of the back, pain low down in the side, dragging sensations, nervousness and no ambition.

They do not realize that the back is the main-spring of woman's organism, and quickly indicates by aching a diseased condition of the feminine organs or kidneys, and that aches and pains will continue until the cause is removed.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

made from native roots and herbs has been for many years the most successful remedy in such cases. No other medicine has such a record of cures of feminine ills.

Miss Lena Nagel, of 117 Morgan St., Buffalo, N. Y., writes:—"I was completely worn out on the verge of nervous prostration. My back ached all the time. I had dreadful periods of pain, was subject to fits of crying and extreme nervousness, and was always weak and tired. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound completely cured me."

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cures Female Complaints, such as Backache, Falling and Displacements, and all Organic Diseases. Dissolves and expels Tumors at an early stage. It strengthens and tones the Stomach. Cures Headache and Indigestion and invigorates the whole feminine system.

Mrs. Pinkham's Standing Invitation to Women

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to write Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free.

ITEMS NOT CHARGED

Strange Omissions In the Chicago Lighting Plant Report.

It Places the Annual Total Cost Per Lamp at $52.39—No Account Taken, However, of Lost Taxes, Water, Depreciation, Rent or of Half a Dozen Other Important Elements of Expense—Biggest M. O. Plant in the Country—Its Service as Poor as Its Report is Misleading.

The largest municipal electric light plant in the United States is that operated by the city of Chicago. Naturally students of municipal ownership turn to its reports as one of the principal sources of information on the subject. Unfortunately, however, these reports have been so worded as to give the false impression that the municipal lights cost the city much less than if they were supplied by contract with a private company.

Newspapers all over the country have announced that Chicago's street lights during 1906 cost only $52.39 per lamp, and they are not to be blamed for making this assertion, for twice on page 12 of the report for that year $52.39 is given as the "total cost per lamp." It is true that elsewhere in the report this statement is modified by the admission that this "cost" doesn't include interest, lost taxes, water, depreciation, rent of offices and poles, judgments against the city on account of accidents, a proportion of the cost of the offices of the comptroller, auditor, business agent and other branches of the city government, etc., but the edge is taken off this admission by the further statement that "the cost of $52.39 includes all expenses actually borne by the city," a statement, by the way, which is not even technically true.

The report admits that "there is some justice in the contention" that these items should be charged against the lighting cost, but it makes this admission only after years of refusal to do so, and does so now because of an investigation into the workings of the plant that has recently been made, and the findings of which will soon be published.

Six years ago the Reform club of New York employed a well known firm of accountants to find out what Chicago's lights were really costing. At that time the city claimed a cost of $62.00, but the accountants reported the real cost as $90.88 and made no allowance for damages, street repairs, rent of offices and poles or the lighting department's share of the expense for auditing, purchasing and legal expenses and a very low allowance for depreciation. But the city authorities totally ignored the findings of this disinterested and expert investigation.

The unfairness of the report is further shown by its comparison of the per capita cost of lighting Chicago and five other cities that do not operate municipal lighting plants. In the first place, the street lighting of Chicago is notoriously inadequate, and in the second place, while the rates in the other cities cover the entire cost of lighting, in Chicago they include only a fraction of the cost.

Perhaps the most misleading feature of the report is its comparison of the alleged "cost" of the municipal lights with the rates charged by the private company with which the city contracts for 746 of its lamps. These are in the outskirts of the city, where the cost of maintaining them is very high on account of their long distance from the generating station and their remoteness from each other. That is why the city contracts for them. Yet the report assumes that the company would charge just as high a rate if it had the contract for all the lights. This assumption is not only manifestly absurd, but is directly contrary to the facts, as one of the companies offered a reduction of more than one-quarter of its contract price if it were given the entire lighting contract.

In making comparisons of the quality of the service is an important consideration, and the service of the Chicago city plant is bad. It cheats the public both by the frequency of outages (lamps going out and staying out the rest of the night) and by stealing its own current—i. e., reducing the amperage below the point at which the current keeps the lamps up to their rated candlepower. In many cases observers have noted that, especially after midnight, the lamps give only a dull glow at the carbon points and are of practically no value as lights. This is done to reduce coal consumption and of course makes a great difference in the cost of operation. It would not be tolerated from a private company, which would also be penalized for outages. These things are quite naturally not mentioned in the report.

To sum up, the report gives the impression to the casual reader that the municipal plant is giving good service at a low cost, while the facts are that its service is poor and that the cost is much higher than if the lights were supplied by a company.

Not Yet For Sioux City.

The construction of a municipal electric light plant has been under consideration at Sioux City, Ia. The commission appointed to investigate the subject has, however, reported adversely, and the council will advertise for bids to light the city after the expiration of the present contract.

Tax Rate Drops.

The Cleveland Leader attributes to the sale of its municipal electric light plant the fact that the tax rate of Lakewood, O., will be about $2.75 this year as against $3.50 in 1906.

CURIOUS CAIRO.

The Water Sellers, Coffee Makers and Fakirs of the Streets.

The most numerous and also the most interesting of street figures in Cairo are the water sellers, some of whom go about with hideous looking goatskins filled with Nile water. Others carry more inviting looking, reddish clay jars, decorated with brass bands, and these jars often have a piece of ice at their mouth and a sprig of mint protruding on either side of ice. The carrier with the goatskin calls out his mission, but the other with the jar carries in his left hand two brass saucers, which he clicks together with a sort of musical jingle. The water in either case is not filtered, but is taken straight from the Nile, and the purchasers are all natives, who pay a fraction of a penny for all they are able to drink.

The street sellers of coffee are everywhere, squatting about on the pavements in the most unexpected places. Their outfits comprise merely a kettle of charcoal, a small copper coffee cup with a long handle, two or three small bowls of china and a supply of coffee and sugar. It takes one only a few minutes to brew a fresh cup, and as Turkish coffee goes that brewed by the street seller is not really bad.

The ever present conjurer is worth stopping to watch, although the tricks are in most part generally on the order of conjurers' tricks in other countries. The most interesting part of their paraphernalia is their sign, which is a small live rabbit. The moment the performance begins the little animal rolls over, to all appearances dead, but when some ten minutes later all of the tricks have been done, some of which are admittedly more or less puzzling, up jumps the little rabbit as chipper and gay as ever. It is claimed that the ego of the rabbit leaves the body for the express purpose of assisting the conjurer, and one for a moment is inclined to give credence to this while watching the performance and after having seen the rabbit go into its trance.—Harriet Quimby in Leslie's Weekly.

ORIGINAL GOTHAM.

The Scheme by Which Its Inhabitants Fooled King John.

This name Gotham, was first applied to the city of Manhattan in a book of humorous sketches called "Salmagundi," written about 1807 by Washington Irving in collaboration with his brother Peter and the poet Paulding.

It was evidently intended to suggest that the people of New York made undue pretensions to wisdom, and that there were both satire and wit in the suggestion is shown by the story of the original Gothamites. Gotham was a parish in Nottinghamshire, England. The old story tells how King John wished to pass through the parish, but the people there, fancying that the passage of the king over a route made it a public road, decided to prevent the transit by all pretending to be crazy. Therefore when the king and his party arrived they found every one of the inhabitants employed in some peculiarly foolish task. Thus a group were joining hands around a thorn bush to keep a cuckoo from getting away, some were trying to drown an eel, others dipping water with a sieve, and so on. When the king saw these performances, he swore at the people for a pack of idiots and, turning, departed with all his retinue, says the House-keeper. The Gothamites were delighted with the success of their scheme for turning aside the king, regarding it as superlatively clever.

After this Gotham came to have the reputation of being a sort of headquarters for conceited fools. In the time of Henry VIII. a book entitled "The Merry Tales of the Mad Men of Gotham" was published. Among these was the story of the "Three Wise Men of Gotham," one of whose exploits was to go to sea in a bowl.

"A Tempest in a Teapot."

The expression "a tempest in a teapot" is one of great antiquity. Its first historic appearance is in the "De Legibus" of Cicero, who quotes it as a common saying. "Gratidius raised a tempest in a ladle, as the saying is." The French form, "une tempeste dans une verre d'eau" (a tempest in a glass of water), was first applied to the disturbances in the Geneva republic near the end of the seventeenth century. In England the word "teapot" was substituted for the sake of alliteration. It is said to have been popularized by Lord North, who employed it to characterize the outbreak of the American colonists against the tax on tea.—Boston Post.

His Slim Chance.

"You can answer me one more question perhaps, Miss Bute," said Archie, mortified at her refusal. "Is there any other man?"

"There is every other man, sir," she responded, with flashing eyes. "You would be absolutely the last, Mr. Feathertop."

As there appeared to be no further business before the house, Archie hastily adjourned without form.—Chicago Tribune.

Her Bread.

"Mean thing!" exclaimed Mrs. New-pow. "It's just brutal of you to call it this stuff." You said you'd be glad to bake my own bread."

"Yes, dear!" replied the great brute, "but I don't say I wanted you to bake mine."—Philadelphia Press.

In view of the dry weather during the past season, and the high prices of grain, it is not to be wondered at that the price of milk should be advanced to 8 cents per quart, but it is fortunate that the rise in price was no more. It soon will become a question with the housekeeper of deep importance as to what quantity she shall limit her expenditure to and preserve the health of her family and children. The strong efforts now being made by health authorities to keep the handling of milk in the purest condition is making its effect felt on the increased prices.

Can't the STAR's correspondent, "Small Water User," see that the use of meters for the distribution of public water would be unfair and greatly to the disadvantage of poor consumers? Meters are good and profitable for rich householders, but a burden to the poor which they should not be compelled to bear.—[Woburn Journal.]

A judge in Lynn believes that a man should be fined according to his financial standing, and is not ashamed to say so. He made this declaration last week when he fined a supposedly rich man $500, or just five times more than he did in several cases identically the same and where the law breakers were men of moderate means. According to this judge, there is certainly a law for the rich and another for the poor, but it was hardly to be supposed that this would be proclaimed from the bench, although it has been so stated in the yellow press and among demagogues for many years.
